recited that the mortgage was with possession and for a period of 10 years in consideration of a sum of Rs. 44,233. On the same day both parties to the mortgage executed a deed of lease. Under the terms of these deeds the mortgagor was to retain cultivation paying Rs. 1,224 annually to the mortgagee as "munafa", the mortgagee in case of default being entitled to take possession from the mortgagor and to recover the whole of the produce of the land. On the 4th of October 1922 the mortgagee lodged in a Revenue Court a suit to eject the mortgagor as his tenant and to recover a sum of Rs. 16,224 as the value of the two harvests succeeding the date of the mortgagor's alleged default in payment. The suit was resisted by the defendant on various grounds. One was that the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction to hear the case, and another was that certain Hundis executed by the defendant were payments towards the sum due annually to the mortgagee. The Revenue Court held that the suit was cognizable by a Revenue Court, and passed a decree for Rs. 2,448 representing two years of the lease-money and also for ejectment of the defendant. Both sides lodged appeals in the Court of a Collector. The Collector considered that the suit was one triable exclusively by a Civil Court, and referred the case to this Court under section 100 (b) of the Tenancy Act. In coming to the conclusion that the suit was one triable by a Civil Court, the Collector quoted a judgment of this Court dated the 31st of October 1913 in the case Sewa Singh v. Sanahqul.

The question which is raised is of considerable importance, as there appears to be a prevalent doubt in this Province on the question of jurisdiction in suits of this nature. We are only here concerned with two main types of agricultural mortgage, (1) without possession by the mortgagee, (2) with possession by the mortgagee. The second of these types is ordinarily what is defined in the Transfer of Property Act and the Punjab Land Alienation Act as a "usufructuary mortgage", though the definitions in question cover three sub-classes of usufructuary mortgage. For the purpose of this reference, the only class with which I am concerned is that where the profits of land are appropriated by the mortgagee in lieu of interest only. It may be remarked, however, that in these cases there is often an absence of any direct or expressed relation between the value of such profits and the interest which a mortgagee would otherwise expect upon his loan. If a mortgage were contracted between the parties unequivocally in form (1), (a mortgage without possession), the mortgagee would necessarily be driven to a Civil Court to recover interest, or to enforce a lien by way of possession. But these two main kinds of agricultural mortgage tend, for obvious reasons, to assume, in actual practice, an identical form. Largely in order to protect the mortgagee from being driven to sue for possession in a Civil Court, it is not unusual for the parties, while retaining the status quo of the mortgagor as actual occupier, to declare in a mortgage-deed that the mortgagee has assumed proprietary possession and either in the same deed or in a separate document, that the mortgagor now holds under him as lessee or tenant paying what is described as rent, but what may also be regarded as interest on the loan. If there is a default under the terms of the mortgage the mortgagee has, by this system, the advantage of being able to describe himself as landlord and the mortgagor as holding under him as a tenant. He may then apply to a Revenue Officer under the provisions of the Land Tenancy Act to eject the said tenant or, if the application is refused, (as it probably would be, in the event of a dispute upon the conditions of the tenancy), the mortgagee can at least go to a Revenue Court with a simple suit for ejectment. By this means he escapes a heavy Court-fee upon a Civil suit for possession. In cases of this nature we find that the mortgagor almost invariably sets up the defence that the Revenue Court has no jurisdiction, pleading that the mortgagee, by taking the capacity of landlord versus tenant has begged the question at issue, that he is not in actual possession as landlord, and that he must go to a Civil Court not as landlord, but as mortgagee to claim possession.

The question of jurisdiction in these cases has never been free from difficulty. In the first place, it has long been a general principle of Law that jurisdiction is governed by the allegations made in the plaint and not by the defence set up. For this view there are innumerable precedents. At the same time, the peculiar conditions of the Tenancy Law have compelled certain modifications in this extreme view. For instance, it was laid down in the well known ruling of the Punjab Chief Court in the case of Buta Shah v. Kalu (1) that when there is a written instrument on which the claim is based, or to which the plaint refers, the instrument will have to be construed to discover the express intention of the parties as to their consequent mutual position in respect of the possession of the mortgaged land. It was further laid down in that judgment that the Court must consider not only the formal plaint, but the description of the nature of the suit given by the plaintiff in his examination. There is also authority for the view that the ratio decidendi as to whether a mortgagee is or is not an actual landlord is to be found in the intention of the parties. This was the view taken in the ruling quoted above, and it is also that taken by my learned predecessor, Mr. Barton, in his unpublished ruling in the case of Sewa Singh v. Sana'gul, Civil Reference No. 4 of 1913. Now, it is clear that many cases arise in which the intention of the parties can only be ascertained if the Court travels beyond the allegations made in the plaint, the deeds and the plaintiff's initial deposition. Further, the analogy of the proviso to section 77 of the Tenancy Act introduced by Act III of 1912 may be adduced as an argument to support the view that jurisdiction can be affected by a question arising for the first time from the Defendant's pleadings. That proviso is mandatory and has the effect of transferring to a Revenue Court exclusive jurisdiction to decide a case which, nevertheless, so far as the allegations of the plaintiff alone are concerned, may have been rightly instituted in a Civil Court. This analogy, however, hardly holds good. It was clearly the object of the Legislature simply to get over the expense and delay entailed upon the public by the result of a series of rulings of the Punjab Chief Court laying down that the plea of a defendant must be ignored, and that a Civil Court must decide the suit as instituted, and that the defendant had, nevertheless, a separate relief in a Revenue Court if the finding was against him. Whether or not it would have been simpler to have given a Civil Court power to refer an issue to a Revenue Court on the lines of section 98 of the Land Tenancy Act, is not a fit subject for discussion here. It is sufficient to say that, as the law now stands, a Civil Court has no such power. There is, therefore, no complete parallel between the procedure governing the two classes of Courts. A plea set up in a Civil Court may, under the proviso to section 77, override the general principle that jurisdiction is determined solely by the allegations made in the plaint, and may cause the Civil Court to lose jurisdiction by reason of a contention set up by the defendant. But when a plea of a civil nature is set up in a Revenue Court, the latter does not lose jurisdiction. It has, instead, a power under section 98 of the Tenancy Act to refer a party to a Civil Court and to base its decision of the suit on the Civil Court's finding on a particular issue. The analogy referred to above, therefore, is no real argument for overriding the general principle that the jurisdiction of a Revenue Court (unlike that of a Civil Court in this respect) is not ousted by a pleading raised in defence. I do not think indeed that the ruling of Mr. Barton quoted above is really an authority for the view that the jurisdiction of a Revenue Court is ousted by its coming to a finding that the intention of the parties was otherwise than that disclosed by the plaint, the deeds executed between the parties, and the deposition of the plain iff. It dealt with a case where there was a great deal to show from the terms of the deed of mortgage and the deed of lease that "the two transactions had a single aim, viz. to ensure the due payment of interest and of the mortgage-debt, and that it was not intended that the mortgagee should take the place of landlord of the mortgagor, the lease being merely a device to recover interest in the easiest possible way." But if the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court to entertain and dispose of the case is to be ousted altogether, it must be because the allegations, as elucidated by the deeds and statement of the plaintiff, show in themselves that the plaintiff has not the position of a landlord. If a Court has to go beyond this to ascertain the real position of the parties, it does not lose its jurisdiction. It may exercise the option of referring a party to a civil suit on a particular issue under section 98 of the Land Tenancy Act, or it may have to dismiss the suit on the ground that the relationship of landlord and tenant has not been proved. In the latter case it is still open to the plaintiff to seek his relief to enforce the mortgage in a Civil Court.

The plaintiff cannot claim the same protection from delay and expense as has been given to a defendant by the proviso to section 77 of the Tenancy Act. He has only himself to thank if, by choosing the wrong forum and lodging a suit for simple ejectment, he fails to establish his position as landlord and has to start litigation afresh. In following, as in the present case, Mr. Barton's ruling of 1913, Courts have, I think, confused the question of jurisdiction with that of a finding which would operate as res judicata. A Revenue Court, in dismissing a suit on the ground that the mortgagee has not the position of a landlord, does not, in any way, bar the plaintiff from suing in a Civil Court on his mortgage. The finding of the Revenue Court on this issue does not constitute a res judicata as against the Civil Court. The Punjab rulings, Parman v. Lhanu (2) and Kharku v. Dirth (3) show this point very clearly. They deal with cases where a tenant in his capacity of tenant had failed in a Revenue Court to establish occupancy rights, but where, nevertheless, after being dispossessed and ceasing to be a tenant, he was able to sue for the same occupancy rights in a Civil Court.

It appears to me that in all these cases where a Revenue Court is confronted with a suit by a mortgagee who seeks to eject his mortgagor in the capacity of his tenant, it is for the Court to see from the plaint, the deed and plaintiff's own explanation of his case whether he is actually a landlord, i.e., whether the mortgagor is actually holding under him as tenant, and to proceed with the case if it considers that this is prima facie established, but to decline jurisdiction if it is not. If it has not declined jurisdiction on these grounds, and if the defendant's pleas raise an issue which it is necessary to determine for the decision of the whole suit and which strikes at the question of the status of landlord and tenant, the Revenue Court can always find on that issue itself and dismiss the suit if the defendant succeeds. This is exactly the view taken in Allah Din v. Allah Baksh (4) one of the most recent Punjab rulings on the question.

It may be objected, however, with some reason that the above view does not lay down a sufficiently clear guide for Courts in this Province to determine the question of jurisdiction. It may be added, therefore, that where there is not only a deed describing a mortgage as one with possession, but also a practically simultaneous deed of lease by which the mortgagor retains possession, plying what is described in the deed as rent to the plaintiff, there is always a presumption that the mortgagee is entitled to assume the capacity of landlord. As against this view a ruling published as Shahdi Beg v. Ahmed Khan (5) has been quoted. The head-note to that ruling is, in the Punjab Weekly Reporter, to the following effect:—"The mere fact that the land is mortgaged with possession and the mortgagor holds it under the mortgagee does not create the relationship of landlord and tenant". It appears to me, however, that this head-note is most misleading. There is nothing really in the judgment to support such an extreme view which is entirely in conflict with other rulings of the same Court. The judgment in question, which is an extremely short one, disallows the contention that a suit was cognizable by a Revenue Court mainly on the ground that the plea set up was a belated one and was an attempt to escape from proved liability on a technical point not raised at any earlier stage. The presumption which I have referred to above, may be rebutted in two ways, (1) by the very nature of the deed and the plaintiff's explanation of it, and (2) by the pleadings and evidence of the defendant. In the first case it is for the Revenue Court to decline jurisdiction, and in the second to continue the hearing and itself to find upon the pleas. In the second case, if the finding goes against the plaintiff, he has still his remedy in a Civil Court and, as I have said above, he has only himself to thank if litigation is thereby protracted.

It remains to apply the above principles to the present case. It appears to me that the presumption referred to above is, in this case, particularly clear. The parties would seem to have taken particular precautions to show that the mortgagee should actually be recognized as landlord and the mortgagor as a tenant holding under him. I do not think that the word "munafa" as opposed to such a word as "malikana" can be insisted upon as showing that the actual sum to be paid by the defendant was interest and not rent. We have contemporaneous deeds of mortgage and lease. I am not concerned with the defendant's pleadings. The suit for ejectment falls under Section 77 (3) (e) of the Land Tenancy Act, and the suit to recover the value of produce under sub clause (i) of the same. The suit was, therefore, rightly decided in the Court of an Assistant Collector of the 1st grade, and the appeal lies to the Collector. I, therefore, return the appeals to the Court of the Collector of Charsadda, holding that the suit is a revenue suit, and that appeals from the decree were rightly instituted in that Court.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 59 (c)—Mortgage by conditional sale—Transfer—Agreement to reconvey—Construction of deeds.

Plaintiff executed a deed of transfer of certain land in favour of the defendant. On the same date the latter executed a document called ikrarnama taidi, which provided that, on repayment being made by the seller at a time when the land was free from crops, the buyer would reconvey the property to the seller. It was further provided that in the event of the buyer refusing to transfer the property to the seller the latter may deposit the money in Court:

Held, that the deed of transfer and the agreement taken together constituted a mortgage by conditional sale within the meaning of section 59 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act.

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge Fyzabad, dated the 14th October 1922.

Messrs. Niamatullah and Ali Zaheer, for the Appellants.

Mr M. Wasim, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is the defendants' appeal in a suit for redemption of a mortgage

brought by the plaintiff-respondent Bharat Bihari. The suit has succeeded in both the Courts. On the 1st November 1894, the plaintiff-respondent and his deceased brother, Madan Bihari, executed a deed of transfer in favour of the predecessor in interest of the defendants to the present suit in consideration of a sum of Rs. 600. On the same date the transferee executed a document bearing the name igarnama taidi in relation to the deed of transfer mentioned above. The plaintiff's case is that the two documents taken together constitute a transaction of a mortgage by conditional sale. The defence to this case is, that the transaction is one of an out and out sale with an agreement to resell, and that the said agreement is not binding on the defendants who are transferees for valuable consideration from the original transferee. Both the Courts below have held that, the two documents evidence a mortgage by conditional sale and have given a decree for redemption to the plaintiff as already mentioned. That finding is impugned in appeal before me.

I have come to the conclusion that the finding and the decree of the Courts below should be maintained. There is no doubt that the first deed established an out and out sale of the property mentioned therein but that is the first element of a mortgage by conditional sale also as would appear from the definition given in sub-section (c) of section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). That definition may be quoted here :—

“Where the mortgagor ostensibly sells the mortgaged property

“On condition that on default of payment of the mortgage-money on a certain date the sale shall become absolute, or

“On condition that on such payment being made the sale shall become void, or

“On condition that on such payment being made the buyer shall transfer the property to the seller, the transaction is called a mortgage by conditional sale and the mortgagee a mortgagee by conditional sale.”

The deed of agreement is merely an embodiment of the condition, that on repayment being made the buyer shall transfer the property to the seller and this is the second element of a mortgage by conditional sale. The date of repayment is mentioned in the agreement under consideration as ayyam khali fasl yani mah Aghun ya Baisakh. This, to my mind, is a certain date and fulfils the requirements of the definition given above. That date is generally a date more appropriate to redemption of a mortgage than to a reconveyance by way of sale. The conclusion is strongly fortified by the provision contained in the agreement empowering the seller to deposit the money in Court in the event of the buyer refusing to transfer the property to him. Such a deposit is a step for redemption of a mortgage under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

In this view of the case, the question as to whether the agreement is binding on the present defendants or not does not arise.

The appeal fails and is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Rule against the order of the Munsif, First Court, Bajitpore, dated the 3rd August 1923.

Babu Prokash Chandra Pakrashi, for the Petitioner.

Babu Gopal Chandra Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are rather complicated and the parties have been fighting over this matter for over 12 years; but they may be shortly stated in order to understand the position of the parties to this Rule. The plaintiff brought a suit against a 21 defendants for recovery of possession of a certain property on the allegation that they had joined in dispossessing him. He got a decree in the first Court against all the defendants. Two of them (defendant Nos. 2 and 4) preferred an appeal to the lower Appellate Court making the plaintiff as the only respondent and it was dismissed. A second appeal was filed in this Court which was allowed and the case was sent back to the lower Appellate Court to be reheard after receiving some additional evidence. In the mean time, the opposite parties (defendants No. 9, 10, 12 and 13) brought a suit for setting aside the decree passed against them in the original suit by the Munsif. Their suit was decreed and the decree of the first Court, in so far as it stood against them, was set aside on the ground that they were minors at the time and were not properly represented in the first suit. The appeal before the lower Appellate Court by the defendants Nos. 2 and 4 came on for hearing after remand after the decision of the opposite parties' suit. The appeal was partially allowed and the plaintiff preferred a second appeal to this Court against the appellate decree and made all the defendants in the suit respondents to the appeal. A preliminary objection was taken at the hearing of the second appeal that it could not proceed as there was no decree existing against the opposite party. This contention was given effect to and the plaintiffs' appeal was found to be incorporated. The learned Judges held that the decree in the original suit having been set aside as against defendants Nos. 9, 10, 12 and 13 they could not be considered as proper parties to the appeal; but as the plaintiffs' cause of action against all the defendants was joint; the appeal against the other defendants also could not proceed in the absence of those defendants, Nos. 9, 10, 12 and 13. This decision was passed on the 7th July 1922. The suit that was brought by the opposite party to have the decree in the original suit set aside was decreed on the 31st July 1916 and the appeal against that decree was dismissed on the 17th July 1917. On the 20th September 1917 the plaintiff applied for a rehearing of the original suit against the opposite party on the ground that as the decree against them had been set aside the effect of it was to revive the suit against them and prayed for re-hearing of that suit. No order was passed on this application. After the decision of the appeal by the High Court, namely, on the 3rd August 1922 the plaintiff made another application inviting the Court to re-hear the original suit against the opposite party. That application was dismissed by the Munsif against whose order this Rule has been issued. It is now firmly settled that the effect of an order under O. IX of the Code is to revive the original suit namely, to leave the parties in status quo on the date of the decree in the original suit. The plaintiff was, therefore, left to apply to the Court to re-hear the suit as against the opposite party after the decree against them had been set aside. The learned Munsif, however, has dismissed the plaintiffs' application to re-hear the suit. I am of opinion that the plaintiffs' application was not to ask from the Court an order which was in the discretion of the Court to grant but it was to bring to the notice of the Court that circumstances had happened since the decree was passed—which were calculated to revive the suit and invited the Court to consider it as a pending suit. The Court was bound to go on with the suit and if at the hearing of the suit it was found that it could not go on on account of some legal defect he might dismiss the suit. But it was not justified in dismissing the plaintiffs' application for treating the suit as pending in his Court but it was bound to proceed with the hearing of it. The order which the Munsif has passed on the plaintiff's application is thus worded: "My conclusion is that the petition is not maintainable. It is dismissed with costs." The apparent result of this order is that the prayer of the plaintiff for the re-hearing of the suit has been rejected. This the learned Munsif had no jurisdiction to order. It is a matter of grave consequence to the petitioner as he has thus been deprived of his right of appeal and of second appeal to this Court. I, therefore, hold that the order of the Munsif dated the 3rd August 1923 dismissing the plaintiff's petition should be set aside and I order accordingly. The Rule is, therefore, made absolute. The petitioner is entitled to his costs of this Rule. I assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 68, Sch. III, paras. 1, 7—Mortgage-decrees—Earlier decree paid off by subsequent decree-holder, effect of—Sale—Purchase-money, how to be employed—Collector, jurisdiction of, extent of.

Two mortgage-decrees were passed in respect of the same property and were put in execution and were sent to the Collector for execution. The decree-holder under the subsequent mortgage paid off the decree on the earlier mortgage and the property was sold free from incumbrances and was purchased by the decree-holder under the subsequent mortgage. He then applied to the Collector for an order declaring that the purchase-money should be paid first towards the satisfaction of the earlier decree and the balance towards his own decree and that the property should be deemed to have been sold free from incumbrances. This application was refused:

Held, (1) that the duty of the Collector was to find out the best method of raising the money for the satisfaction of the decree passed by the Civil Court and he had no jurisdiction to decide as to how the purchase-money was to be employed;

(2) that the consent of the decree-holder did not confer any such jurisdiction on the Collector and the decree-holder was not, therefore, bound by the order of the Collector refusing his application;

(3) that the only way of dealing with the matter was to declare that the property had been sold free from incumbrances and that the purchase-money was to be employed first towards the satisfaction of the earlier decree and the balance towards part-payment of the subsequent decree.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Allahabad, dated the 22nd February 1923.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Appellant.

Mr. Zafar Mehdi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts which have given rise to this appeal are these. There were two decrees one No. 15 of 1912 in favour of one Parsidh Narain and against the judgment-debtor Muhammad Matin. There was another decree, No. 95 of 1912, in favour of Abdul Shakur against the same judgment-debtor Muhammad Matin. The decree No. 95 of 1912 ordered the sale of some property which was included in the decree No. 15 of 1912. In fact, the decree No. 15 of 1912 was passed on an earlier mortgage. The two decrees were put into execution and, the property involved being ancestral, they were sent to the Collector for execution. The subsequent mortgagee, Abdul Shakur, satisfied the earlier decree, No. 15 of 1912, on 18th of September 1914. He then asked the Subordinate Judge that the amount of the prior decree should be added to the amount due under his own decree, namely, decree No. 95 of 1912. The learned Subordinate Judge by order dated 3rd July 1915 found that this could not be done but he suggested that Abdul Shakur might proceed under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, Schedule I, O. XXXIV, rr. 12 and 13. Thereafter, the decree No. 95 of 1912 was again sent to the Collector for execution by order dated 22nd June 1916. When execution was proceeding before the Collector Abdul Shakur made an application to the Subordinate Judge on 30th January 1917 asking that the Collector might be informed that the sum of Rs 2,075 which had been paid by him to Parsidh Narain for the satisfaction of decree No. 15 of 1912 should also be realised and the property sold, not subject to the mortgage created in favour of Parsidh Narain, but free from incumbrance. This application he was competent to make under the provisions of law already quoted, namely, O. XXXIV, rr. 12 and 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Subordinate Judge acceded to this request and ordered that the application of Abdul Shakur might be sent to the Collector for his information. The property was sold on 20th August 1918 and was purchased by Abdul Shakur. He gave a receipt, a copy of which is on the record. He thought that the point should be made clear that the property had been sold free from incumbrance and that the amount of money for which he had purchased was to be credited first towards the decretal amount due under the decree No. 15 of 1912 and the balance should go to satisfy his own decree. His application to the Collector and his appeal to the Commissioner were unsuccessful. Subsequently, he made an application before the Subordinate Judge for recovery of what was due to him under his decree. He gave credit for the money realised by the Collector towards the satisfaction of the prior decree and the balance he applied towards part-payment of his own decree. Objections were raised as to his execution with the result that this second appeal comes before us.

The learned District Judge held that the orders of the Collector and the Commissioner stood in the way of the decree-holder getting his money. He found that the Collector and the Commissioner were the executing Courts and that, they having decided that the only decree that was executed was the decree No. 95 of 1912, nothing further could be done in the matter.

The contention that has been raised by the learned Counsel for the decree-holder before us is this. The Collector was to find out the best method of raising money in order to satisfy the decree passed by the Civil Court. He had absolute jurisdiction to choose the best method allowed to him by the law but beyond that it was not within his province to decide how much money was due to the decree-holder and how much of the decree had been satisfied. In support of this proposition of law, the learned counsel has quoted two cases, namely, Tapesri Lal v. Deokinandan Rai (1), and Bhurchand Hansraj Doshi v. Vira Champa Khechar (2). Both these cases support his contention. Any consent of the decree-holder could not give the Collector any jurisdiction which he did not possess under the law. One important fact which must not be lost sight of is this. No rights of any third party are involved. It was the decree-holder who was prepared to forego his rights as a prior mortgagee which he acquired by payment of the decree passed in favour of Parsidh Narain. He unequivocally declared that he was not going to rely on any prior mortgage. The judgment-debtor was there and orders were passed in the case and it must be taken that he was all along aware of the same. No attempt has been made to show that the procedure of the learned Subordinate Judge has in any way prejudiced him. In the circumstances, it appears to us to be clear that the three properties which were sold on 20th August 1918 were sold free from the incumbrance created in favour of Parsidh Narain and the money that was realised must be credited first towards the satisfaction of Parsidh Narain's decree and the balance should go towards the part-payment of the decree No. 95 of 1912.

It remains to notice the receipt which was given by Abdul Shakur on his purchase. As the learned District Judge has remarked that receipt does not say that Abdul Shakur bought the property in full satisfaction of his decree No. 95 of 1912. The properties were sold, as the receipt indicates, in execution of decree No. 95 of 1912 and in execution of no other decree. The property that was sold could be sold free from incumbrance with the consent of Abdul Shakur. The receipt does not say that Abdul Shakur purchased the property subject to the mortgage in his own favour.

The result is, that we allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the execution case through the lower Appellate Court to the first Court for disposal according to law. Costs of this appeal and the appeal in the Court below must be paid by the judgment-debtor respondent. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Hindu law—Joint family—Alienation by father—Enquiry by alienee—Application of money—Antecedent debt—Carelessness and extravagance, effect of.

Where a mortgagee from the manager of a joint Hindu family is reasonably satisfied after sufficient enquiry that the money he is going to advance is required for the benefit of the joint family, he is not bound to see that it is applied for the purpose for which it is advanced and is not diverted to other purposes.

Where an antecedent debt incurred by a Hindu father is not shown to have been in any way immoral, the mere fact that it arose out of extravagance or carelessness will not make it any the less binding on the sons.

An estate is equally in need of money for its preservation, whether the need arises from a lack of proper management in the past or in spite of it.

Appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 6th June in Civil Suit No. 1 of 1920.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour, and V. R. Pandit, R. B. for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appeal of Jageshwar Pant, the first defendant in the case (F. A. No. 88 of 1922), has this day been dismissed. This is an appeal by the fifth defendant Bansidhar, a mortgagee of a part of the property of which partition has been decreed. It is directed against the declaration in the decree that his three mortgages are binding only on the quarter share in the property allotted to Jageshwar Pant, and so far as it is based on the same grounds as that of the first defendant it must fail. On the other grounds taken it is, however, equally bound to succeed.

The principal sums secured by the three mortgages were Rs. 2,000 Rs. 9,000 and Rs. 5,000 or Rs. 16,000 in all. With the exception of an item of Rs. 316-14-0 in the first mortgage and one of Rs. 1,348 in the third, it is quite clear, and it is not now denied, that all the money advanced on all of them was taken and used for the payment of antecedent debts of Jageshwar Pant of such a nature that he was entitled to alienate the shares of his sons in the joint family property in order to pay them. It is necessary then to examine the binding nature of the consideration only in respect of the two sums that have been mentioned.

The first mortgage was executed in July 1918 for Rs. 2,000 which included the sum of Rs. 316-14-0 paid in cash for the expenses of sowing and weeding. Jageshwar Pant was at the time in chronic need of cash, and the mortgagee was well aware of this and of the fact that sowing and weeding was then going on. The sum of Rs. 1,348 was borrowed on the third mortgage in 1919 for the purpose of making repairs to the family house, which is proved to have been in need of repairs costing more than double that amount to the knowledge of the mortgagee and it is also proved that some at least of the money was spent on it.

It must be held, therefore, that in each of these two cases the mortgagee was reasonably satisfied after sufficient enquiry that the money he advanced to Jageshwar Pant was required for the benefit of the joint family he represented, as indeed it was. He was neither bound nor able to see that it was applied to the purposes for which he advanced it and was not diverted subsequently to others by Jageshwar Pant. The main reason for the view of the learned Additional District Judge that none of the three mortgages could affect any share in the property but Jageshwar Pant's own appears to be the fact that he has always been a particularly thriftless and extravagant person and had wasted a fine estate. But there is not even a suggestion that any of the antecedent debts were in any way immoral or arose out of anything but extravagance and carelessness, and an estate is equally in need of money for its preservation whether the need arises from a lack of proper management in the past or in spite of it.

The decree of the lower Court will accordingly be modified by the excision of the declaration that the three mortgages of the fifth defendant do not bind the shares of the plaintiff and the second and third defendants, and the substitution for it of a declaration that those three mortgages are binding on all the property to be partitioned. The costs of the appellant in both Courts will be paid by the respondent Pandurang and he and the remaining three respondents will pay their own costs.

In both schedules of costs, however, the pleader's fee payable to the present appellant will be calculated on Rs. 10,000 and not on Rs. 24,029 8 which is the amount stated in the petition of appeal as the value of the relief sought. That is the value of the third share in the property originally claimed by the plaintiff, who has given only a quarter share, worth Rs. 18,022-2. But the present appellant Bansidhar is concerned here only with having his three mortgages, of July and November 1918 and August 1919, with a total consideration of Rs. 16,000, declared effective against the other three-quarters shares in the property as well as against Jageshwer Pant's quarter share. In the lower Court, the effectiveness of his mortgages against two-thirds of the property was never denied though the decree declares them ineffective against three quarters. For the calculation of the pleader's fee a fairly liberal valuation of this relief, in the absence of any definite basis, seems to be Rs. 10,000.

Bombay District Municipal Act (III of 1901), s. 49 (j)—Bye-laws for refund of Octroi duty—Goods imported duty free but retained within Municipal limits beyond prescribed period—Liability of Municipality to refund Octroi duty subsequently levied—Compliance with bye-laws essential even though rendered impossible owing to Municipal action

If a person imports goods on a Rahdari pass under which no Octroi duty is payable at the time of the import, on the stipulation that the goods will be detained in the Municipal limits for 48 hours only, but retains the goods for more than the stipulated period and subsequently pays Octroi duty in respect of the goods, he cannot obtain a refund of the duty so paid unless he makes an application for it within the time prescribed by Bye-laws of the Municipality for the purpose, even though his inability to do so arises from the fact that the Municipality recovered the Octroi duty at a time when the claim for refund was, under the Bye-laws, time barred.

Application to revise the order of Mr. Shamas Maniram, Sub-Judge, Sehwan, dated the 27th January 1923.

Mr. Dipchand T. Ojha, for the Applicants.

Mr. Dipchand Chantumal, for the Opponents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the firm of Narumal Bhagchand brought an action against the Sehwan Municipality claiming refund of a certain sum of money levied from him in respect of Octroi due by him to the Municipality and alleging that the tax is illegal. The Judge of the Small Cause Court, Sehwan, dismissed the suit. Narumal comes here in revision.

It appears that the plaintiff imported certain goods into Sehwan on a Rahdari pass. Under that pass no Octroi is payable at the time of import and, therefore, Narumal did not pay any Octroi at the time when the goods entered Sehwan. But, subsequently, however, the Municipality imagining that Narumal was liable to pay Octroi on the goods exacted Rs. 103 odd from him. And inasmuch as he alleged (apparently with truth) that he had exported the goods he applied for refund, which refund however, was refused.

Under the ordinary procedure as regards the levy of Octroi the rules suppose that the amount due as Octroi will be calculated at the Octroi station on the goods and the goods while still in the possession of the person who brings into the City will be taken to the Recovery Office and the dues paid there. (Vide rule 6 of the Rules of the Sehwan Municipality, Chapter VII). The Municipality has also framed rules (Vide rule 8 of Chapter VII) providing for refund, and there is a further rule which is not numbered framed under section 48 (j) of the Bombay District Municipal Act as to these Rahdari passes. Section 59 (iv) of the Bombay District Municipal Act allows to the Municipality to levy an Octroi on animals or goods or both, brought within the Octroi limits for consumption or use therein. Had that section stood by itself, it would have obviously been impossible to levy any Octroi at all because it will be easy for any person who brings in goods into the City to say that he did not intend to consume or use them in the municipal limits of the City and then according to the strict rules of construction of a bye-law or statute, it would be necessary for the Municipality to prove what the intention of the person who brings goods in the Municipal limits is, which is obviously impossible to do. Section 48 (j), therefore, throws upon the Municipality some duties and confers upon them the privilege of framing rules as to Octroi, regulating the system in which refund should be made on account of Octroi when animals and goods are brought into the City in transit and are not intended for use or consumption in the municipal limits and prescribing a period of limitation after which no claim for refund of Octroi is to be entertained. Now, these rules that I have referred to, namely, r. 8 and the unnumbered rule of 31st of December 1920 seem to me to have been framed by the Municipality in accordance with the powers given by section 48 (j). Rule 8 provides that there shall be refund of the Octroi paid on imported goods which again are exported and even assuming have broken bulk or changed hands subject to certain exceptions, the two material exceptions being that the goods have been exported within twelve months next after the date of import and that the claim has been put in within seven days next after the export thereof. This rule rather covers the case where the importer has (as he is normally supposed) to pay the import duty on the delivery of the goods on introduction of them into the municipal limits. The rule of 31st of December 1920 postulates the case where there is no intention of keeping them for any long period in the City and allows in such a case a merchant to keep them in his own custody but there is the stipulation that the period for such detention of the goods is not to exceed 48 hours. These rules do not seem to me ultra vires or unreasonable.

In the present case trouble has arisen because the merchant took the pass under the rule dated the 31st of December 1920 but failed to export the goods within 48 hours, keeping them apparently for 72 hours. The Municipality subsequently levied a sum from him equal to the Octroi which should have been paid and he sought a refund of this sum from the Municipality on the ground that he had, as a matter of fact, exported the goods, within 12 months under rule 8. As, however, the money was levied from him more than 12 months after the export of the goods he was unable to comply with the qualification introduced by sub-section (3) of rule 8, namely, that the claim must be made within 7 days after the export of the goods. Therefore, his claim was refused.

It is no doubt unfortunate for the plaintiff but, after all, he has himself to blame. It is obvious that Rahdari passes are not to be granted except to persons who can be relied on to export the goods immediately merely keeping them for a few hours in transit, and it would introduce an intolerable method of procedure, opening the door to most serious frauds if the persons obtaining these Rahdari passes were permitted to retain these goods at their own pleasure free within the municipal limits for more than 48 hours. The merchant therefore, who takes the benefit of the clause of 31st of December 1920 cannot complain if he is exposed to certain restrictions and obstructions in case he does not comply with the terms thereof. It would seem, therefore, that the Municipality was strictly within its rights in abiding by the clause 3 of rule 8 and in refusing to make this refund.

Exactly what powers the Municipality had to levy this sum due as Octroi, is not at present clear to us. We do not know whether the plaintiff falls under the category of merchants under section 80 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, and if he does not, Chapter VIII apparently has no application, and it is difficult to see by what power the Municipality collected this arrear of Octroi from the plaintiff. But that is not the question which arises directly in the present case because the plaintiff is not objecting to the levy of the sum due as Octroi but is objecting to the failure of the Municipality to give a refund. The whole suit would be on a different basis and the whole pleadings and evidence also would necessarily have been different, had the plaintiff refused to pay and the matter for decision would have been whether the Municipality is justified in summarily exacting this Octroi is a matter on which we express no opinion and we must dispose of the case on the ground that the octroi was properly levied and that the only remedy of the plaintiff against the Municipality was to ask for refund. Inasmuch as, therefore, the refund is asked for considerably later than seven days after the export of the goods on which Octroi had been paid, it would appear clear that the plaintiff is not entitled to any refund and, therefore, the finding of the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court is correct.

Therefore, we dismiss this application with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25—Error of law—Revision—Small Cause suit tried by Munsif—Appeal heard by District Judge—Second appeal—Under which section revision lies.

The scope of s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act is very wide and gross errors of law come within it. But an error of judgment on questions of law does not come under s. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Where a suit of a Small Cause nature is tried by a Munsif and an appeal against the decree is heard by a District Judge, no second appeal lies, nor does a revision lie under s. 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act.

Civil Revision against the order of Additional Judge of Aligarh, dated the 6th of September 1923.

Mr. G. Agarwala, for the Appellants

Mr. Ladli Prasad Zutshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision from a decree of the District Judge of Aligarh setting aside the decree of the Munsif of Kasgunj.

Six bales of yarn had been booked to the plaintiff's address but only five were delivered by the defendant Railway Company. The plaintiffs brought a suit for damages in respect of the loss of one bale. The goods had been sent under a Risk Note form B. The learned Munsif came to the conclusion that there was no theft from a running train and also that the defendant Company's servants were guilty of wilful neglect inasmuch as they had left the waggon unlocked, which was only bolted and sealed. On appeal the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that there was a theft from a running train though he was not prepared to find definitely that there was a robbery in the strict sense of that word. He, however, relying on certain observations contained in a judgment of this Court, Civil Revision No. 164 of 1923, even though opposed to the view of the Oudh Court, held that 'theft' had the same meaning as 'robbery'. He has also expressed some doubt as to the correctness of the finding of the Munsif that there was a wilful neglect on the part of the Railway Company. He accordingly dismissed the suit in toto.

The plaintiffs have come up in revision and have taken three grounds in their petition. These grounds raise questions of law and attack the judgment of the Court below on the ground that the learned Judge's view was entirely erroneous.

A preliminary objection is, however, taken on behalf of the respondent Company that no such ground can be raised in this revision. In my opinion this objection is quite correct.

In a case which is disposed of by a Court of Small Causes the High Court, under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, has power to call for the record of the case and pass such order with respect thereto as it thinks fit. The scope of section 25 is very wide indeed and gross errors of law may very well come within it. The present, however, is not such a case. Here, though the suit was of a Small Cause Court nature it was tried by the Munsif of Kasgunj. An appeal lay from the decree of the learned Munsif to the Court of the District Judge which was heard and disposed of. It is under section 102 of the Code of Civil

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER OF LABOUR

Procedure that a second appeal is prohibited. It follows, therefore, that the present application cannot be entertained as being one under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. It can only be considered as an application under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is well settled that the scope of that section is very much limited. Unless the lower Appellate court can be said to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law or to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested in it, or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, this Court has no power to interfere in revision. It is manifest that an error of judgment on questions of law does not come under either of these three categories. The learned District Judge had jurisdiction to hear the appeal. He has not refused to exercise his jurisdiction at all. He has committed no irregularity of procedure in the exercise of his jurisdiction. The utmost that can be said is that he has committed an error of judgment or has committed an error of law in the exercise of his jurisdiction. This cannot be a good ground for entertaining the application in revision. The application is dismissed with costs.

Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 8, Sch. I, Art. 1, Sch. II, Art. 17 (A) (ii)—Award by Land Acquisition Officer—Reference to Court—Amount increased—Appeal—Court-fee payable.

Where in a proceeding under the Land Acquisition Act, the Court increases the amount of the award originally made by the Land Acquisition Officer, the stamp fee payable on an appeal by the Crown against such increase is governed by Art. (i) of Sch. I of the Court Fees Act. Neither s. 8, nor Art. 17 (A) ii of Sch. II of the Act is applicable to such a case.

Reference under section 5 of the Court-Fees Act.

The Government Pleader, for the Appellant.

The Advocate-General, for the Government.

ORDER.—This is a Stamp Reference on the following facts. An award has been made under the Land Acquisition Act with which the party entitled to compensation was not satisfied, and under that Act the matter was referred to the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes for disposal, and he increased the award by an amount of Rs. 42,763. Being dissatisfied with that award, the department of Government interested, prefers an appeal to this Court, and the question is what stamp that appeal has got to bear.

By section 8 of the Court-Fees Act the amount of the fee payable under this Act on a memorandum of appeal against an order relating to compensation under any Act for the time being in force for the acquisition of land for public purposes shall be computed according to the difference between the amount awarded and the amount claimed by the appellant. Now it is argued for the appellant, that is to say, the department interested, that there is no application where the Crown is the appellant because there is no difference between the amount awarded and the amount claimed by the appellant, the appellant in that case not being a claimant at all; and the learned Advocate-General, who appears to represent the Crown, as distinguished from the department interested, as the matter is of general importance, agrees with that argument. It is certainly contrary to the dictum on the subject in Kasturi Chetti v. Deputy Collector, Bellary (1) in which it was said that section 8 was a special provision applicable to appeals against all orders, including awards relating to compensation for lands under the Land Acquisition Act. But I think on the proper construction of the section it has no application where the Crown is the appellant and that the dictum is too wide.

Then it remains for me to consider whether the Article applicable is Article (1) of Schedule I or Art. 17 (A) ii of schedule II of the Court-Fees Act. By the Land Acquisition Act, XIX of 1921, a decision of the Court in a case like the present is to be deemed to be a decree

(1) 21 M. 269; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 546.

GOBIND SAHU v. ZAFAR KARIM

under the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908. Schedule I, Art. 1 of the Court-Fees Act provides the ad valorem fee payable on any memorandum of appeal, not otherwise provided for in this Act, presented to any Civil Court... except those mentioned in section 3, which has no application here. There is no doubt that this is a memorandum of appeal and, therefore, unless it is provided for elsewhere, it comes under that Article. Turning to Art. 17 (A) ii of schedule II a memorandum of appeal in a suit to set aside an award is provided for, and it was held by the Punjab Chief Court in Secretary of State v. Basawa Singh (2) which was tried in 1912, that article 17 (4) of the then Court-Fees Act which corresponds, except in a matter which I will refer to in a moment, with Article 17 (A) (ii) of the present Act, applied to a case similar to the present. I very much doubt whether that was a correct decision under that Act as it stood, because it involves the inclusion of a reference to a Court under the Land Acquisition Act in the words, "a suit to set aside an award," which is certainly not giving the ordinary meaning to those words, because the proceedings before the Small Cause Court or the District Court do not seem to be a suit to set aside an award. It has been held by the Privy Council in Secretary of State for India v. Chelli Kani Rama Rao (3) that the Court is itself in those cases sitting as an arbitrator and not as an appellate tribunal, though it is true that, in a sense, proceedings before the Court are to set aside the award, for if those proceedings were not taken, there is an antecedent award of the officer which would be binding. But it is not necessary to give any decision on that point, because the words of the present schedule Art. 17 (A) (ii) provide a proper fee on a memorandum of appeal in a suit from a District Munsif's Court or a City Civil Court and another fee on a similar suit from a District Court or Sub-Court. It so happens in this case that the Court which has made the award, the Small Cause Court is not one of those enumerated Courts,—whether it is by accident or design is im-material and, therefore, I consider that Art. 17 (A) (ii) does not provide for a fee to be paid on this appeal even if it is looked upon as an appeal from a suit to set aside an award.

That being so, we are thrown back on Art. I of Schedule I and the fee must be paid in accordance with the provisions of that Article. The costs of this reference will be paid by the department interested as appellant in the appeal to the Crown.

The two appeals not having been consolidated, must be treated as separate appeals. Three weeks for payment of the additional Court-fee.

Adami, J.—The facts of this case are simple. One Bibi Kulsum instituted a suit for a declaration that the decree obtained against her husband's father, Habibuddin, upon a mortgage was fraudulent; at the same time, she applied for an injunction against the proceedings taken in execution of the decree. The injunction was issued and thereupon the defendant in the suit appealed to the District Judge against this interlocutory order. Whilst the appeal was pending before the District Judge, Bibi Kulsum died, on the 20th of October 1921, and the defendant-appellant then applied to the District Judge on the 7th of January 1922 for substitution of the husband and three children of Bibi Kulsum as respondents to the appeal. The defendant-appellant succeeded in his appeal and the District Judge's order was upheld by this Court. An application was thereafter made to the Munsif asking for substitution in respect of one of the children of Bibi Kulsum, but no application was then made before the Munsif for substitution in the place of the deceased Bibi Kulsum, though on the 22nd November 1921 the plaintiff's pleader informed the Munsif that Bibi Kulsum had died. On the 18th August 1923, the Munsif directed that a subsequent application for substitution in the place of Bibi Kulsum and also an application for substitution in the place of Mussammatt Sazda should be heard together on the 28th August. On the 28th August the Munsif considered the objection that the application for substitution of the heirs of Bibi Kulsum was made out of time and that the suit, therefore, had abated, and he held that as the substitution had been made in the Appellate Court the present petition for amendment was merely a formal one and was not out of time.

This application is now made against the order of the Munsif, and it is argued that no steps having been taken within time to substitute the legal representatives of Bibi Kulsum in the Munsif's Court the suit was barred. The point taken in this case has been that the appeal was not an appeal arising out of the suit but out of the injunction in connection with that suit, and therefore the action taken before the District Judge would not satisfy the requirement to make such substitution within time before the Munsif. The case, however, is governed by the decision of the Privy Council in Irij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram (1). There it was held that the introduction of a plaintiff or a defendant for one stage of a suit is an introduction for all stages even if it be made on appeal from a mere interlocutory order. The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council meets the contention of the petitioner and it is clear

Suit for cancellation of decree—Value of subject-matter —Court-fee payable.*

Where the relief claimed in a suit is the cancellation of a mortgage-decree, which leaves the defendant with the right and the opportunity to obtain another similar decree on the same mortgage in a properly framed suit, the value of the subject-matter of the suit is not capable of ascertainment and the suit falls within Article 17 (VI) of Schedule II to the Court-Fees Act.

Application for revision of the order of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 22nd March 1923.

Mr. S. R. Mangrulkar, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. N. Jog, for the Non-applicant.

The facts of the case are that the applicant brought a suit for a declaration that the mortgage-decree for sale obtained by defendant's father against the applicant in Civil Suit No. 79 of 1918 and First Appeal No. 18 of 1920 and made final on 17th November 1922, was null and void as the applicant was sued as a major though minor, and for an injunction to restrain the defendants from executing the decree by a sale of the property mortgaged. The relief for declaration was valued at Rs. 15 for purposes of Court-fee and the relief for injunction was valued at Rs. 10 for purpose of court-fee. The claim was valued at Rs. 13,700-10-0 for purposes of jurisdiction.

The learned Additional District Judge held that the plaint was insufficiently stamped and that the proper valuation with respect to the relief for injunction asked for was Rs. 13,700-10-0. The learned Judge has, therefore, ordered the applicant to supply the deficient Court-fee stamp on or before 18th instant. The applicant has, therefore, filed this application for revision.

ORDER.—Mr. Mangrulkar has been heard for the applicant, and Mr. M. N. Jog for himself and the other opponent. The relief asked is the cancellation of a decree obtained on a mortgage and the principles set out in Devidas v. Ramlal (1) would apply if cancellation of the decree meant practically cancellation of the mortgage, but it does not. Cancellation of the decree here leaves the defendants with the right and the opportunity to obtain another similar decree on the same mortgage in another properly framed suit. The value of the claim is, therefore, the value of the decree, which can easily be ascertained, minus the value of the chance the defendants have of obtaining another decree on the same mortgage, which cannot possibly be ascertained. The value of the claim cannot, therefore, be ascertained, being the difference between two quantities of which one is unknown, and the amount of Court-fees already paid is sufficient. The order of the lower Court is accordingly set aside, and the case will proceed. The costs of this application, in which the pleader's fee will be fifteen rupees, will be paid by the defendants, who apparently thought it their duty to risk considerable monetary loss themselves for the protecting of the fiscal interests of the Government by opposing it.

Mr. Srikrishnaswami H. Lulla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal relates to an assessment of Super Tax under Act VIII of 1917.

Plaintiff-respondent filed a suit against the Secretary of State for India defendant-appellant for a declaration that the assessment of Super Tax of Rs. 2,500 for the year 1918-19 (from 1st April 1918 to 31st March 1919) was illegal and as made without jurisdiction and prayed for a decree for the refund of this amount with interest and costs.

The District Judge, Sukkur, granted the plaintiff a decree for the recovery of Rs. 2,500. The Secretary of State for India appeals against this judgment.

The first point taken on appeal is that the lower Court was in error in not holding the suit barred under section 39 of the Income-tax Act II of 1886 read with section 8 of the Super Tax Act VIII of 1917.

Section 39 of Act II of 1886 is as follows: "No suit shall lie in any Court to set aside or modify any assessment made under this Act," and section 8 of Act VIII of 1917 applies the provisions of section 39 inter alia in the case of super tax as if that tax were income-tax chargeable under Act II of 1886.

The main point for consideration is whether the assessment of the super tax was an assessment under the Act, for it is only in that event the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is barred. Now section 3 of Act VIII of 1917 enacts that in addition to the tax imposed by the principal Act (Act II of 1886) there shall be "charged, recovered and paid in the year" a super tax upon a taxable income of a person or company computed at the rate specified in the schedule. Respondents contend that their assessment to payment of super tax in the sum of Rs. 2,500 was neither charged, paid or recovered in the year 1918-19, therefore, the assessment is not under the Act.

As observed in Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 4th Ed., page 429 "Statutes which impose pecuniary burden are subject to the rule of strict construction. It is a well settled rule of law that all charges upon the subject must be imposed by clear and unambiguous language because in some degree they operate as penalties." There appears to us no ambiguity whatever in section 3 for the words are clear and specific, "there shall be charged, recovered and paid in the year beginning with the first day of April 1917." The Legislature has apparently detected the anomalous situation created by the words "in the year for in Act II of 1922 which consolidates and amends the law relating to both Income Tax and Super tax the words now are "for any year."

We have, however, to consider the interpretation to be placed on section 3 of Act VIII of 1917 and it seems to us abundantly clear that its provisions were not complied with in the assessment of the respondents to Super Tax. Between the period of the 1st April 1918 and 31st March 1919 he was neither charged any super tax nor did he pay it nor was it recovered from him.

Section 6 of Act VIII of 1918 provides that when in the Collector's opinion a person is chargeable with super tax a notice shall be served upon him calling upon him to pay the amount specified therein or to apply to have the assessment reduced or cancelled. The only way that an assessee could be said to be charged is by a demand notice issued by the Income-tax officials for till then it can not be argued that he has been charged with the payment of any tax. But the respondents admittedly received notice of demand only on May 1919, that is, after the year 1918-19 was over and even if he was chargeable with super tax he ceased to be so after the expiry of the year. The demand notice, therefore, having been issued after the year was over there was neither payment nor recovery of the super tax within the year 1918-19.

The Income-tax Collector had himself realised that super tax is to be recovered within the year to which it relates for in a memo. marked urgent addressed to the Mukhtiarkar with reference to the super tax for 1919-20 and dated the 23rd March 1920 he gave him strict injunctions to recover it promptly before the close of the "present month" and to adopt coercive measures if necessary. He interpreted the section 3 as it stood in the only manner that it could be interpreted that the tax should be charged paid and recovered within the year to which it relates.

Mr. Elphinston attempted to invoke the aid of a confidential note dated the 23rd March 1919 wherein in Mukhtiarkar had made a calculation of the assessment and as this was done before the expiry of the year, he argued that the tax was charged within the year. This argument has no substance in it. It is unarguable that the contents of a confidential document were communicated to the assessee nor is it even alleged that the latter was aware before the end of the year that he was chargeable with any super tax.

Mr. Elphinston pressed upon us the serious prejudice to the Crown if section 3 were interpreted literally, but in a fiscal statute we must look to the letter of the law and cannot introduce equitable considerations.

SECRETARY OF STATE v. SETH KHEMCHAND THAOMMAL

There is a patent error of law in the assessment of the super tax and, therefore, the assessment was not one under the Act the suit, therefore, is not barred.

The second point taken on appeal is with regard to estoppel but this needs the exposition of a few facts to consider its applicability.

On the 27th June 1919 the respondent appealed against the super tax assessment to the Income-tax Collector. The order on it is dated the 28th March 1920 dismissing the appeal "in view of the settlement arrived at to day with regard to the Income-tax and super tax for the years 1919-20, respondent withdraws his appeal."

On the 5th February 1920 respondent appealed against his super tax for the year 1919-20 but he was informed on the 15th March that this appeal could not be entertained as it was not duly stamped and was time barred. On the 18th March the respondent addressed the Income Tax Collector pointing out that his appeal was within time and enclosing the requisite stamps. The Collector was further informed that the appeal against the income tax was still pending. On the 25th March the Collector directed the respondents to appear before him on the 28th March with regard to his super tax and income tax appeals. On this day a settlement was arrived at whereby the respondents agreed to pay the super tax of Rs. 2,500 as also the income tax for the years 1918-19 and 1919-20 based on an agreed income. By his order dated the 28th March 1920, the Collector says that "in view of the settlement arrived at to-day by which the assessee agrees to pay even the super tax for 1918-19 amounting to Rs. 2,500 " though not legally due " the question of the super tax to be levied upon him for the year 1919-20 is reopened.

Mr. Elphinston contends that as the respondents paid the sum of Rs 2,500 in terms of the settlement arrived at and the Collector in consideration of this payment reduced considerably the income tax payable for the year 1919-20 the respondents cannot now be permitted to recover the sum of Rs. 2,500. Apart from the question of the probability of the respondent agreeing to pay the super tax in order that his appeal against the income tax may be reopened it is difficult to understand how the estoppel operates. The opening words of the written terms of the settlement are "To avoid trouble and litigation I agree." Whilst paying the super tax the respondent had protested that was not legally due. It is not alleged that the respondent by his declaration act or or conduct intentionally caused the Income tax Collector to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief. He promised to pay Rs. 2,500 and he paid it. It is obvious that the respondent never admitted that the imposition of the super tax was just and legal as just shown above nor did he ever agree not to question its legality. It may have been inferred by the Collector that the respondent would not go to law about it, but his doing so does not operate as an estoppel.

The third point raised in appeal is that the lower Court was in error in holding that the accounts which were settled for a lump sum could be reopened by the respondents and if the respondents are permitted to do so, the appellants should equally be permitted to assess the respondents afresh. But this is not a case of an account stated nor could it be really described as a settlement of account for the most that can be said is that because the respondents agreed to pay the super tax of Rs. 2,500 the Collector of Income Tax reduced the income tax and super tax for the years 1919-20. The contention that there was an implied agreement by the respondents not to resort to legal proceedings for the recovery of the Rs. 2,500 super tax that he had paid is unsupportable for this would be a void promise. Mr. Elphinston pointed out to us that the Collector of Income Tax is empowered to enter into composition with assesses subject to certain condition and there being a valid compromise in this case, it ought not to be disturbed. It must be, however, observed that in the written statement of the appellant in the lower Court, though the plea of estoppel had been taken there was no reference to this compromise; all that was urged was that the respondents had agreed to pay the super tax of Rs. 2,500 before the 31st March 1920. Nor does the question of compromise find any place in the issues, framed by the lower Court.

Issue 2 in the lower Court was, "Is the amount of the tax fixed on the plaintiffs own admission, if so, is he not estopped from contesting its legality and validity and issue 3 has the payment been voluntary, if so can it be received from defendants." Even in the grounds of appeal in this Court, there is no reference to the compromise, but what is urged is that the respondent was barred from opening an account that had been settled. We cannot, therefore, permit the question as to a compromise being raised at this stage for it is a mixed question of law and fact.

It was lastly urged that as the payment was voluntary it can not be recovered. Under what circumstances was this payment made? Respondent never admitted that it was a just and legal payment for, as the order of the Collector itself shows, he protested as to its being legally due. It further seems fairly clear that his principal object in making the payment of Rs. 2,500-0-0 was to secure the hearing of his appeals against his income tax and super tax for the years 1919-20 and, lastly, there can be little doubt that the Collector was eager to receive payment of the Rs. 2,500-0-0 which otherwise under the law he was aware that he could not recover. We are of the opinion that the respondent is entitled to recover a payment made under these circumstances.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Companies Act (VI of 1892), s. 4—'Person', meaning of.

The word "person" in s. 4 of the Companies Act can be used to include a collection of people, s.g., an association of individuals known as a joint Hindu family or beneficiaries interested beneficially in property vested in a trustee. Therefore, a person who holds shares in a Company personally as well as a trustee for a number of beneficiaries or as a guardian for a minor is to be counted as one individual person. [p. 441, col 2]

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, dated the 25th October 1920.

Messrs. P. L. Banerji and Panna Lal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. Abu Ali and Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT—This is an appeal from a preliminary decree in which the defendants were held liable to account to the plaintiff for the profits in a Cotton Ginning Factory which had accrued on the shares originally held by one Kunwar Muhammad Abdul Ghafur Khan, a deceased ancestor of the plaintiff. The original defendants were Moti Ram and Lala Har Prasad. The latter died during the pendency of the suit and his heirs have been duly brought on the record. They have not appealed from the preliminary decree. Moti Ram, the present appellant, was sued in the character of an agent who had received moneys as and for the use of the plaintiff. He was alleged to be withholding a sum which, with interest, amounted to over Rs. 35,000. He admitted that there was a considerable sum of undistributed profit. The principal point upon which he relied as enabling him to retain this money was that the Company was an illegal association inasmuch as it consisted of more than 20 persons and, therefore, violated the conditions of section 4 of the Indian Companies Act of 1882 which prohibits the formation of an unregistered Company in excess of that number. If, in our opinion, the appellant is wrong in that contention, then the appeal must fail. The Companies Act of 1882 nowhere defines 'person'. We are, therefore, thrown back upon the General Clauses Act (No. X of 1897). 'Person' is there defined to include any Company or Association or body of individuals whether incorporated or not. It is, therefore, obvious that 'person' can be used to include a collection of people and an appropriate illustration which will at once occur to Indian lawyers is that association of individuals known as a joint Hindu family. Analogous thereto are the varying number of beneficiaries who are, from time to time, interested beneficially in property vested in a trustee or trustees. The obligations of the appellant and the representatives of Har Prasad as agents are contained in an agreement which is one of partnership and also one of agency—it is dated the 20th of August 1910 and, omitting for a moment the consideration of the legality or otherwise of the inception of the contract, the liability to account was in that agreement clearly provided for, nor is there any dispute as to the actual failure to deliver accounts throughout the period as to which default is alleged.

The appellant takes his stand as we have said on the illegality of the above-mentioned agreement. He contends that on an investigation and enumeration of the persons beneficially interested in the partnership their number amounts to more than 20. The number of the various members of the partnership enumerated as they themselves thought correct, amount exactly to 20. Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, however, contends that, inasmuch as Moti Ram is scheduled as holding shares on behalf of his two grandsons, his name should be cut out and the beneficiaries, his two grandsons, substituted in it. It may be noticed that Moti Ram is himself beneficially interested in another block of shares. No. 12 is given as

The appellant's contention as regards this lady is that she must be counted as one person in respect of her own personal interest in that block of shares and a second person by reason of her holding of an interest in the Company as the guardian of Moti Lal. If both these points were conceded, namely, the cutting out of Moti Ram's name at No. 4 and the substitution of his two grandsons and if the name of Moti Lal, the adopted son of Ganeshi Lal, had also to be added at No. 12 in addition to the name of Musammāt Mohani then the number of persons would undoubtedly be over the prescribed limit of 20. We, however, do not agree with the view put forward by the appellant and it is to be noticed that at p. 25 where the agreement is set out Moti Ram is in fact counted as two persons; that is to say, he is counted in respect of the block of shares of which he should receive the profit to his own use and benefit and also of the shares which he holds as trustee for his two grandsons, even on that assumption the number of persons do not exceed 20. We do not agree with the view that the name of Moti Ram must give place to that of his two grandsons, nor do we agree that it is necessary to indicate as regards Musammāt Mohani and Moti Lal that both of their names should be reckoned in the constitution of this Company. In fact, there were, as the appellant would wish us to delete or to accept, two Moti Rams. There was throughout the whole transaction one Moti Ram to whom the Company was accountable. In the same way the Company was accountable only to the one lady Musammāt Mohani independently of the circumstance that she in her turn would be accountable to Moti Lal, the adopted son of Ganeshi Lal, in respect of whatever interest he happened to hold in the Company through her as trustee. Again, as regards Moti Ram it is to be noted that the contracting person in the first instance was the same Moti Ram who had a personal interest in the Company and the appellant and Har Prasad were bound to account to him and to him alone both for the shares in which he had his own beneficial interest and the shares which he held as a trustee for his grandsons. A similar consideration applies to the case of No. 8 Bithal Das who, as guardian of his minor son Kishen Gopal, also figures with another man as a proprietor having a direct beneficial interest in the partnership. But the accountability of the Company to Bithal Das was an accountability to him alone both as regards his beneficial interest and as regards the shares which he held in a representative capacity for other persons. The number, however, would exceed 20 if certain persons, presumably members of a joint Hindu family and so found by the Judge, were in fact separate and thus capable of being regarded as separate contracting parties. The learned Subordinate Judge considered all the arguments put forward and came to the conclusion that the persons alleged to be joint were in truth joint and could be represented by one member of the joint family and that as regards the others, specially Moti Ram and Musammāt Mohani and Bithal Das, that in truth they had been accurately described in the agreement. When these principles are applied to the document in question it becomes clear that the partnership certainly did not exceed 20

and probably did not exceed 18 persons. Agreeing with the learned Subordinate Judge, we hold that the partnership was not invalid in its inception and that the appellant and the representatives of Har Prasad are accountable to the plaintiff for his share in the profits for the period claimed. We also agree with the lower Court that the plaintiff having procured a succession certificate for the shares in the Factory can maintain the action for profits. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs and fees on the higher scale.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), s. 8 (1)—Agricultural land, what is—land not used for agricultural purposes for several years.

The question whether, on the facts found, the property in dispute is to be classed as agricultural land or as village immoveable property within the meaning of section 8 (1) and (3) of the Punjab Pre-emption Act is a question of law.

The test for determining whether a piece of land is or is not agricultural land is the use to which the land is put at the time of sale, and each case must be decided on its own facts.

It is not a necessary implication that land is not agricultural land merely because at the time of sale it bears no crop. Agricultural land often lies fallow in the ordinary course of agriculture, and often remains unsown by reason of paucity or excess of moisture.

Land which has not been used as agricultural land for a period of six years and has been proposed for sale as a building site cannot be regarded as agricultural land within the meaning of section 8 (1) of the Punjab Pre-emption Act.

Appeal, under section 10 of the Letters Patent, from the decree of Mr. Justice Martin, passed in Civil Appeal No. 2428 of 1921, on 15th November 1922, affirming that of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 3rd August 1921, decreeing the plaintiff's suit.

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. Obedulla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT—In this pre-emption suit the matter for decision is whether the land sold is agricultural land or urban immoveable property.

Now, the facts found by the District Judge may not be challenged in second appeal, but the question whether on those facts so found, the land is to be classed as agricultural land is a question of law.

Agricultural land, as the term is used in the Pre-emption Act, means land as defined in the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, 1900, as amended by Act I of 1907, and is, therefore, 'land which is not occupied as the site of any building in a town and is occupied or let for agricultural purposes, etc.'

It is to be observed, then, that the test is the use to which the land is put at the time of the sale.

From this it is not a necessary implication that land is not agricultural land, merely because at the time of sale, it bears no crop; agricultural land often lies fallow in the ordinary course of agriculture and in this country often remains unsown by reason of paucity or excess of moisture, but each case must be decided on its own facts.

On the findings in this case that the land had not been used for agricultural purposes for the 6 years preceding the sale and in 1913 was proposed for sale as a building site, we hold that the land is not agricultural land and accepting the appeal we dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

RESPONDENT.Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (1) (4)—Agreement to transfer land, whether requires registration.

Plaintiff and defendant were plaintiffs in two rival pre-emption suits. Plaintiff withdrew his suit on the defendant executing an agreement that he would transfer a certain area of land in favour of the plaintiff without charging any price therefor if he succeeded in obtaining a decree in the pre-emption suit instituted by him. In a suit to enforce the agreement:

Held, that as the agreement purported to make the plaintiff owner of the area of land specified therein from the date on which the defendant's suit was decreed, it fell within the purview of section 17 (1) (4) of the Registration Act and required registration, and being unregistered was inadmissible in evidence.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Lahore, dated the 26th April 1922.

Mr. Gullu Ram, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to enforce a certain agreement executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff under the following circumstances:

The plaintiff and the defendant brought two separate suits for pre-emption in respect of the sale of certain land made by the plaintiff's father and two uncles in favour of Khair-uddin and Muhammad Bakhsh. The plaintiff withdrew the suit on the defendant's executing an agreement to the effect that he (the defendant) would transfer 41 kanals 15 marlas of land along with a 1/12th share in a certain well in his (the plaintiff's) favour without charging any price therefor if he succeeded in obtaining a decree in the pre-emption suit instituted by him. It appears that the defendant obtained a decree in the pre-emption suit but refused to abide by this agreement and to transfer the land in favour of the plaintiff.

Thereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit to have the agreement enforced. The suit was resisted on the grounds that the agreement was without consideration and that it was not admissible in evidence for want of registration. Both the Courts below have concurrently found that the agreement was for consideration and that it did not require registration, inasmuch as the document itself did not create or declare any rights in immovable property of the value of more than Rs. 100, but gave plaintiff only a right to obtain a transfer in future, and was, therefore, not compulsorily registrable under sub-section 2 (v) of section 17 of Act XVI of 1908. The suit having been decreed the defendant has now come up in second appeal to this Court, and it has been urged on his behalf that the finding of the learned Additional Judge on the question of the admissibility of the document is not correct and that the suit ought to have been dismissed on the ground that the document on which it was based was compulsorily registrable and, therefore, not admissible in evidence.

In my opinion, this contention is right and must prevail. The document relied on is clearly a document of title and makes the plaintiff an owner to the extent of 41 kanals 15 marlas of land from the date on which the defendant-appellant obtains a decree in his pre-emption suit. The document clearly falls within the purview of clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 17 of the Registration Act, and requires registration before it can be admitted into evidence.

I accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the Court below, dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

An implied contract gives a cause of action no less than an express contract. There is an implied contract in the case of a mortgage that the mortgagee is to pay the whole of the amount for which the land is mortgaged.

A suit is, therefore, maintainable by the mortgagor to recover the unpaid balance of the mortgage-money from the mortgagee.

Where an Appellate Court throws out a suit on the erroneous ground that it is not maintainable, it declines to give a decision on the merits and its action amounts to a refusal to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Petition under section 44 of Act IX of 1919 for revision of the decree of the District Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 16th March 1923, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st class, Shakargarh, dated the 30th November 1922.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff mortgaged land to the defendant for Rs. 602. He alleges that the defendant paid only Rs. 492 out of that amount and sues to recover the balance of Rs. 110. The first Court passed a decree in his favour, but the District Judge on appeal has dismissed the suit on the ground that, in the absence of a contract, a suit for the recovery of the unpaid balance of the mortgage-money does not lie. The plaintiff has applied for revision.

The learned District Judge, in holding that such a suit is not maintainable unless there was a contract that the balance of the mortgage-money was to be paid, appears to mean that the contract must be an express one and here I cannot agree with him. An implied contract gives a cause of action no less than an express contract, and it seems to me obvious that there must have been an implied contract in the present case that the defendant was to pay the whole of the amount for which the land was mortgaged. I hold, therefore, that the suit is maintainable.

The application for revision lies, as the District Judge, in declining to give a decision on the merits and throwing out the case on the erroneous ground that the plaintiff cannot sue for the recovery of the unpaid balance of the mortgage-money, has failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law.

I accept the application, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and remand the case to that Court for decision on the merits. The Court-fee on the application will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the case.

Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act applies only when there is no contract to the contrary.

The rule as to notice contained in section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act is applicable or inapplicable as a whole.

A contract stipulating for a month's notice without any specification of the time when the notice is to expire, is a contract to the contrary within the meaning of section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act and in such a case it is not necessary that the notice should expire with the month of the tenancy.

Mr. R. B. Jaywant, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT—This appeal is not pressed so far as the decree for possession of the house is concerned. It is contended that as the last notice, dated the 18th December 1920, did not expire at the end of a month of the tenancy as required by section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act it was invalid and the tenancy not having terminated the plaintiff could not ask for an enhanced rent. As at present advised, I am inclined to hold that section 106 has no application to this case for it applies only where there is no contract to the contrary. In this case there is a contract to the contrary for the lease provides for a month's notice being given before the defendant could be asked to vacate. It is contended that the contract modifies the rule in section 106 only as regards the length of the notice and not as regards the provision that the notice should expire with the month of the tenancy. In my opinion, this provision is an indivisible part of a single rule embodied in section 106 and the rule must be applicable or inapplicable as a whole where there is any contract to the contrary. A contract for a month's notice without any specification of the time when the notice is to expire is a contract to the contrary of the rule in section 106. The notice here was in accordance with the terms of the contract and was valid. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Where a tenant agrees to give up possession at a particular time, he is not entitled to a notice to quit under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, as that section has no applicability to such a case.

Mr. P. A. Pandit, for the Respondent

JUDGMENT—The deed of lease which has been excluded from evidence because it was unregistered had in any case to be excluded for the still more cogent reason that it did not bear upon any matter in issue. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants had held two villages of his on a lease executed in 1903 of which the term expired in June 1910. The defendants not only failed to deny this, but put forward many pleas each of which is an assertion of its truth. The fact stated by the plaintiff was, therefore, not in issue at all, and we are no more concerned with the question of whether the lease-deed was registered or not, or whether the lease was invalid for any other reason or not, than we are with the validity of some other transaction outside the case.

That alone would defeat the contention raised in this Court for the first time, that the suit was barred by time. But the contention is itself entirely without substance in spite of its false appearance of ingenuity. Possession for twelve years or any other period prescribed by the law on an invalid title cannot perfect anything but that title. Here the defendants not only never asserted at any time that they were perpetual lessees, but have steadily asserted all through this suit and in all their applications to be made something of the sort by the Deputy Commissioner that they were not.

DHARAM SINGH v. NAND SINGH

The only other contention urged in appeal is that the defendants were lessees from year to year under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, and could not, therefore, be evicted without the formal notice proscribed by that section. There is, however, in this case, as they have admitted, a very distinct contract to the contrary in the lease, in which they agreed to give up possession in June 1910. There is no question here of their being "tenants holding over" or tenants on sufferance. That requires the absence of both assent and dissent on the part of the landlord, and he has proved his express dissent from the beginning very clearly by the fact that he has refused to accept any lease-money since 1910. The appeal will be dismissed and the appellants must pay all the costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 55, 145—Execution of decree—Arrest of judgment-debtor—Surety, extent of liability of—Notice to surety, whether necessary.

A judgment-debtor who was arrested in execution of a decree was produced before the Court and was released on giving security. The surety undertook to pay the decretal amount if the judgment-debtor failed to make an application for insolvency within one month, or if the surety failed to produce him in Court when called upon to do so :

Held (1) that the surety was not released from liability merely on the judgment-debtor filing an application for insolvency within time and that he was also bound to produce the judgment-debtor in Court when called upon to do so ;

(2) that before the decree could be ordered to be executed against the surety, the latter must be called upon to produce the judgment-debtor in Court, and it was only on his default that the surety would become liable under the bond.

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 4th March 1923, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st class, Amritsar, dated the 13th January 1923, setting aside the order passed by the Subordinate Judge, 1st class, Amritsar, on the 25th August 1922.

Lala Budri Das, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The following are the circumstances of this case. One Jawahar Singh was arrested in execution of a decree for money. He was brought before the Court under section 55 of the Civil Procedure Code, and expressed an intention that he would apply to be declared an insolvent. The appellant Dharm Singh offered to stand surety, and on the 10th of April 1922 filed a security-bond to the effect that the judgment-debtor would apply within one month to be declared an insolvent, or that he would settle up with the decree-holder within this period. This security-bond was considered insufficient by the presiding Judge as being not in accordance with the provisions of section 55 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the statement of the surety was recorded. In this statement the surety gave an undertaking that the judgment-debtor would make the necessary application within one month, or that he would come to a settlement with the decree-holder, and that, if neither of these two things was done, he (the surety) would be liable for the whole of the decretal amount. He further stated that he would produce the judgment-debtor in Court and that if he would not do so, he would then also be liable to pay the whole of the decretal money to the decree-holder. On the 10th of May 1922 the judgment-debtor did make an application to be declared an insolvent. This was fixed for a hearing for the 6th of June 1922. On that day the insolvent was present in Court, and it was ordered that notices should issue to the creditors for the 11th of July 1922. On the 11th of July 1922 the insolvent was absent, and on the 25th of August 1922 the decree-holder applied to the executing Court that the decree be executed against the surety. This application was rejected by the executing Court in the first instance, but the order was set aside on review and the decree ordered to be executed against the surety. An appeal against this order was preferred to the District Judge but dismissed on the 14th of March 1923. It is against this order that a second appeal has been preferred to this Court.

Three contentions have been raised by Mr. Sethi on behalf of the appellant. First, it is contended that no undertaking had been given by the surety that he would produce the judgment-debtor in Court after the latter had filed his application to be declared an insolvent. It is argued that the application for insolvency was filed within time and that the surety was consequently released from his liability. I am unable to agree in this contention. There is no doubt that in the security-bond there was no condition to the effect that the surety would also produce the judgment-debtor in Court when called upon to do so, but this security was considered insufficient probably because it did not comply with the provisions of section 55 of the Civil Procedure Code, and fresh security was, therefore, demanded. From the statement which the surety gave before the Court immediately after the rejection of the security-bond, it is clear that he made himself liable, for two things (1) that the judgment-debtor would file a petition in insolvency within thirty days or that he would come to a settlement with the decree-holder, and (2) that he would also produce the judgment-debtor in Court when called upon to do so. This undertaking was strictly in compliance with the provisions of section 55 of the Civil Procedure Code, and I do not, therefore, see how it can be argued that the surety was released from his liability merely because an application for insolvency was filed within time. Under the law as it now stands and, according to the undertaking given by the surety, he was bound to produce the judgment-debtor when called upon by the Court to do so, and he is not released from his liability by the mere filing by the judgment-debtor of a petition in insolvency.

The next point argued was, that there was nothing on the record to show that the surety was ever called upon to produce the judgment-debtor in Court after the latter had failed to appear on the 11th of July 1922. This contention, in my opinion, has force and must be allowed. Section 55 (4) of the Civil Procedure Code provides that the judgment-debtor may furnish security for his appearance in Court when called upon to do so. In the present case there is no order by the Court that the judgment-debtor should be produced. In these circumstances, I do not think that the Court was justified in ordering the decree to be executed against the surety. Even under section 145 of the Civil Procedure Code, under which action was now sought to be taken against the surety, it is necessary that notice should have been given by the Court to the surety why the decree should not be executed against him. No such notice appears to have been given and the order, therefore, cannot be sustained.

Lastly, it was argued that the decree-holder was not entitled to proceed both against the surety as well as against the judgment-debtor and that now, as the judgment-debtor has also been re-arrested in execution of the decree, the surety should be considered to have been discharged. It is unnecessary to give any finding upon this point as I am clearly of opinion that the appeal should succeed in view of my finding on the second question, namely, that the surety was never called upon to produce the judgment-debtor in Court and that no notice was given to him as required by section 145 of the Civil Procedure Code.

I accordingly accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the learned District Judge, remand the case under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, to be decided in accordance with law.

Babu Hemendranath Sen, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the suit was brought by the plaintiff against the East Indian Railway Company, for damages for loss of two tins of ghee and for shortage in weight of other two tins. The latter part of the claim was dismissed by the Court below. With regard to the claim for loss of two tins the Court below has given a decree to the plaintiff for Rs. 71-14-0 and costs. The goods were consigned under Risk Note in form B. The learned Small Cause Court Judge had held that, under section 76 of the Railways Act, 1890, the burden of proof as to whether the loss was not due to wilful negligence and how the loss occurred, was upon the Railway Company; and as it did not adduce any evidence on the point he decreed the plaintiff's suit. This is clearly wrong. Section 76 of the Railways Act does not apply to contracts limiting the liability of the Railway Company under section 72 of the Act. According to the Risk Note B, the plaintiff has to prove that the loss was due to wilful negligence of the defendant Company. This view of the law has been considered as hard; but the consignor has entered into this bargain with his eyes open and for a clear advantage to himself, namely, much less freight. The wording of the Risk Note form B, as it stands, clearly throws the onus on the plaintiff; but if any authority is needed for this view it may be found in a number of cases two of which may be mentioned, here, viz., the cases of Sheo Barat Ram v. The Bengal North Western Railway Co. (1), and The East I. Ry. Co. v. Kanak Behary Haldar (2). The view taken by the Court below is undoubtedly wrong and cannot be supported.

It is argued by Mr. Sen who appears for the plaintiff opposite party that it is the duty of the defendant Company to prove how the loss was occasioned and whether it was due to any cause other than their negligence or the negligence of their servants. Reliance was placed for this contention on the cases of The Central Indian Spinning & Weaving Co. v. G. I. P. Railway Co. (3), and Ghelabhai Pansi v. The East Indian Railway Co. (4). There are some expressions in those judgments no doubt which lend support to this contention. But so far as this Court is concerned, the matter has been set at rest by the decision which I have referred to above. After the pronouncement of the judgment by the Bombay High Court, which seems to have taken a different view on this question, the House of Lords had occasion to consider this point in the case of Smith Ltd. v. Great Western Railway (5). There the note under which the goods were forwarded was similarly worded as Risk Note B in this case. At page 183 of the report Lord Buckmaster expresses himself in these words: "It is in my opinion a clause which throws upon the trader, before he can recover for any of the goods, the burden of proving in the first instance that the loss sustained arose from the wilful misconduct of the Company's servants. It is perfectly true that this results in holding that the apparent protection afforded to the trader is really illusory, it practically gives him no protection at all, for it is often impossible for a trader to know what it is that has caused the loss of his goods between the time when he delivered them into the hands of the Railway Company's servants and the time when they ought to have been delivered at the other end of the journey. The explanation of the loss is often within the exclusive knowledge of the Railway Company and for the trader to be compelled to prove that it was due to wilful misconduct on the part of the Railway Company's servants, is to call upon him to establish something which it may almost be impossible for him to prove. Nonetheless, that is the burden that he has undertaken and the question is whether in this case he has afforded any evidence which calls for an answer on the part of the Railway Company." In that case the plaintiffs only proved that they delivered certain goods to the Railway Company for carriage; and he further put in the correspondence between himself and the Railway Company refusing to give any information regarding the circumstances within their knowledge associated with the loss of those goods. In those circumstances, their Lordships of the House of Lords held that the plaintiff had completely failed to prove his case. I think that, under this authority, the question should be considered to have been finally set at rest.

I have been asked by the learned Vakil for the opposite party to send the case back to the trial Court in order to enable him to adduce evidence for the discharge of the onus that lies upon him. I do not think that I am entitled to adopt that course. It does not appear that the plaintiff was prevented from adducing any evidence. No doubt, the view taken by the lower Court was in his favour but that is no ground for entitling a party at a subsequent stage when that view is found to be wrong, to adduce evidence in accordance with the view held by a higher Court. I do not, therefore, think that I should accede to his request.

The result is that this Rule is, made absolute, the decree of the Court below set aside and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs.

As the petitioner has succeeded in this Court he is entitled to costs of this Court. I assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 59—Occupancy tenancy—Succession—Collaterals inter se rule applicable to whole blood whether excludes half blood.

While succession to an occupancy tenancy is governed by section 59 of the Tenancy Act the rights of the collaterals inter se would be governed by the relevant tribal or village custom, so that among themselves those related to the deceased in the whole blood may exclude those who are only related to him in half blood. [p 451, col. 1]

Mohru v. Mulsaddi, 109 P. R. 1814 (F. B.), followed.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 1st June 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 9th April 1920.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. L. Mathur, for Lala Badri Das, R.B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT—This is a second appeal in which the point for determination is whether, in the succession to an occupancy tenancy when the dispute is between collaterals, the whole blood excludes the half blood. It has been found by the learned District Judge that Jaishi, through whom the plaintiffs' claim, was the son of Har Bhaj by one wife and Dasaundhi, Ganesha and Buddhu were the sons of Har Bhaj by another wife. It has also been found that, on the death of Har Bhaj, Jaishi succeeded to a larger share of the estate on the ground that the succession was then governed by the rule of Chundawand. Buddhu's line has died out and his widow, Musammam

SHER MUHAMMAD KHAN v. DOST MUHAMMAD KHAN

Sawarno, having died in 1916 succession to his share has opened out and the descendants of Dasaundhi and Ganesha claim to exclude the descendants of Jaishi on the ground that they, the plaintiffs, although collaterals, are more remotely related to Buddhu and his sons, owing to their being of the half blood, than are the defendants who are descended from Buddhu's full borthers.

Mr. Fakir Chand on behalf of the appellants has urged that section 59 of the Tenancy Act governs the succession and that, under that section, there is no difference such as is claimed in the present case. Section 59 of the Tenancy Act lays down the rule of succession and under it, admittedly, the plaintiffs and defendants, as collaterals, are entitled to succeed. In support of his contention he referred us to Wali Muhammad v. Mariam Bi (1) Aisha Bibi v. Aziz ud din (2). In Wali Muhammad v. Mariam Bi (1) the sister of a deceased male owner claimed to be the heir under Muhammadan law. It was held that succession to the occupancy tenancy was governed by section 59 and was in no way controlled by Muhammadan Law and, therefore, it was the deceased's widow who should succeed. In Aisha Bibi v. Aziz ud din (2) it was held that succession to occupancy land is governed by the provisions of section 59 of the Punjab Tenancy Act and not by custom applicable to the parties or by their personal law. In the view promulgated by these two decisions we concur. At the same time, we are in agreement with the remarks made in a Full Bench decision reported as Mohru v. Mutsaddi (3), where it was remarked that while succession to an occupancy tenancy was governed by section 59 of the Tenancy Act the rights of the collaterals inter se would be governed by the relevant tribal or village custom. In other words, while the succession is regulated by section 59, it is clear, and indeed Mr. Fakir Chand admits, that the more remote collaterals would be excluded by the nearer ones.

the whole blood are more nearly related to Buddhu and his deceased sons than are the descendants of Jaishi who belong to the half blood. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT—Malik Dost Muhammad Khan, a Tiwana, sold on the 29th August 1916 some agricultural land and a kachri house with an open site attached to it to Mahtab Singh, an Arora by caste. The land is situated in Mauza Nurpur and the house with the site attached to it is situated in the village of Mitha Tiwana. The property is admittedly ancestral in its character. The present suit was instituted by Sher Muhammad Khan, minor son of Malik Dost Muhammad Khan, through Malik Muhammad Muzaffer Khan his grandfather, for a declaration that the alienation would have no effect on his reversionary rights after the death of the alienor because there was no consideration and necessity for the alienation. The vendee and the vendor were impleaded as defendants in the suit. Both of them filed written statements resisting the suit on the main ground that the Tiwanas of the Shahpur District had an unrestricted right of alienating their property. They also pleaded that consideration had passed and that there was necessity. Upon this pleading the trial Court struck two issues, namely, (1) whether by the customary law of the Tiwanas generally or of the parties (plaintiff and his father) in particular an owner holding ancestral property has unrestricted power to alienate such property? and (2) whether the alienation in dispute was made for valid necessity and consideration?

The burden of proving the alleged special custom was rightly placed upon the defendants. It appears that beyond filing a jawal dawa the vendor Dost Muhammad Khan took no further interest in the defence of the suit. The vendee, however, produced evidence in support of the alleged special custom. The trial Court held that the vendee had satisfied the onus placed upon him and had proved the existence of a custom among the Tiwanas of the Shahpur District which entitled a Tiwana proprietor to alienate his property without any restriction or limit. The suit was necessarily dismissed.

The plaintiff has preferred this first appeal against the decision of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, and we have been taken through the evidence by the Counsel on both sides. We have to decide whether, with reference to the evidence on the record, the decision of the Court below is correct.

In the arguments before the Court below Counsel for the defendant-vendee divided the evidence under three heads, namely (a) entries consisting of statements of the maliks of the villages Mitha Tiwana, Nurpur and Ukhil Mohla made in the wajib-ul-arz of 1863 to say that they had unrestricted power to alienate; (b) innumerable sales that have taken place in Mitha Tiwana itself since the advent of the British rule without any contest on the part of either sons or other collaterals;

(c) a judicial decision by Mr. Martineau, District Judge, dated 10th April 1917, holding that Sheikh Tiwanas of the Ukhli Mohla village had unrestricted power of alienation.

Besides the above class of evidence, a number of witnesses were also called on behalf of the defendant-vendee to prove the alleged custom. The trial Court did not attach much importance to the statements of those witnesses and preferred to base its judgment on the consideration of the documentary evidence alone. In our opinion, the oral evidence on behalf of the defendant vendee, though not so precise and clear as it ought to have been, does go to prove that there have been many sales and mortgages by Tiwanas, and there has not been a single instance in which any of those alienations have been contested. It is true that the evidence of these witnesses is not specific on the point as to whether the property about which these alienations were made were ancestral or non-ancestral. Yet taking the oral evidence along with the fard prepared from mutation records in respect of a large number of sales and mortgages we can come to no other conclusion than that the properties dealt with must, to a large extent, have been ancestral.

Now, coming to the documentary evidence itself, there can be no possible doubt that the view taken by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge is strongly supported by it. The entry in the wajib-ul-arz of 1863 was criticised by Mr. Mukand Lal on the ground that it was not a record of a custom but a record of contract only and that it had ceased to have any effect after the Settlement during which the wajib-ul-arz was prepared, especially as the defendant had not produced copies of the wajib-ul-arz of the later Settlements. In our opinion, there is no force in the criticism advanced by the learned Counsel. A careful perusal of the wajib-ul-arz of 1863 shows that the entry was intended to be a record of custom. That being so, a presumption of correctness exists in favour of this entry. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Balgobind v. Badri Prasad (1) observed "that the record in a wajib-ul-arz of a custom was the most valuable evidence of the custom." This being so, it rather lay upon the plaintiff to rebut the evidence of custom as contained in the wajib-ul-arz. If there was any variance in the entry in the wajib-ul-arz of subsequent Settlements, we have no doubt the plaintiff would have obtained copies and produced them. The natural conclusion is that wajib-ul-arz of subsequent Settlements did not contain anything in favour of the plaintiff or against the entry contained in the wajib-ul-arz of 1863.

(1) 74 Ind. Cas. 449; 45 A. 413; 21 A. L. J. 578; (1923) A. I. R. (P. O.) 70; 9 O. & A. L. R. (P.C.) 561; 26 O. C. 217; 45 M. L. J. 289; 88 C. L. J. 802; (1929) M. W. N. 799; 88 M. L. T. 817; 10 O. L. J. 868 (P.O.) followed.

The next piece of documentary evidence is the judgment of Mr. Martineau in the case of Sher Bahadur v. Ghulam Muhammad printed at page 4 of the supplementary paper book. The learned Judge in that case upon the evidence held that the Sheikh Tiwans appeared to be included in the category of miscellaneous Musalman tribes and thus not necessarily bound by the custom applicable to agriculturists. That case related to village Ukhli Mohla and the present suit relates to property situated in village Nurpur and Mitha Tiwana. But the parties in that suit as well as in this suit were Tiwanas, and it appears from the general trend of the evidence, both oral and documentary, that the Tiwanas of the District of Shahpur are governed by similar customs. An abstract from the mutation records was prepared by the Naib Sadr Kanungo and was produced before the Court below. In that abstract the total number of alienations by sales and mortgages made by the Tiwana tribe were 354 out of which 84 were mortgages and 270 sales. Mr. Mukand Lal objected to this piece of evidence on two grounds (1) that the fard was not admissible in evidence and (2) that the entries contained in the fard could not be looked at as the copies of the mutation orders had not been produced. He relied on the provisions of sections 76 and 77 of the Evidence Act and contended that the entries of public documents could be proved only by the production of certified copies. In our opinion the fard produced appropriately comes under clause (g) of section 65 of the Evidence Act which provides that, when the original consists of numerous accounts or other documents which cannot conveniently be examined in Court, and the fact to be proved is the general result of the whole collection, secondary evidence may be given by producing an extract. This is what exactly happened in this case. An examination of the vernacular record shows that the original files of the mutation records were not sent by the revenue authorities on the ground that there was a specific rule on the subject which prohibited their transmission. The Court then directed the Naib Sadr Kanungo to prepare an extract and produce it before it. In our opinion the fard in this case is a very valuable piece of evidence. It was argued by Mr. Mukand Lal that no value can be attached to this list of alienations without showing that they were never challenged. The oral evidence of the witnesses clearly shows that no alienations either by way of sale or mortgage had ever been challenged. In our opinion the defendant has established the custom alleged. We accordingly affirm the decision of the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Case-law discussed.

After the evidence in a case had been recorded an adjournment was granted at the request of the plaintiff to enable his Counsel to appear and argue the case. At the adjourned hearing Counsel for the plaintiff did not appear and the Court proceeded to dispose of the suit under O. XVII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code and eventually dismissed it;

JUDGMENT

BAODWAY, J.—The plaintiffs in this suit sought to obtain a decree for possession of certain properties which belonged to one Ganda Singh. It was alleged that Ganda Singh had died forty years previously and had been succeeded by his widows Musammât Sukhan and Musammât Budhan who had been alienating portions of the property. Musammât Sukhan had died 11 years before suit and had been succeeded by Musammât Budhan who had died some six months prior to the institution of these proceedings. The alienees of the two widows or their legal representatives were also impleaded. The defence set up was that the plaintiffs were not related to Ganda Singh and that even if they were related the property in question was not ancestral qua them. The necessary issues were struck and the parties proceeded to lead their evidence. The plaintiffs closed their case after which the defendants closed theirs and a date was fixed for arguments, the date being the 20th of May 1919. On that date Mr. Mohan Lal one of the Vakils who had been conducting the case for the plaintiffs, appeared in Court with an application in which it was alleged that it was the intention of the plaintiffs to apply for a transfer of the case and asked for an adjournment. The Senior Subordinate Judge postponed the case for the 21st May 1919 directing the payment of certain costs to the Counsel for the other side. Mr. Mohan Lal then stated clearly that the senior Counsel was engaged in a case in the Sessions Court on that date and, therefore, the case could not be argued but they could argue the next day. Request also was made that the costs should not be awarded. The case was thereupon adjourned to 21st of May 1919 for arguments, the question of costs being left open for re-consideration. On the 21st of May 1919 an application for an adjournment was filed in Court by one of the plaintiffs who, however, failed to appear when the case itself was called on. Mr. Mohan Lal when asked to argue the case, declined to do so saying that he had not been engaged to argue the case. When the senior Counsel was specially sent for and asked to proceed with the arguments he said that he had withdrawn from the case a long time ago and did not wish to appear. The Court thereupon, after recording these facts, decided to act under O. XVII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code and proceeded to judgment which was pronounced on the 26th of May 1919. The case was disposed of after an elaborate discussion of the merits and the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed.

The plaintiffs have now come up to this Court in appeal and on their behalf we have heard Mr. Kanshi Ram. It has been argued before us that the Court's order under O. XVII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code was illegal and that, therefore, the suit should be remanded in order that the Court should proceed in accordance with law. Under O. XVII, r. 3 where any party to a suit to whom time has been granted fails to produce his evidence, or to cause the attendance of his witnesses or to perform any other act necessary to the further progress of the suit, for which time has been allowed, the Court may, notwithstanding such default, proceed to decide the suit forthwith. In the present case the adjournment from the 20th May to the 21st was made at the request of the plaintiffs acting through their Counsel. It is clear from the record that Lala Mohan Lal, Vakil for the plaintiffs, stated that the case could be argued on the next day, the senior Counsel being engaged on that day—the 20th of May 1919—in the Court of Session and the adjournment was specifically granted by the Court, the order being that "in any case the arguments shall be heard tomorrow." In these circumstances, I am of opinion that O. XVII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code was applicable and empowered the Court to dispose of the case on the merits as has been done.

It has, however, been contended that, inasmuch as on the 21st of May 1919 there was a default on the part of the plaintiffs and as that default would have brought the case within the purview of r. 2 of O. XVII the suit should have been dismissed in default under that rule and not under rule 3. Mr. Kanshi Ram referred to a case Murli Dhar v. Duni Chand (1) and to Chandramathi Ammal v. Narayanasami Iyer (2) and Prativadi Bhayan Karan Pichamma v. Kamiseti Sreeramu'u (3). In reply to Mr. Mehr Chand's arguments he also referred to Phul Koer v. Hashmat Ullah Khan (4). The position in Madras is somewhat peculiar. Chandramathi Ammal v. Narayanasami Iyer (2) does to some extent support Mr. Kanshi Ram's contention. It is, however, opposed to Naganada Iyer v. Krishnamurti Aiyar (5). In Prativadi Bhayan Karan Pichamma v. Kamiseti Sreeramu'u (3) Wallis, C. J., differed from the view taken by his brother Judges and came to the conclusion that Chandramathi Ammal v. Narayanasami Iyer (2) went too far when it laid down that rules 2 and 3 must be read as mutually exclusive. This opinion is of considerable weight inasmuch as Wallis, C. J., was a party to Chandramathi Ammal v. Narayanasami Iyer (2). In the Lahore case Mr. Justice Abdul Raof has clearly held that an order under O. XVII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code can be made in the absence of the party to whom time has been given, a view in which I fully concur.

On the other hand, Badam v. Nathu Singh (6), Mariaunissa v. Ram Kalpa Gorain (7), and Enatulla v. Jihan Mohan Roy (8) were referred to by Mr. Mehr Chand. In Mariaunissa v. Ram Kalpa Gorain (7) it was held that the scope of section 157 (now r. 2, O. XVII) was distinct from that of section 158 (now r. 3, O. XVII) but that the Court could act under section 158 even though the parties were absent if the requirements of that section were otherwise fulfilled and there were materials on the record on which the Court could pronounce judgment. The decision in Enatulla v. Jihan Mohan Roy (8) went a little further and it was there held that where an adjournment was granted at the instance of a party for the purposes stated in r. 3 and there were materials enabling the Court to decide the suit it must act under r. 3 and not under r. 2. Badam v. Nathu Singh (6) is to the same effect and Phul Koer v. Hashmat Ullah Khan (4) does not in any way weaken the force of the earlier ruling inasmuch as the facts were different. In the latter case the adjournment had not been granted at the instance of one of the parties. I, therefore think that the Court could act under r. 3 but in any event it seems to me that the Court in disposing of the case acted perfectly rightly. The entire evidence in the case had been recorded and parties had closed their respective cases; a date for arguments had been fixed; the time had been extended at the instance of one of the parties and on the failure of that party to put in an appearance, in my opinion, the Court was perfectly justified in proceeding to dispose of the case on the merits.

The only other question referred to at the bar was as to the relationship of the appellants to Ganda Singh. The evidence on this point consists of the testimony of three witnesses (P. W. 7) Kesar Singh, (P. W. 10) Labh Singh, and (P. W. 11) Ladha Singh. The first two witnesses are related to each other and the statements of all clearly show that they know nothing personally about the relationship of the parties. Kesar Singh is unable to remember the names of persons actually living although he professes to be able to know the names of persons who must have died when he was a child. Labh Singh attributes his knowledge to Jhanda Singh, plaintiff, as also does Ladha Singh. In these circumstances, I agree with the view taken by the Court below and hold that the relationship has not been proved. The suit has, therefore, been correctly decided and I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Raof, J.—I agree. The facts as disclosed in the case leave no doubt on the point that the Court below was justified in deciding the case on the materials on the record. Look at the case from any point of view you like and you can come to no other conclusion. If the decision be treated as coming under r. 3 of O. XVII of the Civil Procedure Code, then there can be no doubt that the Court was justified in proceeding to decide the suit forthwith. As pointed out by my learned brother, evidence on both sides had been completed and all that was necessary was to decide the case. The Court fixed the 20th of May 1919 for arguments. On that day a petition was presented on behalf of the plaintiffs for the adjournment of the hearing of the arguments on the ground that an application for the transfer of the suit from the Court of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge was to be made. In addition to this petition, Lala Mohan Lal, one of the learned Vakils who appeared for the plaintiffs, made the following statement:—

“Lala Radha Kishen is engaged in a case in Sessions Court to-day. We cannot argue to-day. We can argue to-morrow, but I will request that no costs should be awarded, because the Counsel who is to argue is busy in the Sessions and cannot find it possible to come to-day.”

I have referred to this statement of the learned Vakil especially for the reason that Mr. Kanshi Ram, the learned Vakil for the appellants, has contended that r. 3 of O. XVII of the Civil Procedure Code did not strictly apply to the facts of the present case inasmuch as time had not been granted to the plaintiffs at their request for the purpose of performing any act necessary for the further progress of the suit. In support of this contention he relied upon the statement in the petition of the 20th of May 1919 and argued that in that petition it was stated that the adjournment was required for the purpose of making an application for transfer. That was only one ground on which the adjournment was asked. The real object, however, was to get an adjournment for putting forward an argument on behalf of the plaintiffs. However, the statement of Lala Mohan Lal, the learned Vakil, removes all doubt on this point. He said “we can argue to-morrow.” This clearly indicates that he requested the Court to grant time for arguments till “to-morrow.” It, therefore, follows that time was granted to the plaintiffs at the request of their Vakil, Lala Mohan Lal, for the purpose of advancing arguments in favour of their case. Thus, both the requirements of r. 3 were fulfilled, namely, the adjournment was granted at the request of a party and for the purpose of doing an act for the further progress of the suit. Now, r. 3 provides: “The Court may, notwithstanding such default, proceed to decide the suit forthwith.” This is what the Court has done in this case. Although the plaintiffs did not appear the Court was not bound to dismiss the suit for default of appearance and could have proceeded to decide the suit forthwith. I entirely agree with my learned brother in holding that, even if the plaintiffs did not appear, the Court was not bound to act under r. 2 of O. XVII of the Civil Procedure Code. But leaving aside the question of the applicability of r. 3 of O. XVIII I am clearly of opinion that the evidence on behalf of both parties had been given and the case being complete the Court was not bound to hear a separate argument for the purpose of deciding the suit. Although the Court had fixed a date for arguments the Court was not bound to wait for an argument if the plaintiffs did not choose to appear. At the most it may amount to a mere irregularity which would be covered by the salutary provision of section 99 of the Code. The decision in the case of Sher Khan v. Bahadur Shah (9) was relied upon and it was contended that it was held in that case that the refusal to hear an argument in support of the case was not a mere irregularity. The reason given by the learned Judges was that evidence had been taken by one Judge and the decision in the case was given by another Judge. In those circumstances the learned Judges were rightly of opinion that the new Judge should have heard arguments in support of the case. In the present case the evidence was given before the very learned Judge who has decided the case. Therefore, that ruling has no manner of application to the facts of the present case.

I need not say anything about the arguments on the merits of the case because, as pointed out by my learned brother, the evidence produced on behalf of the plaintiffs to prove their relationship to Ganda Singh was extremely meagre.

I agree in dismissing the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Dawson-Miller C. J.—This is an appeal on behalf of Nand Lal Mukhtar, the first defendant in the suit, against a decision of the officiating District Judge of Shahabad affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Arrah.

The suit out of which the appeal arises was instituted before the Subordinate Judge in 1918 to enforce a mortgage of a 4-pies share in mauzas Dharauli and Gosainpur, which villages together constituted mahal Dharauli, executed by Rajaram Singh in favour of Jasodanand Singh in the year 1891 to secure a loan of Rs. 1,900 together with interest, advanced by the mortgagee.

The plaintiffs are the sons and other members of the family of Jasodanand, the mortgagee, who died before the suit was instituted. They are joint in estate and now represent the interest of Jasodanand. The defendants who are also members of a joint family are the successors in interest of Rajaram, the mortgagor, by purchase. The mortgaged property, by reason of a Collectorate partition effected in the year 1917, is now represented by the new estate then formed and entered in the roll of the Collector of Arrah under lauzi No. 11674, and it is against that estate that the plaintiffs seek to enforce their mortgage under the provisions of section 99 of the Estates Partition Act of 1897.

The defendants in their pleadings raised several pleas in defence to the suit. Some of these were subsequently abandoned and four issues were eventually framed for decision at the trial as follows :—

- (1) Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to get a mortgage-decree or a simple money decree against the defendants?
- (2) Is the suit bad for defect of parties?
- (3) Is the plaintiffs' suit barred by limitation?
- (4) What reliefs if any, are the plaintiffs entitled to?

The Subordinate Judge decided all the issues in favour of the plaintiffs and granted them a mortgage-decree for sale of the property if the decretal amount should not be paid within six months.

The defendants appealed to the District Judge who dismissed the appeal with costs and affirmed the decision of the trial Court. From that decision the defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court. The appellant contends, (1) that the instrument relied on as a mortgage created no valid mortgage over the property, and (2) that the suit is barred by limitation. Other points were raised during the argument dealing with the right of the plaintiffs to proceed against the substituted property but these were admitted to be without substance and were abandoned during the hearing.

The argument on the first point was the same as that urged before the District Judge in the lower Court, namely, that the deed created no present transfer of an interest in the mortgaged property at the time of execution but only a contingent interest which might not arise. The case of Madho Misser v. Sidh Binaik Upadhyaya (1) was relied on in support of the argument.

NAND LAL V. DHARAMDEO SINGH

Before considering the authority relied on it will be convenient to refer to the terms of the deed. It is of a somewhat unusual description and appears to be designed to comprise the features both of a usufructuary and a simple mortgage. It is dated the 18th Falgun 1298 F. (February 1891). It recites the mortgagor's need for raising money and the receipt of a loan of Rs 1,900 from the mortgagee bearing interest at the "usual rate" which is admitted to be one per cent. per mensem. The mortgagor then agrees to repay the principal sum and interest at the end of Jeyth of the current year, that is, about three months later when the next agricultural year begins. It then proceeds "should the aforesaid due date expire I shall pay the interest for the period ending on the due date separately in exchange for the interest remaining on the principal, I give in writing and mortgage 4-pies (English) proprietary right inherited and purchased out of patti Cheharum out of 16-annas in mauza Dharauli, original with dependencies, appertaining to Mahal Dharauli, Pargana Bhojpur, proprietary interest with zirait rights together with sayer of mango and mahua trees, etc., etc., and all semindari rights in the mortgaged property. The said creditor shall enter upon possession of the mortgaged property from the agricultural year 1299 F. He may either cultivate the same as his serait or settle it with tenants. He shall after payment of the Government Revenue, Road Cess Public Works cesses appropriate the profit and produce thereof in lieu of interest. He shall continue in possession of the mortgaged property until repayment of the principal amount as specified above. I shall neither claim mesne profits nor shall he claim interest. When I shall pay the principal in one lump sum at the end of Jeyth of any year I shall take back the mortgaged property and this deed. Until repayment of the principal neither I nor my heirs shall directly or indirectly interfere with the mortgaged property." So far the instrument creates a usufructuary mortgage only. It then proceeds as follows:—"If perchance he be thrown out of possession in any way, I also give in writing mortgage and hypothecate my property, namely, 4-pies share, proprietary interest in mauza Gosainpur and 4-pies share in mauza Dharauli in lieu of the principal and the produce and I do declare that until repayment of the money I shall not execute any deed of sale, hiba, Bakshishnama, or rekan in favour of any one. Should I do so the same shall be treated as null and void. Therefore I have executed this mortgage deed that it may be of use when required."

There can be little doubt as to the intention of the deed. The share in mauza Dharauli was to be mortgaged to secure payment of the interest accruing after H. Jeyth 1298 F. As to the interest for the short period between the 18th Falgun and the end of Jeth 1298 F. the mortgagor's liability was a personal one only and the property was not charged with that, nor is it claimed in the present suit. To secure the interest after that date the property was hypothecated and the mortgagee is to be put in possession and to appropriate the proceeds after paying the Government demands, and as long as he is in possession no interest is payable on the principal beyond the proceeds. In the second part of the deed the mortgagor hypothecates not only the share in mauza Dharauli but also the share in mauza Gosainpur, that is the whole of his 4-pies share in the mahal, which was comprised of these two villages, to secure repayment of the principal as well as interest, or, as the deed put it, "in lieu of the principal and the produce" if the mortgagee should be dispossessed. The meaning of this clause appears to me to be that the property there mentioned is hypothecated to secure repayment of the principal together with interest in the event of the mortgagee being dispossessed and that the obligation to repay the principal shall only arise if and when the mortgagee shall be dispossessed. There is a present charge to meet a future contingency. What happened was that the debt remained unpaid at the due date and the mortgagee was put in possession under the terms of the deed and remained in possession receiving the proceeds in lieu of interest up to the year 1906 when he was for a time dispossessed by Nand Lal, the defendant No. 1, who had in the meantime purchased the mortgagor's interest in the mahal. Shortly afterwards, Nand Lal, by bringing about certain fraudulent and collusive certificate proceedings under the Public Demands Recovery Act, succeeded in bringing the plaintiff's interest also to sale and himself purchased it. The plaintiffs then instituted a suit, numbered 43 of 1907, against Nand Lal and others to set aside the sale and recover possession. In that suit they were successful and recovered possession in 1908. In that suit the validity of the mortgage as a mortgage was in issue and was decided in favour of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs remained in possession until the year 1917. In that year there was a Collectorate partition of the mahal and the defendant's 4-pies share, the subject of the plaintiffs' mortgage, was formed into a separate estate bearing tauzi No. 11674. After partition and the formation of the new estates out of the old mahal the plaintiffs were deprived of their possession as the old mahal no longer existed. They consequently instituted the present suit against the substituted property allotted to Nand Lal as representing the old 4-pies share. It is no longer disputed that if the mortgage is a valid and subsisting instrument it is available against the substituted property.

The appellant contends that the case is governed by the decision in Madho Misser v. Sidh Binaik Upadhyaya (1). In the document in question in that case no words of hypothecation appear. It begins with an acknowledgment by Sidh Binaik that he has borrowed Rs. 99 from Madho Misser and he undertakes to pay interest at a certain rate. It then stipulated that the borrower should pay the entire principal with interest in the following year, and if he did not do so he was to lose his right to a plot of land situated in mauza Kutha and the lender was to take possession of the land, after which no interest on the money was to be paid by the borrower. The Court held, without giving any detailed reasons, that the document in question was not a mortgage and indeed the point was not seriously pressed on behalf of the lender. The Court further held that the instrument did not create a present charge upon the property within the meaning of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. The reason for the latter part of the decision was that the document did not, in the opinion of the Court, create an immediate charge but merely the possibility of a charge depending upon a future contingency. No doubt there is a difference between a charge within the meaning of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act and the mere possibility of a charge or a promise to create a charge in the future and the question for determination in that case was merely one of construction. The decision however has been criticised on more than one occasion in subsequent cases. See Imbichi v. Achampat Anukoya Haji (2) and Narayanasamy Rao v. Ramasamy Naicken (3). In the former case Coutts-Trotter, J., commenting on the decision in Madho Misser's case and a somewhat similar decision in Harjas Rai v. Naurang (4) pointed out that these decisions were capable of two constructions but if they were supposed to enunciate the proposition that whenever you have a charge to secure a liability which will arise only, if at all, in the future, that cannot be a present charge within the meaning of the Transfer of Property Act, he refused to follow them. In my opinion the view so expressed is correct. It is, moreover, the view of the late Sir Rash Behari Ghose, an undoubted authority on the Law of Mortgage, who states in dealing with this subject that a charge may undoubtedly be created as well as a mortgage for the discharge of a contingent liability, and he cites the decision of the Madras Court above referred to as well as the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Maina v. Bachchi (5). See the Law of Mortgage in India, 5th Ed., Vol. I, p. 158, note.

In my opinion the instrument in this case created a mortgage of the share in mauza Dharauli to secure by way of usufruct the interest on the loan and the subsequent possession of the mortgagee completed the transaction. It also created a simple mortgage of the share in both villages of the mahal to secure repayment of the principal sum advanced including subsequent interest if the mortgagee should be deprived of possession. It seems to me that this was a present hypothecation to secure a future liability to repay the mortgage-money if the mortgagee should be deprived of possession. Although the due date of repayment was the end of Jeyth 1298 F. the charge created on the property to secure repayment of the principal sum could only be enforced in the event of the mortgagee being deprived of possession but, nevertheless, in my opinion, the property was hypothecated from the outset to secure repayment of the loan in the event which has in fact happened, and the mortgage is not bad upon the ground urged by the appellant. There is also I think another reason why the appellant cannot now question the validity of the mortgage bond. In the suit to recover possession brought by the plaintiffs against Nand Lal in 1907 the decision partly turned upon the validity of the mortgage which was the basis of the plaintiffs' title and which was challenged by the defendants in that suit. The plaintiffs' title under the mortgage as a valid and binding instrument was declared, and as between the same parties the matter would appear now to be res judicata.

The second point relating to limitation can be shortly dealt with. Although the date of repayment of the mortgage-bond was Jeyth 1298 F. the right to enforce payment by sale of the security did not arise until dispossession which took place in 1917, the year before the suit was instituted. Up to that time this right had not accrued and the only claim the mortgagees had against the property was the right to receive the usufruct in lieu of interest. The claim is, therefore, not barred by limitation. In my opinion the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—This Letters Patent Appeal arises out of the following facts:—

The Liquidation Judge Lahore, made an order for payment of Rs. 1,165-7-0 against 'Ghulam Jilani, minor son of Muhammad Zaman'.

That order is enforceable as a decree, but the executing Court refused execution on the ground that the minor had not been represented before the Liquidation Court and, therefore, no decree existed.

The Hon'ble Judge in Chambers concurred on the ground that the decree was ex facie invalid and considered that Jangli Lal v. Laddu Ram (1) was an analogous case.

We are unable to accept either of the reasons adopted by the Courts below. The decree is certainly in existence; it is on the record for all who have eyes to see; a decree is not invalid merely because it is issued against a minor.

SANO v. PURAN SINGH

A reference is made in Jangli Lal v. Laddu Ram Marwari (1) to a principle laid down in Chuck v. Cremer (2) that there must be 'a valid decree in existence, which has not ceased to be operative and is capable of execution', but this clearly means that the decree must exist and that it has not been satisfied and the relief granted is of such a nature that it is capable of execution.

It has no reference to the procedure of the Court which issued the decree.

With all respect, Jangli Lal v. Laddu Ram Marwari (1) appears to us to miss the real point, which is not, whether a decree has no force, but how and by what Court the decree is to be rendered of no force.

However that may be, the matter is concluded by the decision in Kalipal Sarkar v. Hari Mohan Dalal (3), and Rashid-un-Nissa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (4) and there is no difference in principle between those two cases and this.

The broad clear rule is that an executing Court has no jurisdiction to criticize or go behind the decree; all that concerns it is the execution of it. If the decree should be annulled, that is not the function of an executing Court.

We accept the appeal with costs throughout, set aside the orders of the Courts below and direct that execution be allowed.

SANO v. PURAN SINGH

Judge, Saugor in Civil Appeal No. 88 of 1921, dated the 24th October 1921.

Messrs. F. R. Pandit, R. B. and G. L. Subhedar, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Gupta for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who was the daughter of one Gopal, sued to set aside a sale deed executed in favour of defendant by Mt. Nonibahu, who was the widow of Gopal. The plaintiff is the daughter of Gopal's first wife, also called Nonibahu.

Both Courts have dismissed the plaintiff's suit, holding that as Mt. Nonibahu was a Jain widow she had an absolute power of disposal over the estate inherited by her from her husband which was not ancestral, and that there was legal necessity.

The plaintiff makes this second appeal on the ground that the custom by which a Jain widow has an absolute power of disposal over her husband's unancestral property is not proved, and that there was no legal necessity for alienation.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the law as laid down by the Privy Council is, that Jains are Hindu dissenters and when their customs are set up they must be proved like other customs varying the ordinary law and, when so proved, effect must be given to them : cf. Sheokuarhai v. Jeo Raj (1), Sheo Singh Rai v. Dakho (2) and Chotay Lall v. Chunnoo Lall (3). It has been held in Gangadhar Ram Rao v. Rajah of Pittapore (4) that, when a custom or usage, whether in regard to a tenure or a contract or a family right, is repeatedly brought to the notice of the Courts of a country, the Courts may hold that custom or usage to be introduced into the law without the necessity of proof in each individual case. It was also held in Harnath Pershad v. Mandil Dass (5), that judicial decisions recognizing the existence of a disputed custom amongst the Jains of one place are very relevant as evidence of the existence of the same custom amongst the Jains of another place. In that case it was further held that a childless Jain widow acquires an absolute right in her husband's separate property. This case was from Arrah but it was held that there was nothing to differentiate the Jains at Arrah from the Jains elsewhere. So also in Shimbhu Nath v. Gayan Chand (6), it was held that where a custom alleged to be followed by any particular class of people is in dispute, judicial decisions in which such custom has been recognized as the custom of the class in question are good evidence of the existence of such custom. This was a case from the Saharanpur District.

The parties in the present case are residents of Saugor and the existence of such a custom among the Jains of Saugor has been recognised by this Court in the unreported case of Mojilal v. Mt. Gori Bahu (Second Appeal No. 416 of 1897) where the existence of the custom that a Jain widow has an absolute power over self acquired property inherited by her from her husband was admitted. This is sufficient for the purposes of the present case. It has been contended that this decision refers to Pawar Jains whereas the parties to the present case belong to a different section of the Jain community, but it was never pleaded in the Courts below that there was any distinction as regards widows of the different subdivisions of Jains. The plaintiff's witnesses 1 and 3 have themselves admitted the existence of the custom. In these circumstances, there are no grounds for interference with the findings of the lower Courts as to the existence of the custom.

This is sufficient for the decision of the appeal, but the lower appellate Court has also dealt with the question of legal necessity. The findings of the Courts below as to the financial position of the widow are findings of fact which cannot be disturbed in second appeal. It has been found by the lower appellate Landlord and tenant—Rent, additional, in respect of fruit trees, legality of—Abwab—Custom—Bengal Tenancy Act VIII of 1849, s. 153—Dispute as to amount of rent payable—Appeal, second, whether lies.

Abwabs have been abolished under the Regulations for many years but the right to Bankar, Jhalkar and Phulkar was always an exception from the abolitions made by the Regulations and rent in respect of fruit trees or other classes of trees may well be charged in addition to the ordinary rent either under an agreement between the landlord and tenant, or if any custom to that effect can be made out. [p. 464, col. 1.]

A custom whereby the landlord is entitled to charge a certain rate of rent in respect of fruit trees in addition to the ordinary rent payable for the land is not illegal. [p. 464, col. 2.]

Where, in answer to a suit for rent, the tenant pleads that the rent claimed by the landlord in respect of fruit trees is not payable, the question is one relating to the amount of rent payable and a second appeal is, therefore, competent in the case. [p. 465, col. 1.]

Kanai Mahaldar v. Madhu Sudan Ghose, 6 C. L. J. 669, referred to.

Appeal under section 10 of the Letter Patent.

Messrs. K. P. Jayasmal and M. Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. K. Jha, for the Respondent.

Dawson-Miller C. J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted by the plaintiff as landlord against the defendant as tenant claiming rent of a certain holding which had been purchased by the defendant from the previous tenant. The area of the holding was 5 bighas 7 cottahs 18 dhurs and the jama recorded in the Record-of-Rights was Rs. 16 and some odd annas. In addition to the jama so recorded the plaintiff claimed certain rental under a custom of the village in respect of palm trees from the time when they became juice yielding at certain rates. The plaintiff alleged with regard to this part of the claim that under the custom of the village a raiyyat who has palm trees pays to the malik for each tree which becomes shirbar (yielding juice) 4 annas per tree for the Baishaki season 4 annas for the Ghaur season and 2 annas for the Bisanti or Aghani season and further alleged that he had been realising this all along.

The defendant in his written statement did not in terms traverse the allegation about custom. The written statement is not very sufficiently worded but his contention was that he was not responsible for anything more than Rs. 16 odd which was recorded in the record of rights.

Both the learned Munsif before whom the case came and the Subordinate Judge in appeal disallowed that part of the plaintiff's claim which related to the palm trees. It appears that there was no entry in the Record-of-Rights with regard to any such custom as that which was relied upon by the plaintiff. The rent recorded there was Rs. 16-1-1½ and that was the rent which the defendant admitted to be due. The learned Munsif considered that anything over and above that rental in respect of the palm trees was something in the nature of Abwab and was, therefore, not recoverable according to law.

The learned Subordinate Judge, when the case went before him on appeal, pointed out that, according to the plaintiff, the tenants pay sairat for palm trees under a custom which had existed for a long time. He then refers in detail to the evidence of the various witnesses who had deposed to this custom. He points out that the witnesses could not say when the sairat had first of all been recovered, which is hardly surprising if indeed the custom had existed for a long time and he adds that, "It is clear from the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses Nos. 4 and 6 that the sairat for palmyra palms is realised by the Raj as customary dues of the Raj. It is not realised as part of the rent of the holding. According to the plaintiff's witness No. 2 the sairat is claimed in addition to the khatian jam." The issue, therefore, which had to be determined was whether or not the plaintiff had made out the custom which he set up and under which he claimed this sairat. The learned Judge does not in terms come to a clear finding as to whether such a custom had been made out or not but he drew attention to the fact that the sairat for palms was not shown in the rent receipts granted to the defendant. He found as a fact, however, that papers were kept in the Raj sherista some of which had been filed from the year 1311 to prove the realisation of sairat for the palmyra palms and he accepted these entries as genuine and did not consider, as had been suggested, that they were forged. In this state of affairs, it seems to me that the learned Judge ought to have come to a clear finding one way or the other whether this custom whereby the landlord collected this additional rent for the palm trees had been proved or not, but all he says upon that point is: "I do not think that a landlord can claim anything more than the legal rent under any such custom." By the legal rent it is clear that the learned Subordinate Judge meant the rent recorded in the Record of Rights which did not include the rent said to be payable in respect of the trees. He then adds: "A few years payment by the defendant will not give any legal right to the plaintiff to such impositions" and that is all he said about it. It seems to me that the learned Judge did not think it necessary to determine one way or the other whether the custom had been made out because he considered that even if such a custom did exist it was a custom regarding certain illegal impositions which even a custom could not legalise. In my opinion if that was his view it was not justified. It is true that ahwabs have been abolished under the Regulations for many years but the right to Bankar, Jhalkar and Phulkar was always an exception from the abolitions made by the Regulations and rent in respect of fruit trees or other classes of trees may well be charged in addition to the ordinary rent either under an agreement between the landlord and tenant or if any custom to that effect can be made out.

From the decision of the Subordinate Judge an appeal was preferred to this Court. The learned Judge before whom the case came considered that the decision of the lower Court could not be disturbed. His view was that the settlement of the land with the tenant included not merely the settlement of the land for agricultural purposes but also for the purposes of collecting and using the fruits of the trees and that, therefore, the tenant being entitled to the use and occupation of the land was entitled without the payment of any further rent to the fruits of the trees. He further was of opinion that if by any custom there was a sair for palm trees it must come under the term rent as defined in the Bengal Tenancy Act where those palm trees stand on the holdings." So I take it that the question in this case is what is the rent payable by the defendant for his land." That question the learned Judge considered was answered conclusively by the Survey khuniā which¹ stated the rent to be Rs. 16-1-1½. He, therefore, dismissed the appeal.

In my opinion, with great respect to the learned Judge, he failed to appreciate that a custom such as that set up by the plaintiff in this case might be a perfectly legal custom and that, if it could be proved to the satisfaction of the Court, the plaintiff would be entitled in addition to the rent to the sair or rent for the use of the palm trees. As, in my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge did not come to any definite conclusion upon this question of custom I think that this case should go back to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for him to arrive at a finding as to whether or not the custom alleged by the plaintiff in his plaint has been made out to his satisfaction. The custom there alleged is: "Under the custom of the village a rāiyat who has palm trees pays to the malik for each tree which becomes shirbar (yielding juice) 4 annas per tree for the Baishaki season, 4 annas for the Ghaur season and 2 annas for the Basanti or Agham season." If in fact that custom can be made out it is not an illegal custom but a perfectly valid one and one which ought to be given effect to. In arriving at a conclusion upon this point the learned Judge will, of course, bear in mind the facts which it is necessary to prove in order to establish a custom.

RAY BINODE BIHARI BOSE v. TOKHI SINGH

The only other point which was taken in this appeal was that no second appeal was permissible under section 153 to the Bengal Tenancy Act. In my opinion the question which arises in this case is clearly one relating to the amount of the rent payable. It is, therefore, a case which is excepted from the provisions of the section and a second appeal is permissible.

The case will remain upon the file of this Court and the learned Judge will return his finding upon the issue stated within two months of this date. I do not think any additional evidence ought to be called in this case. The learned Subordinate Judge will determine the issue upon the evidence already upon the record.

Mullick, J—I agree. I have only to add with regard to the preliminary objection that the case upon which the learned Vakil for the respondent relies, namely, Kanai Mahaldar v. Madhu Sudan Ghose (1) does not shew what were the facts of that case. On the other hand, the facts in the present case are similar to those in second appeal No. 815 of 1901 before the Calcutta High Court in the case of Nabu Sheikh v. Jogendra Nath Bhaitra. There the plaintiff claimed at a certain jama and the defendant pleaded that the jama was included in a larger jama and, therefore, asserted that the jama claimed was not due. It was held that the decision was a decision as to the amount of rent and a second appeal lay.

*Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 70—Division

Civil Courts.*

In a proceeding under section 70 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Sub-Divisional Officer passed the following order :—" Parties heard. The kharra seems fair and is accepted. The landlords's share, if not accepted, may be sold and proceeds deposited in the Treasury." There was a subsequent order to the effect, "Sale proceeds deposited into the Treasury. Case disposed of."

Held (1) that both orders must be read together as a whole, and, taken together, they amounted to a final order under section 70 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, enforceable as a decree ;

(2) that a Civil Court, therefore, had no jurisdiction to pass a decree for rent in respect of the period dealt with by the orders of the Sub-Divisional Officer.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Gaya, dated the 30th August 1921, modifying a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Gaya, dated the 12th July 1920.

Mr. N. C. Sinha, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. N. Ray, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—The only question in this appeal is as to the claim for rent of 1925 and 1926. The Courts below held that no award could be made by the Civil Court in respect of these years, inasmuch as the matter had been decided by the Revenue Court under section 70 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The contention on behalf of the landlords who are the appellants, is that there is no final order enforceable as a decree passed by the

BABU RAM RAI v. MAHESHWAR PRASAD SINGH

Revenue Court. The orders are in the following terms and in each case the final order consists of two parts. As regards the year 1325 the order is as follows :—" 28th February 1918 parties heard. The Khasra seems fair and is accepted. The landlord's share if not accepted, may be sold and proceeds deposited in the Treasury" " 16th March 1918: "Sale proceeds deposited into the Treasury by Chalan No. 75, dated 15th March 1918. Case disposed of." In the case of the year 1326 the order is as follows :—" 20th January 1919 Khasra examined. There is no objection before me by any party. I approve the khasra" "The landlords have refused to accept the Hakmi share of the crops. The same will be sold and the sale proceeds will be deposited in the Treasury to their credit. Issue orders to the Sarpanch accordingly." " 3rd January 1919. Sale proceeds Rs. 140-0-3 credited into Treasury by Chalan No. 15 dated 27th January 1919 case disposed of " with regard to the second order, that is, for the year 1326, the learned Vakil for the appellants concedes that that is a final order enforceable as a decree, but he contends that the order dealing with the year 1325 is not a final order or one enforceable as a decree, because there is no direction that the money is to be paid to the credit of the landlords. The order must be read as a whole and it comes to this. The Takhrmina papers were considered by the Sub-divisional Officer and the division was approved. That means that the crop was divided between the two parties landlord and tenant. With regard to the landlord's share a further direction was given that if he did not accept it then it should be sold and the money deposited in the Treasury. The money that was deposited was the sale proceeds of the landlord's share and, consequently, it was his money and no further direction in my opinion was necessary and the landlord would be entitled on that order to withdraw the money. There is clearly a final order enforceable as a decree and the provisions of section 70 of the Act have been fully complied with. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal but without costs.

The cross-appeal is not pressed and is dismissed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 63—Mortgage—Accession to mortgaged property—Tenancies acquired by mortgagee—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151—Remand under inherent power of Court—Order whether can be re-considered at final hearing.

Tenancy lands which are acquired by a mortgagee in possession by virtue of an ejectment decree form an accession to the mortgaged property and the mortgagee is entitled to such lands on redemption, provided he pays to the mortgagee the expense of acquiring them.

No appeal lies from an order of remand made in the exercise of the inherent power of an Appellate Court, and that Court has jurisdiction to consider the correctness of the order of remand when the case comes before it for final decision.

Appeal from a decision of the Additional District Judge, Saran, dated the 30th June, 1921, modifying a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Saran, dated the 26th March, 1918.

Messrs. C. C. Das and B. N. Mitter, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. Sultan Ahmed and Sivasaran Lal, for the Respondents.

Das, J.—I think there was a serious error in the order of remand to which I was a party. In dealing with the dispute in regard to the nine bighas of tenancy lands which were of Harakh, I said as follows in the order of remand: "so far as the tenancy lands of Harakh are concerned (and there is no dispute that the 9 bighas of Harakh were tenancy lands) the question is a little more difficult. It appears that the mortgagees in their suit for rent against Harakh got a decree for ejectment against him. The learned.

BHIKARI BEHERA v. SRIMATI SITAMONI DEVI

Vakil on behalf of the respondents argued that as soon as ejectment takes place the raivati interest is extinguished and the landlord gets into possession freed from the tenancy. That undoubtedly is so; but the question still remains whether the mortgagees treated these acquisitions as merged in the mortgage-security or not. The question is again one of intention and I am not satisfied that the learned District Judge has properly considered all the evidence in the case. The arguments of Mr. C. C. Das have convinced me that the view expressed by me in the order of remand is wholly erroneous. I have no doubt whatever that tenancy lands which are acquired by a mortgagee in possession by virtue of an ejectment decree form an accession to the mortgaged property, and that the mortgagor is entitled to such lands on redemption, provided he pays to the mortgagee the expense of acquiring it. The learned Additional District Judge has very properly proceeded on the order of remand; and I wish to make it clear that if we are obliged to vary the decree passed by him, it is not because there is any error in his judgment, but because the order of remand, upon which he has proceeded, is itself wrong.

A question was raised before us whether it is open to the appellants to challenge the correctness of the order of remand. The remand was not under the provisions of O. XLII. r. 23; and, there being no appeal from an order of remand in the exercise of the inherent powers of the Court, this Court, in my opinion, has complete powers to investigate the correctness of the order.

In regard to the other question raised in this appeal, the finding of the learned Judge is a finding of fact, and is binding on us in second appeal.

I would vary the decree passed by the Court below by providing that, upon paying to the mortgagees defendants the expense of acquiring it, the plaintiffs do recover khas possession of (nominally) nine bighas of kusht land referred to as nine bighas of kasht of Hardeo, Jagdeo and Nand, sons of Harakh, in the judgment of the learned Judge.

There will be no order as to costs incurred in this Court.

Ross, J.—I agree to the order proposed.

An alienation by a Hindu widow is not void but merely voidable. On the other hand, a mere benami transaction whereby a Hindu widow places certain property in the names of alienees not on their own behalf but on behalf of herself, does not amount to an alienation and confers no title on the alienees.

It may be that in certain cases a defendant has no locus standi to call in question a transaction alleged by the plaintiff, but where a plaintiff is seeking a declaration from the Court, the Court before granting the declaration ought to be satisfied that the plaintiff has an interest in the property in respect of which the declaration is claimed which is a valid and subsisting interest.

JUDGMENT.

Dawson-Miller, C. J.—The suits out of which these two appeals arise were instituted by two ladies, Sitamoni Devi and Ram Bhawani Devi, against the defendant who is the appellant before us, claiming a declaration of their title to a 1 anna 7 gauls share in the Zemindari Patua Bhagabanpur Samil, Mouza Syamsundarpur, and for confirmation of their possession or, in the alternative, for the ejectment of the defendant if he should be found to be in possession.

BHIKARI BEHERA v. SRIMATI SITAMONI DEVI

It appears that the property which is in dispute and which constitutes a 1 anna 7 gandas share of the Zemindari originally belonged to Birai Behera and after his death his widow Chemai Devi remained in possession as a Hindu widow. On the 1st August 1918 Chemai Devi by two kobalas of that date purported to transfer the property in equal shares to the two plaintiffs in the present suits. At that time the defendant Bhikari Behera was apparently living with Chemai Devi as her son and was treated in that capacity. He is found by the decision of the District Judge on appeal to have been in possession of the property at all events during Chemai Devi's life and looking after it presumably on her account. After the date of the execution of the kobalas in August 1918 it is found as a fact that the defendant still remained in possession of the property. It is further found as a fact that at no time since that date up to the date of the present suits in 1920 did the plaintiffs ever obtain possession of the property, and although there is no direct finding that the defendant was in possession after the death of Chemai Devi, I think it must be presumed upon those findings that he in fact was the person who was in possession up to the date of the suits. When the plaintiffs endeavoured to obtain mutation of names in the Land Registration Department after the transaction of 1918 their claim was opposed by the defendant who alleged that he was the adopted son of Chemai Devi and her late husband Birai Behera. The application for registration was accordingly dismissed and the present suits were, shortly afterwards, instituted, as I have said, in June, 1920.

The Munsif before whom the case came for trial was of opinion that the transfer made by Chemai Devi was a genuine transfer and conferred title upon the plaintiffs. He was further of opinion that the defendant had not made out his case that he was the adopted son of Chemai and her late husband and he accordingly entered judgment for the plaintiffs and granted them the declaration which they claimed.

The case went on appeal to the District Judge who, after reviewing the evidence at considerable length, came to the conclusion, for reasons which it is not necessary to enter into as his conclusions are binding upon this Court, that the transaction of 1918 upon which the title of the plaintiffs is based was a purely benami transaction and that the property was transferred into the names of the plaintiffs in order to protect the interests of Chemai Devi against one of the co-sharers who was an influential man and endeavouring to obtain the property from her possession. He arrived at the conclusion, therefore, that no interest ever passed to the plaintiffs by reason of that transaction except in so far as they became benamidars for Chemai Devi. He further found as a fact that the evidence of the plaintiffs as to their possession was quite inconclusive and unsatisfactory and that there was sufficient evidence for the defendant to show that the property had remained in possession of Chemai. On these findings the learned District Judge overruled the decision of the Munsif and refused to grant the declaration asked for. In my opinion he was perfectly right in so doing. It must be remembered that this was a suit asking for a declaration and the very ground upon which the claim to a declaration was based was that the plaintiffs had acquired on their own behalf a title in the property from the late holder and that they had been in possession as owners ever since but that a cloud had been cast upon their title by the refusal of the Land Registration Department to enter their names in place of the late holder. If the plaintiffs should fail to satisfy the Court either that they had any valid title to the property or that they were in possession then it seems to me quite clear that no Court ought, in such circumstances, to grant a declaration such as that prayed.

The plaintiffs, however, were not satisfied with the decision of the learned District Judge and came on second appeal to this Court. The case was heard before Mr. Justice Ross, who, with great respect to the learned Judge, took a view of the law which, in my opinion, cannot be supported. He was bound by the findings of the lower Court that the conveyance or the alleged conveyance in favour of the plaintiffs were without consideration and mere benami transactions but he was much impressed by the fact that the defendant had failed at the trial to make out that he was in fact the adopted son of Chemai Devi. He considered, accordingly, that the defendant had really no locus standi and was not, therefore, entitled to question the nature of the transaction upon which the plaintiff's title was based. But in arriving at that conclusion the learned Judge seems to have assumed that there was in fact an alienation by the widow which was valid until it could be set aside. It is quite true that an alienation by a Hindu widow is not void but merely voidable but, with great respect to the learned Judge, he seems to have lost sight of the fact that the transaction in the present case was not an alienation which transferred the property to the alienees but was merely a beanni transaction whereby the property was placed in the names of the alienees not on their own behalf but on behalf of the widow who has since died and this fact having been proved at the trial I think that the learned Judge was bound to take notice of it with the result that he ought to have held upon the facts proved that the plaintiffs had no title whatever after the death of Chemai Devi whom alone they represented. It may be that in certain cases a defendant has no locus standi to call in question the transaction alleged by a plaintiff, but where a plaintiff is seeking a declaration from the Court it seems to me that the Court ought to be satisfied that the plaintiff has an interest in the property in respect of which the declaration is claimed which is a valid and subsisting interest. In the present cases the plaintiffs have entirely failed to prove any such interest and even if the point had not been taken by the defendant or even if the defendant had not been entitled to take such a point the evidence is now before the Court and the Court was entitled to demand evidence in support of the plaintiffs' case. That case having failed it seems to me that the Court cannot in the circumstances and upon the facts proved grant the declaration prayed. In my opinion these appeals must be allowed. The decision of Mr. Justice Ross will be set aside and the decree of the learned District Judge will be restored. The appellant is entitled to his costs here and in all the lower Courts.

Hindu Law—Gift—Acceptance by donee, what amounts to.

Under the Hindu Law express acceptance by the donee is necessary for the completion of a gift. [p. 470, col. 2.]

Mohamed Abdul Nayeem v. Jhonti Mehton, 41 Ind. Cas. 359, dissented from.

Even if it is assumed that, under the Hindu Law, acceptance of a gift by the donee may be presumed until his dissent is signified, still upon the whole case the Court must be satisfied that there was acceptance by the donee, before it can give effect to a deed of gift upon which a party to the suit may rely. [p. 470, col. 2.]

- Acceptance of a deed of gift is prima facie evidence of the acceptance of the gift, but the whole conduct of the donee in connection with the acceptance must be carefully scrutinised for the purpose of determining the question whether there was in fact an acceptance of the gift. [p. 471, col. 1.]

Acceptance of a gift need not be made at once, but it must be made during the lifetime of the donor and while he is still capable of giving. [p. 471, col. 2.]

Whenever a question of acceptance is raised, there are two points which ought to be very carefully considered by the Court; first, whether the donee is in possession of the deed of gift, and, secondly, whether he is in possession of the gifted properties. [p. 471, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the appellant for a declaration of his title to certain properties specified in the plaint and for confirmation of his possession and for an order restraining the defendant No. 1 from doing certain acts of ownership in relation to those properties. The case of the plaintiff is, that Raghunath, who was the owner of these properties, made a gift of these properties to him by a registered deed of gift, dated the 24th of March 1905, and that he obtained possession of these properties on the 24th of March 1905, and that ever since he has been in possession thereof. It is not disputed that a deed of gift was in fact executed by Raghunath on the 24th of March 1905, but it is contended on behalf of the defendants, who are the respondents before us, that the deed of gift was a colourable transaction and was not acted upon, and that in fact Raghunath, by another document, dated the 26th of April 1905, purported "to release" these lands in favour of his wife and others. The learned District Judge has come to the conclusion that there was no acceptance of the gift by or on behalf of the plaintiff, and in that view, agreeing with the decision of the Court of first instance, he dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The short question before us is, whether the finding of the learned Judge in the Court below to the effect that there was no acceptance of the gift by or on behalf of the plaintiff, can be regarded as a legal finding binding on this Court in second appeal. Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick strongly contends that the learned Judge, in so far as he placed the onus upon the plaintiff, clearly committed an error of law and that it was not for the plaintiff to prove that there was any acceptance of the gift by or on his behalf. Reliance was placed upon a decision of this Court Maulvi Muhammad Abdul Nayeem v. Jhonti Mahton (1). It was indeed laid down in that case that it was essential to a Hindu gift that there should be acceptance by the donee, but the learned Judge thought that acceptance could be express or implied, and that it should be presumed unless dissent is signified. The learned Judge referred to the view expressed in the 15th volume of the Laws of England, at page 418, which is as follows. "Express-acceptance by the donee is not necessary to complete a gift. It has long been settled that the acceptance of a gift by the donee is to be presumed until his dissent is signified even though he is not aware of the gift, and this is equally so, although the gift may be of an onerous nature or of what is called 'an onerous trust' I have myself some doubt whether this statement of law is equally applicable to cases under Hindu Law. In England it is not necessary that there should be express acceptance by the donee. Under the Hindu Law, as I understand it, express acceptance is necessary for the completion of a gift, and one may refer to the definition of "Gift" in section 122 of the Transfer of Property Act: "Gift is the transfer of certain existing moveable or immoveable property made voluntarily and without consideration, by one person, called the donor, to another, called the donee, and accepted by or on behalf of the donee."

In my opinion it is unnecessary to express any final opinion on this point. Let it be assumed that acceptance of a gift by the donee may be presumed until his dissent is signified. But still, upon the whole case, the Court must be satisfied that there was acceptance by the donee, whether express or implied, before the Court can give effect to a deed of gift upon which a party to the suit may rely. The learned Judge in the Court below says that the plaintiff has failed to adduce evidence of acceptance and if we are to examine the facts in this case it is difficult to come to the conclusion that there was in fact any acceptance by or on behalf of the minor. Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick has referred to the terms of the deed of release and his argument is that the deed of release completely establishes that there was acceptance of the gift by the father of the donee on behalf of the donee, who was at the time of the gift a minor, and he expressly refers to the following passage in the deed of release: "Whereas on account of some indifference with my wife and others I have before this executed a deed of gift, dated the 24th March 1905, in favour of Jamuna Prasad, son of Ganesh Narain Singh, inhabitant of Mahuain, Pargana Charkawan, District Gaya, who is my cousin, in respect to the shares, lands and houses aforesaid and got it registered and in that deed of gift certain conditions relating to the performance of personal services and to meeting the expenses of my daughters' marriages were laid down, and when I demanded from Ganesh Narain Singh the expenses of (my) daughter's marriage he totally refused to pay it and expressly told me that he would not meet those expenses. Thereupon I told him that as he himself refused to fulfil the conditions of the deed of gift and to pay the expenses, there could be no expectations of future benefit from Jamuna Prasad who was then three years old and was merely an infant, and that, therefore, it would be better that he should return back my original deed of gift. Accordingly, Babu Ganesh Narain Singh has to-day returned back the said deed of gift in the presence of certain reliable persons on taking from me Rs. 79-9-0 on account of expenses incurred and now the said deed of gift has become invalid and inoperative, and it was not given effect to." The argument is that there is a clear admission in this document that the original deed of gift, as made over to Babu Ganesh Narain Singh, the father of Jamuna Prasad, and it was contended before us that the acceptance of the deed of gift operated as an acceptance of the gift. But if we are to examine the alleged admission contained in this document it is necessary for us to examine the whole document in order to see how far the admission helps the case of the plaintiff. It is clear from this document that there were certain conditions in the gift more or less of an onerous nature and that the donor demanded the preformance of the obligations with which the gift was burdened, and that Babu Ganesh Narain Singh, on behalf of his minor son, declined to perform those obligations and that thereupon the donor asked Babu Ganesh Narain Singh to return the deed of gift which Babu Ganesh Narain did. Now I quite agree that the acceptance of a deed of gift is prima facie evidence of the acceptance of a gift; but then the whole conduct in connection with the acceptance must be carefully scrutinized for the purpose of the determination of the question whether there was in fact an acceptance of the gift. Now, what are the facts stated in the deed of release. They are, first, that the document was made over to Babu Ganesh Narain Singh; secondly, that the donor called upon Babu Ganesh Narain Singh on behalf of his minor son to perform the obligations with which the gift was burdened; thirdly, that Babu Ganesh Narain Singh (to quote the words of the document) "totally refused to do so"; fourthly, the donor thereupon called upon Babu Ganesh Narain Singh to return the deed of gift and Babu Ganesh Narain Singh did so. Now, upon those facts, the question arises whether there was in fact an acceptance of the gift by Babu Ganesh Narain Singh on behalf of the minor. It should be noticed that, acceptance need not be made at once but that it must be made during the life time of the donor and while he is still capable of giving. I am unable to agree, having regard to the circumstance stated in the deed of release, that the acceptance of the deed of gift operated in this particular case as an acceptance of the gift. As I have stated, the gift was burdened with various obligations and it was necessary for Babu Ganesh Narain Singh, as the father of the donee, to examine the deed before he could possibly come to the conclusion whether the gift should or should not be accepted, and the fact that he returned the deed of gift, in my opinion, establishes that he did not accept the gift on behalf of the minor.

Whenever a question of acceptance is raised, there are two points which ought to be very carefully considered by the Court: first, whether the donee is in possession of the deed of gift; and, secondly, whether the donee is in possession of the properties. Admittedly, the deed of gift has been produced by the defendants. It was the case of the plaintiff in the Courts below that he was in possession of this deed of gift and that it was stolen from him by the donor. That case has failed in the Courts below and it has not been persisted in in this Court. On the question of possession of the properties, the Courts below have concurrently come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has never been in possession of the properties in dispute.

In my opinion the finding of the learned Judge in the Court below on the question of acceptance is a finding of fact and is binding on us in second appeal. I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

No. 103 of 1921.

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.Hindu Law—Joint family—Partition—Joint property—Burden of proof—Separation in food, effect of—Mutual dealings—Presumption.

The question whether the members of a Hindu family are joint or separate is ultimately a question of fact to be determined on the evidence produced before the Court, but where a nucleus of joint family properties is admitted, the initial onus is on the party who asserts that there was a separation to prove that the separation did in fact take place. Cesser of commensality is one of the matters to be taken into consideration by the Court in arriving at a finding as to whether there has been separation or not, but it is not by any means conclusive. [p. 472, Col 2.]

Where there have been dealings between the parties themselves, that circumstance may be taken as very strong evidence in favour of the view that there has been a partition. [p. 47, Col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Saran, dated the 28th April, 1920.

Messrs. Sushil Madhab Mullick and Sambhu Saran, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Naresh Chandra Sinha and Harihar Prasad Singh, for the Respondents.

Das, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the appellant for partition of joint family properties. The defence, which has succeeded in the Court below, is that there was a previous partition and that the plaintiff is not entitled to a fresh partition of the properties. No documentary evidence was adduced in the case; but the learned Subordinate Judge has relied upon the testimony of one or two of the witnesses produced on behalf of the defendants and has found in favour of the case set up by the defendants. The learned Subordinate Judge attached considerable value to the fact that, admittedly, there has been a cesser of commensality. The view of the learned Subordinate Judge may be stated in his own words. He says as follows: "It is not the case of the plaintiff that the parties have been joint in every respect. He admits separation in mess, whereas the defendants plead complete separation, so it is for the plaintiff more or less to show that the parties have been joint." With this conclusion I am unable to agree. The cesser of commensality is no doubt one of the matters to be taken into consideration by the Court when the question in debate before the Court is whether the parties are joint or separate, but it by no means concludes the question. As this case must go back to the learned Subordinate Judge, it is desirable to state that the question whether the parties are joint or separate is ultimately a question of fact to be determined on the evidence produced before the Court. In this case it is admitted that there is a nucleus of joint family properties. That being so, the initial onus is upon the party who asserts that there was a separation and it is for the party asserting separation to prove that the separation did in fact take place. As it is pointed out in Mayne's Hindu Law, numerous circumstances may be "set out as being more or less conclusive of a partition having taken place, such as separate food, dwelling, or worship; separate enjoyment of the property; separate income and expenditure; business transactions with each other and the like." "But," as Mr. Mayne points out, "all these circumstances are merely evidence, and not conclusive evidence, of the fact of partition." To quote again the words of Mr. Mayne: "Partition is a new status, and when it is brought about by consensus of the members of a co-parcenary they must intend that their condition as co-parceners shall cease. It is not sufficient that they should alter the mode of holding their property. They must alter, and intend to alter, their title to it. They must cease to be joint owners and become separate owners. And as, on the one hand, the mere cesser of commensality and joint worship, the existence of separate transactions, the division of income, or the holding of land in separate portions, or a mere definition of shares in revenue and village papers do not establish partition, unless such steps were taken with a view to partition; so, on the other hand, if a division in status has in fact been effected between the members of the family, it is not necessary that they should proceed to a physical separation of the particular pieces of their property." (Mayne on Hindu Law and Usage, Ninth Edition, page 717). But it has been pointed out in more than one case that where there are dealings between the parties themselves, that circumstance may be taken as very strong evidence in favour of the view that there has been a partition.

HARNARAYAN PANDE v. SURESH PANDE

In this case the dispute between the parties arose during the Survey proceedings and a petition of compromise was filed before the Settlement Officer which settled all the disputes of the parties so far as the immoveable properties were concerned. That petition runs as follows: "Your petitioners submit that there was a dispute between us"—all the names are names mentioned—"which has been compromised in the presence of the *punches*that both parties should receive half and half of all the ancestral properties, zemindari, kashikari, etc., over which we, the parties, have possession and occupation and with respect to which the names of us, the parties, have already been entered; and that the names of Mahadeva Pande, son of Nandkeshwar Pande, Tapesar Pande, son of Abhiram Pande, and Suresh Pande, son of Ram Yad Pande, be recorded with respect to three-fourths, in equal shares, and the name of Har Narayan Pandey, son of Gopi Pande, be recorded with respect to one-fourth of the zemindari bearing tauji No. 4964, in which five-annas four-pies share has been recently purchased. The signature of the punches are affixed below. Therefore, these few words have been written in the form of Sulahnama, so that the same may be of use when necessary". Now, the properties to which this petition refers, are properties entered in Schedule I and properties Nos. 1 and 2 in Schedule II of the petition of compromise. It seems to me that, so far as these properties are concerned, there has been a complete settlement between the parties; and the learned Subordinate Judge should have given effect to this petition of compromise. Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha states that the Record of-Rights was, as a matter of fact prepared on the basis of this petition of compromise. If that be so, and we have no reason to doubt that that is so, the plaintiff is still entitled to a partition by metes and bounds of those properties; and we are assured that there are some properties which have been recorded in the joint names of the plaintiff and the defendants. So far as tauji No. 4964 is concerned, the interest of the parties is clearly specified in the petition of compromise and the plaintiff is clearly entitled to a partition by metes and bounds of this property. So far as property No 3 in Schedule No. II is concerned, it is pointed out that a stranger is interested in this property and it cannot, therefore, be partitioned by metes and bounds. With regard to the properties in Schedule No. I, the partition will be on the basis of the Record of-Rights which we accept as correctly defining the rights of the parties.

I now come to the zarpeshgi bonds which are set forth in Schedule II of the plaint. The right of the plaintiff to have a partition of these bonds must depend upon the question whether the parties are joint or separate. I have already said that the learned Subordinate Judge was not correct in placing the whole onus upon the plaintiff. We think that this question must be again determined by the learned Subordinate Judge. If he comes to the conclusion that the parties are joint, he must direct an enquiry in order to ascertain what the joint family properties consist of, and he must give a share in these joint family properties to the plaintiff. This enquiry must be in respect of the zarpeshgi bonds set out in Schedule I and the properties set out in Schedules III and IV of the plaint.

I would accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge and remand the case to him for disposal according to the directions given in this judgment. Costs will abide the result and will be disposed of by the learned Subordinate Judge.

Ross, J.—I agree.

The word “resumption” in section 14 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act means an unequivocal demand for possession so as to operate as a final election by the landlord to re-enter upon the land. [p. 475, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Judicial Commissioner, Chota Nagpur, dated the 6th May 1921, confirming a decision of the Munsif, Hazaribagh, dated the 23rd February, 1920.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad, for the Appellant.Mr. Bankim Ch. De for the Respondents.

Das, J—We are concerned in this litigation with 7.68 acres and 8.57 acres of lands lying in mauza Chepa Kalan which admittedly was the Jaigir of Brijbhukan and his male descendants. Brijbhukan was succeeded by his son Seodayal who died in 1859. Seodayal was succeeded by his widow Brijraj Kuari who it appears was allowed to remain in possession of the whole mauza by the Ramgarh Raj up to the time of her death which occurred some time in 1895. Upon her death one Udai Nath took possession of the mauza. In 1896 the Raj instituted a suit for resumption of the mauza as against Udai Nath. It appears that Udai Nath died sometime in 1896 and the suit abated upon his death. Upon the death of Udai Nath his widow Ranjit Kuari took possession of the mauza. The Raj instituted another suit against Ranjit Kuari, but it was dismissed on the ground that the previous suit having abated against her husband the Raj was not competent to institute a suit against her. It appears that upon the death of Ranjit Kuari a nephew of Udai Nath took possession of the village in 1907. The Raj thereupon instituted a suit against Udai Nath's nephew and on the 12th January 1914 it got a decree as against the defendant in that suit. On the 21st of June 1915 the Raj took possession of the mauza. The disputed lands have all along been in the possession of the defendants, and, having resumed what the Raj claims to be a resumable tenure, the Raj instituted a suit on the 20th of August 1919 as against the defendants for khas possession of the disputed lands. The plaintiff's case was that an under-tenure was created in favour of the defendants by either Brijbhukan or Seodayal and that upon the resumption of the tenure the under-tenure came to an end and that the Raj became entitled to recover possession of the disputed lands. The defendants' case was that the disputed lands were settled with them by the Raj and that the settlement was confirmed by Udai Nath and that the defendants were the tenants of Udai Nath and that the suit against them is barred by limitation. Both the Courts have dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that it is barred by lapse of time. The only question which we have to consider in this appeal is whether, having regard to the lapse of time, the plaintiff is now entitled to recover possession of the disputed lands.

Section 14 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act upon which the plaintiff relies is as follows:—“Upon the resumption of a resumable tenure, every lien, sub-tenancy, easement or other right or interest created, without the consent or permission of the grantor or his successor in interest, by the grantee or any of his successors, on the tenure or in limitation of his own interest therein, shall be deemed to be annulled.” Then, certain exceptions follow which it is unnecessary to consider in the present case. The question of limitation arises in this way. The defendants assert that the tenure itself came to an end certainly in 1895 if not in 1859 and that the Raj became entitled to resume this reasonable tenure certainly in 1895 if not in 1859, and they say that they have been in possession without any title whatever certainly since 1895 and have acquired a title by lapse of time. The plaintiff, on the other hand, asserts that though he may have been entitled to resume the tenure in 1895 he altogether denies that, having regard to the compromise he was entitled to resume the tenure in 1859 time as against the defendants did not begin to run until the actual resumption of the reasonable tenure by the Raj which event, according to the plaintiff, happened on the 21st June 1915; and he contends that no question of limitation arises as he brought the suit within 12 years from the date of the actual resumption of the resumable tenure.

Two questions arise upon the arguments that have been advanced by the parties; first, what meaning are we to attach to the word "resumption" occurring in section 14 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act; and, secondly, whether it can be said that an interest was created in favour of the defendants by the grantee of the tenure or any of the successors of the grantee.

The second question is a short one and may be disposed of at once. The defendants themselves rely upon a title created in their favour by Udai Nath. Udai Nath was undoubtedly in possession of the tenure and in his view rightfully in possession thereof. The defendants have all along claimed that they were in possession of a sub-tenancy properly created in their favour by Udai Nath who, according to them, was the successor of the original grantee. This being the case of the defendants, they ought not to complain if they are not put in a better position than if they were what they pretend. In my opinion, the word "successor" in section 14 of the Act means not only a successor de jure but also a successor de facto. That being so, I must hold, upon the case of the defendants themselves, that an interest was created in their favour by the successor in interest of the original grantee and section 14 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act will apply provided the suit has been brought within time.

This brings me to the question of limitation: and the decision of this question must depend upon the meaning of the word "resumption" in section 14 of the Chota Nagpur tenancy Act. The extreme argument on behalf of the plaintiff is that resumption means actual re-entry upon the tenure and that as that re-entry took place on the 21st June 1915, his suit, brought on the 20th August 1919, is well within time. The extreme argument on behalf of the defendants is that "resumption" means the happening of an event entitling the landlord to resume the tenure and the contention is that as that event happened in 1895, the suit is clearly barred by limitation. I am unable to accept the extreme contention put forward on behalf of the defendants. In my opinion 'resumption' means an entry upon the land; and the problem for our investigation is whether re-entry is equivalent to actual physical possession of the land. An alternative argument was suggested by Mr. B. C. De and it is this: that re-entry is equivalent to institution of proceedings with a view to resume the land and he contends that as the suit for resumption was brought in 1896, time began to run in favour of the defendants from that year. In my opinion this argument is entitled to succeed. As I understand the position, resumption is nothing more than an unequivocal demand for possession so as to operate as a final election by the landlord to re-enter. Although the event which entitled the plaintiff to resume the tenure had happened, it was not obligatory on the plaintiff to resume the tenure. He might indeed have resumed it or have made a fresh grant to the person actually in possession of the tenure or have allowed the defendants to remain in possession of the disputed lands paying a rent for the same to him. It was, therefore, necessary for the plaintiff to resume the tenure before he could be heard to say that the interest of the defendants has been annulled. Until the final election to resume the tenure was made, the defendants were entitled to say that they were in possession of an interest in the disputed lands by virtue of a transaction created in their favour by one against whom no action had been taken by the plaintiff and as such they were entitled to remain in possession of that interest. I think, therefore, that 'resumption' means an unequivocal demand for possession which operates as a final election by the landlord to re-enter upon the land. This unequivocal demand for possession took place in 1896 and operated, in my opinion, as a resumption of the tenure. The present suit, having been brought more than twelve years from the date of the unequivocal demand for possession, is clearly barred by limitation.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Notice issued by Collector—Annulment, whether can be

The fact that a mortgage suit or any other suit has been instituted by the incumbrancer cannot deprive the auction-purchaser of his right to annul the incumbrance under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, if the application is made within the time prescribed by the section, that is to say, within one year of the date of the sale or the date on which the purchaser first had notice of the incumbrance. [p. 477, col. 1.]

Under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act once the Collector has issued notice of annulment, the incumbrance must be deemed to have been annulled. This does not, however, mean that the validity of the notice and the consequent annulment of the incumbrance cannot afterwards be called in question. The effect of the section is to cast the burden of proof upon the person questioning the validity of the notice. [p. 477, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Dawson-Miller, C. J.—This appeal is brought under the Letters Patent against a decision of Mr. Justice Ross reversing the decree of the District Judge.

The appellants, Nanā Kishore Chaudhuri and others, instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises on the 26th January 1919 claiming certain declarations in respect of a mortgage upon the holding of Ashrafi Jha and Bhudhan Jha granted by their deceased father. The two persons named are the first party defendants in the suit. Sometime before the suit was instituted, namely, on the 9th September 1917, the holdi g had been sold at auction in execution of a rent-decree obtained by the landlord, the Maharajadhiraja of Darbhanga, who himself purchased the holding. The landlord was impleaded as the second party defendant in the present suit. The plaintiffs averred that the rent-decree obtained by the landlord and the subsequent sale in execution thereof were fraudulent transactions brought about by collusion between the landlord and the tenants and, further, that no notice under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act annulling the incumbrance had been served upon the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs claimed a declaration that as no notice had been served by the auction-purchaser under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the purchase in execution could not bind the mortgaged property, and a further declaration that the decree in the rent-suit and the subsequent sale were collusive and fraudulent and should be set aside.

The defendants first party did not enter appearance but the landlord, the second party defendant, on the 18th July 1919 filed a written statement traversing the allegations in the plaint and pleading that he had no knowledge of the plaintiffs' mortgage until he received the summons in the suit. On the 6th August 1919, that is, within 12 months of the service of the summons in the suit, he applied to the Collector under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to serve notice on the plaintiffs annulling the incumbrance. The plaintiffs appeared in that proceeding and filed an objection alleging that the landlord's application was barred by limitation as he had notice of the incumbrance more than 12 months before the application. The hearing was adjourned by the Collector to enable evidence on the point to be called. On the day fixed, namely, the 19th November 1919, the objectors failed to produce any evidence and their objection was dismissed. The Collector issued the notice of annulment under section 167. On the following day, the 20th November, the plaintiffs amended their plaint by adding a prayer asking for enforcement of their mortgage by sale of the property.

No issue was raised at the trial raising the question as to whether the landlord had notice of the incumbrance more than a year before the application to annul. The only issues framed were :—

NAND KISHORE CHAUDHURI v. RAMESHWAR SINGH

1. Is the mortgage-bond in suit genuine and for consideration?

2. Is the defendant second party bound to pay the debt under the mortgage-bond in suit?

3. To what relief, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled and against which defendant?

4. Whether the decree in Rent Suit No. 417 of 1916 was obtained by the fraudulent suppression of summons and whether the sale in Execution Case No. 510 of 1917 was also obtained by fraudulent suppression of notice and other processes?

The issues were decided by the Munsif as follows:—No. 1 in the affirmative, Nos. 2 and 4 in the negative. With regard to No. 3 he was of opinion that, although the plaintiffs had appeared and filed objections in the proceedings under section 167 of the Act and although, notwithstanding the objection, the notice had been issued by the Collector such notice was not binding upon the plaintiffs as it was filed during the pendency of the present suit. He came to no conclusion as to when the landlord first became aware of the incumbrance. In the result, he ordered the plaintiffs to pay the landlord within two months the amount due to him under the rent-decree and subject thereto he passed a mortgage-decree in favour of the plaintiff ordering the sale of the property to satisfy their claim.

The landlord appealed to the District Judge who differed from the Munsif in so far as the latter had held that a notice served after the institution of the present suit could not be valid. In this respect the learned District Judge, in my opinion, took a correct view of the law. The fact that a mortgage suit or any other suit has been instituted by the incumbrancer cannot deprive the auction-purchaser of his right to annul the incumbrance under the Bengal Tenancy Act if the application is made within the time prescribed by the section, that is to say, within one year of the date of the sale or the date on which the purchaser first had notice of the incumbrance. The learned District Judge, however, found that as the notice was admittedly given more than a year after the sale and as there was no evidence to show that the landlord came to know of the incumbrance at a later date the notice could not be deemed to have been given within the time limited by law and was, therefore, not a valid notice. He accordingly dismissed the appeal on that ground.

The landlord then appealed to the High Court. The appeal was heard before Mr. Justice Ross. The learned Judge was of opinion that the Collector had jurisdiction to entertain the application for service of a notice under section 167 if he were satisfied that it was within time, or to reject it if not so satisfied, and that having issued the notice after objection by the plaintiffs it must be deemed that the Collector was satisfied as to the propriety of issuing the notice. Clause (3) of section 167 provides as follows:—

"When an application for service of a notice is made to the Collector in manner prescribed in this section, he shall cause the notice to be served in compliance therewith, and the incumbrance shall be deemed to be annulled from the date on which it is so served."

Under the section once the Collector has issued the notice the incumbrance must be deemed to have been annulled. This does not mean that the validity of the notice and the consequent annulment of the incumbrance cannot afterwards be called in question. I consider, however, that the effect of the section is to cast the burden of proof upon the person questioning the validity of the notice. It was, therefore, incumbent upon the plaintiffs in the present case to prove that the landlord had in fact notice of the incumbrance more than 12 months before he made the application to the Collector. The learned District Judge treated the case as one in which the onus lay upon the landlord. In this respect he was, in my opinion, misinterpreting the section. The landlord appears to have given no evidence upon the point and no issue was raised upon it which may account for his failure to do so. Had no evidence been given at all upon this point I should have agreed with the decision of Mr. Justice Ross who, in my opinion, rightly placed the onus upon the plaintiffs who questioned its validity. We have been informed, however, by the learned Vakil for the appellants that the plaintiffs did at the trial adduce some evidence in support of their contention that the landlord had notice of the incumbrance more than 12 months before the application under section 167. The learned District Judge did not mention this fact and did not deal with this part of the evidence and say whether he accepted it or not.

In this condition of affairs I think the proper course to pursue is to remand the case to the lower Appellate Court under O. XLI, r. 25 of the Civil Procedure Code to determine the following issue :—

"Did the second party defendant present to the Collector his application under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act within one year of the date on which he first had notice of the plaintiffs' incumbrance?"

As no issue was framed upon this point both parties will be permitted to tender fresh evidence upon it. The District Judge shall determine the issue and return his finding and the reasons therefore together with the evidence as soon as possible to this Court for final disposal of the appeal.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908) s. 15, Sch. I, Arts. 181, 182 (5).—Execution of decree—Injunction restraining execution—Step-in aid of execution—Limitation.

Execution of a mortgage-decree for sale of a house was first taken out on 7th July 1917. On 12th September 1917 an injunction was issued restraining the sale of half the house. An application to take a step-in-aid of execution with respect to the other half of the house was made on 19th November 1917 and that half of the house was sold. The injunction was dissolved on 8th November 1918. An application for execution with respect to the other half was made on 10th January 1922;

Held (1) that the last application to take a step-in-aid of execution having been made on 19th November 1917, limitation began to run from that date;

(2) that the only period which the decree-holder was entitled to exclude on account of the injunction was from 19th November 1917, the date on which limitation began to run, to 8th November 1918, the date on which the injunction was dissolved;

(3) that, therefore, the present application made on 10th January 1922 having been made more than three years after the date of the last application, after deducting the period during which the injunction was in force after the date of the last application, was barred by limitation.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—This appeal raises a question of limitation. The relevant dates are these: On 9th June 1916 a final decree for sale of a house was passed in favour of the mortgagee—respondent. On 7th July 1917 execution was taken out (Execution case No. 203 of 1917). On 6th August 1917 sale proclamation was issued and 17th September 1917 was the date fixed for sale. On 3rd September 1917 a third party instituted a suit claiming title to one half of the house and an injunction restraining the respondent from selling it. On 12th September 1917 an injunction was granted. On 19th November 1917 the other half of the house was sold and the sale was confirmed on 22nd December 1917. On 8th November 1918 the suit of the third party was dismissed for default and the injunction was thus dissolved. There was an application for re-hearing which was dismissed and an appeal against the dismissal was rejected on 25th February 1919. The present application for execution was made on 10th January 1922 and the question is, whether it is within time, or, in other words, within three years of the last application to the Court to take some step-in-aid of execution. Now, the last application to the Court to take some step-in aid of execution was on the 19th November 1917. Three years from that date expired on 19th November 1920. To this must be added, under section 15 of the Limitation Act, the time of the continuance of the injunction staying the execution. Between 19th November 1917 and 19th November 1920 the injunction was in force for 11 months and 20 days (viz. from 19th November 1917 to 8th November 1918). If this period be added, the respondent was entitled to apply for execution up till 8th November 1921. The learned District Judge has allowed the decree-holder to calculate the period of limitation from 19th November 1917 and also to deduct the period from 12th September 1917 till 8th November 1918. But it is impossible to deduct time which had already elapsed before limitation began to run.

It is argued for the respondent that the present application should be treated as a continuation of the previous application. I doubt whether this argument has any relevancy since section 15 of the Limitation Act was amended so as to include execution proceedings. But, in any view, there must be some limitation to the continuation of execution proceedings and the limitation would appear to be imposed by Art. 181. The result, therefore, is the same. The right to apply accrued when the injunction was dissolved and three years from this date expired on 8th November 1921.

The result is that the present application must be held to be out of time. The appeal is allowed with costs and the order of the Court below is set aside and the execution is dismissed.

Railways Act (IX of 1890) ss. 71, 76—Risk Note Form B—Suit for compensation for non-delivery of goods—Loss, plea of—Wilful neglect, proof of—Theft, allegation of.

In answer to a suit for compensation for non-delivery of goods consigned under Risk Note Form B, it is sufficient for the defendant Company to plead loss as contemplated by the Risk Note, and it need not call evidence to satisfy the Court that the goods are still not in its possession. [p. 480, col. 1.]

Wilful neglect on the part of the Railway Administration or of its servants is not established merely by the fact that the Company allege that the wagon in which the goods were being carried was broken into by thieves.

Revision from an order of the Small Cause Court Judge, Patna, dated the 19th February 1923.

Messrs. S. Dayal and Brij Kishore Pd., for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. N. Bose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Macpherson, J.—This is an application under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act against the decree of the Small Cause Court of Patna dismissing, except in respect of an item immaterial for the present purpose, the suit of the petitioner for compensation for non-delivery of one bale of goods consigned from Bombay on the Great Indian Peninsular Railway to the petitioner at Patna City and not delivered to him by the East Indian Railway. The value of the bale was put at Rs. 393.12 0 and the rest of the claim of Rs. 472 was made up of expenses, railway freight, interest and loss of profit.

The goods had been sent under Risk Note B and the Court held that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the loss of the bale was due to the wilful neglect of the defendant Railway Company and further that the Company was under that Risk Note absolved from liability for the loss of the bale.

On behalf of the petitioner it is contended by Mr. Shiveshwar Dayal that the contract being admitted and also the breach thereof, the plaintiff's suit can only be defeated by the Risk Note B, that for the Risk Note to avail, the plea of loss must be expressly taken and that as that plea was not taken evidence of loss was not admissible. He would base this contention upon two rulings of this Court, G.I.P. Railway Company v. Jitanram Nirmal Ram (1), decided by a Division Bench and the East Indian Railway Co. v. Sukdeo Das (2), decided by a Single Judge. To my mind the contention is not sound since loss has been distinctly pleaded in paragraph 4 of the written statement presented on behalf of the defendant Company and that was also the interpretation put upon the paragraph by the plaintiff himself when leading evidence. Indeed, having regard to the fact that he filed Exhibit 5, a letter, wherein the Railway Company alleged loss and disclaimed negligence, no other position was possible to him. Accordingly, the second case cited is distinguishable since therein the defendant had not pleaded even by implication that the goods had been lost, while the plea of loss as contemplated by the Risk Note having been advanced on behalf of the defence, the first mentioned case far from being in favour of the present contention is against it, since it has been held therein that it is sufficient for the defendant Company to plead loss as contemplated by the Risk Note and it need not call evidence to satisfy the Court that the goods are still not in the Company's possession. The evidence on the record as to loss was thus not inadmissible. This plea fails.

It is next contended by the learned Vakil that the petitioner is at least entitled to a remand for further consideration of the effect of the exception to the protection accorded by the Risk Note. He argues (1) that Exhibit 5, the letter of the Railway Company to the petitioner, states that the consignment which included the bale lost, proceeded in a wagon as far as Dildarnagar correctly, but there the wagon was found to have been broken into by thieves and no clue to the stolen property had been discovered by the Police; (2) that under the exception, read with the proviso thereto, theft (not being robbery from a running train) is not necessarily excluded from "the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or . . . the wilful neglect of its servants" in respect of which the Railway Company under the Risk Note still continues liable when a complete package of a consignment is lost; (3) that Exhibit 5 was not considered by the Judge in this connection, and (4) that if the Judge had directed his mind to the matter, he might have held, as other Courts have been known to hold, that the theft was due to the wilful neglect either of the Railway Administration or of its servants.

To my mind it cannot be inferred that Exhibit 5 was not considered in this connection. Moreover, though the second proposition is unexceptionable, it was for the plaintiff to prove that he came within the exception. It is not enough to say that theft may in law evidence "wilful neglect on the part of the Railway Administration . . . or of its servants." The real question is whether any Court would be justified in holding, merely on the expression used in Exhibit 5, namely, "broken into by thieves" and in the absence of further evidence such as that the wagon which was ex hypothesi closed, and may even be taken to have been fastened or locked was negligently closed or fastened or was left altogether exposed and unguarded that wilful neglect was established. In my opinion such a finding would be unjustifiable. There is in the present case no such further evidence. The finding of the learned Judge is thus the only possible finding and a remand is contraindicated.

The application is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Farrukhabad, dated the 6th January 1922.

Mr. M. A. Aziz, for the Appellants.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for damages for certain trees alleged to have been wrongfully cut and for an injunction against the defendants forbidding them to cut any further trees in a plot numbered 378. The plaintiffs-appellants are the zemindars. They alleged in their plaint that the trees were of spontaneous growth, but pleaded in the alternative that even if they had been planted the first defendant, who is an occupancy tenant in the village, had no right to transfer them. The trees which have been cut were sold by the first defendant to the second and third defendants and cut down by them. The first defendant pleaded that he was the owner of the trees, which were planted by his ancestor with the permission of the zemindar, and that he had a right to sell them. He also alleged a custom by which tenants planting a grove had a right to sell the trees. A great deal has been made in argument of the fact that the learned Judge finds that the wajibdars does not support the special custom relied on and that it is not proved. It has been argued that, on this finding, the suit should have been decreed without going into other matters, but, as the Calcutta High Court remarked in a recent case, it is not every variation between pleading and proof which is fatal to a suit or a defence. The main defence of the defendant was that he was the owner of the trees and was entitled to sell them, and it was on this question and not on the question of special custom that an issue was framed in the trial Court.

The facts found by the Court below are that this grove was planted some 40 years ago with the permission of the zemindar by the defendant's ancestor on what was at the time a non-occupancy holding. He further finds that the grove was planted only a year or two after the commencement of the tenancy. The area which was converted into a grove originally formed a portion of a larger plot but at the last Settlement it formed a separate plot numbered 378. The learned Judge has relied on the reported ruling in Jalesar Sahu v. Rajmangal, (1) and, following that ruling, has held that, when permission was given by the zemindar to plant a grove on the non-occupancy tenure, the effect of this was to put an end to the tenancy as such, and to substitute therefor a fresh contract between the parties by which the position of the defendant was converted into that of a grove-holder with transferable rights. That case related to an occupancy holding, but the case is much stronger where the land was held without occupancy rights as in the present case. It is most unlikely that the tenant would agree to spend the considerable sum of money necessary to convert the plot into a grove if he was still to remain liable to be turned out of the land and to lease trees at any time.

In appeal the plaintiffs have relied on an earlier decision in Daya Kishen v. Muhammad Wazir Ahmad (2). That decision is, to my mind, clearly inconsistent with the decision in Jalesar Sahu v. Rajmangal (1), and, though in the later ruling an attempt was made to distinguish it on what appears to me very slender grounds, it appears to me that the earlier ruling must now be considered to have been overruled and to be no longer good law. The later ruling has been followed and approved in a number of cases by me personally, e.g., Lal Baijnath Singh v. Chandrapal Singh (3), and I believe by other Judges also, and it has rightly been held by the learned District Judge to govern the present case. Following that ruling, I dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Proceedings which are sought to be brought within the purview of section 14 of the Limitation Act must be such as are recognised by law as legal in their initiation though a party has carried the proceeding to a wrong Court.

A party who is proceeding in ignorance of law can hardly be said to be proceeding with due diligence or in good faith within the meaning of section 14 of the Limitation Act.

Time spent in prosecuting an appeal which is not permitted under the law cannot be excluded under section 14 of the Limitation Act.

Revision from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Arrah, dated the 25th June 1923, affirming that of Munsif, Buxar, dated the 29th January, 1923.

Messrs. S. P. Varma and Mahabir Prasad, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. P. Dyal and Harnarain Prasad, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.

Foster, J.—This is a petition in revision. The applicant as a judgment-debtor instituted a proceeding under O. XXI, r. 90 which, on the 6th January 1923, was dismissed for default neither party being present. The applicant then filed an appeal on the 12th February 1923. The Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal found that no appeal lay and that in any case it was out of time. It is urged here that the lower Court was wrong in holding that the appeal was incompetent. But the matter is of little consequence, for I find that the final order of the Subordinate Judge was justified on the ground of limitation. I come, therefore, to the point of limitation. The appeal (if it lay) was filed six days out of time so far as I can see from the documents put before me on the applicant's behalf. It is urged that sections 14 and 5 of the Indian Limitation Act should have been applied.

Section 14, in my opinion, has no application. The petition for restoration of the case which was dismissed on the 29th January was dismissed because that petition was one not recognised by the law. Proceedings coming under section 14 must be such as are recognised by law as legal in their initiation though a party has carried the proceeding to the wrong Court. It can hardly be said that a party who is proceeding in ignorance of law has been proceeding with due diligence or in good faith. The words "good faith" are explained in the earlier part of the Act as connoting due care and attention. Nor do I find any ground for the application under section 5, inasmuch as the applicant had plenty of time between the 29th January and the date on which the period of limitation for appeal (if any) would expire.

The last point is urged by referring to the case of Naurang Ram Sahu v. Bhakhori Mandar (1). It is argued that the Munsif in the Original Court did not show under what provision of the law he was dismissing the application under r. 90 and, therefore, he acted without authority and his act amounted to a refusal to exercise jurisdiction. It seems to me this is stretching the argument too far. In the case quoted, the order was one that could not with any certainty be labelled, if I may use the expression, with any indication of the provision of law under which it was passed. Here the order of the 6th January 1923 could only have been passed under O. XVII, r. 2, read with O. IX r. 3, for it was an order passed after adjournment and in the absence of the two parties.

I find no reason to interfere. The petition is rejected with costs.

—Contract by guardian for himself and minor—Specific performance of whole or part, whether can be decreed —Mutuality, want of, effect of—Muhammadian Law—Guardian, de facto, power of, to sell minor's property.

A de facto guardian of a Muhammadan minor has no power to enter into a contract for the sale of the minor's property. [p. 484, col. 1.]

Specific performance will not be decreed of a contract to sell immoveable property entered into by a guardian on behalf of a minor. [p. 484, col. 2.]

Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed, 13 Ind. Cas. 331; 39 C. 232; 16 C. W. N. 74; (1912) M. W. N. 22; 9 A. L. J. 83; 15 C. L. J. 69; 14 Bom. L. R. 5; 21 M. L. J. 156; 11 M. L. T. 8; 89 I. A. 1 (P. C.) followed.

The operation of section 27 (4) of the Specific Relief Act is confined to cases where the contract is, in the first instance, enforceable as against the parties to the contract. The liability of a person claiming under a party to the contract rests upon the antecedent liability of the party to the contract under whom he claims, and arises by reason of the fact that as such transferee he takes subject to the transferor's pre-existing contractual obligation. But where there is no pre-existing contractual obligation, the case entirely fails against the transferee. [p. 485, col. 1.]

The Court will not, as a general rule, compel specific performance of a contract unless it can execute the whole contract. It may be that the contract though in form one and entire, is in substance divisible, and where this is so there is nothing to prevent the Court from carrying into effect that portion of it, in substance a separate contract, which is capable of being carried into effect. But a contract for the sale of immoveable property in one lot will generally be considered indivisible. [p. 485, cols. 1 & 2, p. 486, col. 1]

A contract to be specifically enforced by the Court must, as a general rule, be mutual, that is to say, such that it might, at the time it was entered into, have been enforced by either of the parties against the other of them. Want of mutuality in the contract is a well recognized defence to a suit for specific performance. [p. 486, col. 1.]

When, therefore, whether from personal incapacity to contract or the nature of the contract, or any other cause, the contract is incapable of being enforced against one party, that party is, generally, incapable of enforcing it against the other, though its execution in the latter way might in itself be free from the difficulty attending its execution in the former. [p. 486, col. 1.]

Where a person is jointly interested in an estate with another person and purports to deal with the entire estate, specific performance will not be granted against him as to his share. [p. 486, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decision of Subordinate Judge, Saran dated the 30th April 1920.

Mr. A. B. Mukherji, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, S. M. Tahir, Siveshwar Dayal, Noorul Hassan and Sultanuddin Hussain, for the Respondents.

Das, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the appellant for specific performance of an agreement by defendant No. 1 and by defendant No. 2 for self and as guardian of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 to sell certain properties to the plaintiff. The agreement is alleged to have taken place on the 20th August 1916 and the plaint was filed on the 25th September 1916. On the 24th October 1916 the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 sold the properties to defendant No. 7 and defendant No. 7 was added as a party to the suit on the 26th August 1918. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that there was a valid pre-existing contract to sell the properties to the plaintiff and that defendant No. 7 purchased the properties with notice of the prior contract in favour of plaintiff, but being of opinion that defendant No. 7, as a co-sharer in all the properties contracted to be sold to the plaintiff, had a right of pre-emption, has declined to give the plaintiff a decree for specific performance. The view of the learned Subordinate Judge is that, though defendant No. 7 is not a purchaser without notice, she is still entitled to defeat the plaintiff's suit on the ground that she had a right of pre-emption in respect of the properties in dispute. In this view the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit for specific performance but has given him a decree for Rs. 605 as against defendants Nos 1 to 4.

It is, in my opinion, unnecessary for us to express an opinion on the question which has been discussed at great length by the learned Subordinate Judge, for, in my view, this appeal must fail, first, on the ground that defendant No. 2 as the de facto guardian of defendants 3 and 4 had no power to convey to the plaintiff the shares of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 in the properties agreed to be sold, and, secondly, on the ground that it is quite impossible for the Court to give the plaintiff a decree for specific performance as against the minors and consequently as against the adult defendants. So far as the first point is concerned, the case of Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1), is directly in point. It is quite true that that was not a case of specific performance, but the principle is equally applicable to a case where the de facto guardian has entered into a contract with a third party for the sale of the minor's property. To direct the contract to be carried into effect as against the minors is to sanction a plain breach of trust on the part of the de facto guardian; and this, I apprehend, this Court will not do. The second point is equally clear. The allegation of the plaintiff in regard to the contract is contained in the second paragraph of the plaint which is as follows: "Defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2 for self and as guardian of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 completed a contract for the sale of the above-mentioned shares to the plaintiff on the 20th August 1916 at Bihar according to the stipulation given below, Rs. 7500 was fixed as the consideration thereof and Rs. 200 as salami, in all Rs. 7,700. To complete the transaction it was settled that defendants Nos. 5 and 6 should go to Siwan and do all that may be necessary for the execution of the deed of sale." I will assume that the contract was a concluded one: but the question still remains whether the Court will carry into effect a contract confessedly entered into by a guardian on behalf of the minors.

The decision of the Judicial Committee in Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakrudin Mahomed (2), is, in my opinion, final and decisive. The question which their Lordships had to consider was whether a contract entered into on behalf of a minor by his manager or guardian and found to be for his benefit, was enforceable by a decree for specific performance at the suit of the minor through his manager or guardian, and, in dealing with this question, their Lordships said as follows:—"They are, however, of opinion that is not within the competence of a manager of a minor's estate or within the competence of a guardian of a minor to bind the minor or the minor's estate by a contract for the purchase of immoveable property, and they are further of opinion that as the minor in the present case was not bound by the contract, there was no mutuality, and that the minor who has now reached his majority cannot obtain specific performance of the contract." That was a case of contract for purchase, but, in my opinion, no distinction can be drawn between a contract for purchase and a contract for sale. The decision of the Judicial Committee rests on the broader ground that it is quite impossible for the Court to decree specific performance against a minor.

It was, however, argued that, though the contract may be unenforceable against the minors, no difficulty arises in the present case, as the defendants have conveyed the properties to defendant No. 7 and there is no rule which prevents the Court from directing defendant No. 7 to convey the properties to the plaintiff. The argument is founded on the terms of section 27 (b) of the Specific Relief Act which provides that "except as otherwise provided by this Chapter, specific performance of a contract may be enforced against any other person;" that is to say, against any person other than a party to the contract "claiming under him;" that is to say, claiming under a party to the contract "by a title arising subsequently to the contract except a transferee for value who has paid his money in good faith and without notice of the original contract." In my opinion it is quite impossible to entertain the argument. The operation of section 27 (b) of the Specific Relief Act is confined to cases where the contracts are, in the first instance, enforceable as against the parties to the contract. The liability of a person claiming under a party to the contract rests upon the antecedent liability of a party to the contract, and arises by reason of the fact that, as such transferee, he takes subject to the transferor's pre existing contractual obligation; and where there is no pre-existing contractual obligation, it seems to me that the case entirely fails as against the transferee. It is quite clear that you cannot enforce a contract as against a transferee unless the transferee has notice of the original contract. Now, notice of the original contract must mean notice of an existing obligation under the contract, and where the contract is itself unenforceable, it seems to me that it is impossible to maintain the view that the contract can be enforced as against a subsequent transferee. In my opinion the plaintiff's suit must fail so far as defendants 3 and 4 are concerned.

The next question is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for specific performance against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in regard to their shares in the properties agreed to be sold. Now, as to this, the rule is that the Court will not, as a general rule compel specific performance of a contract unless it can execute the whole contract. It may, of course, be that the contract though in form one and entire, is in substance divisible, and where the contract is in substance divisible, there is nothing to prevent the Court from carrying into effect that portion of it (in substance a separate contract) which is capable of being carried into effect. Mr. Abani Bhusan Mukherji strongly contends that the question whether the contract was indivisible or divisible is a question of fact, and that, as the question was not raised in the form in which it has been argued before us, we ought not to adjudicate on it, but that we ought to remand the case to the Court below for taking evidence. I do not think that Mr. Mukherji is entirely right in saying that the question was not raised by the defendants. The minor defendants in their written statement took the plea that the contract was not enforceable as against them, but I have no doubt whatever that the question was not argued in the Court below in the form in which it has been argued before us. It seems to have been argued in the Court below that as there was a certificated guardian of the minors appointed by the District Court, the contract for sale without the sanction of the District Judge was unenforceable in law; and that question the learned Subordinate Judge has decided against the defendants. But the question was undoubtedly raised in the written statement of the minors, and the question as to whether a decree for specific performance can be passed against the minors is a question of law. In regard to the other question, namely, whether the contract is one and entire or divisible it is sufficient to say that the plaintiff's own case in the plaint and in the evidence is to the effect that the contract was one contract and not separate contracts. I have already referred to paragraph 2 of the plaint which is to the effect that there was one contract, one salami and one consideration. It is the plaintiff's case that the contract between him and the defendants was embodied in a document dated the 1st of September 1916. This document makes it clear beyond all doubt that the contract was one and entire and that under the contract the defendants agreed to sell certain properties of which they were owners, to the plaintiff for the sum of Rs. 7,700. Neither in the plaint nor in Ex. 5 the document of the 1st September 1916 is there any specification of the shares of the vendors, nor is it stated how much of the consideration was to go to defendant No. 1, how much to defendant No. 2 and how much to defendants Nos 3 and 4. The evidence which has been read before us by Mr. Mukharji is conclusive on the question that the contract was one and entire. That being so, it is quite unnecessary to remand the case for taking fresh evidence, for it is possible for us, upon the allegation of the plaintiff himself, to decide the question without having recourse to the doubtful propriety of sending the case back to the Court of first instance.

I have said that where the contract is in substance divisible, there is nothing to prevent the Court from carrying into effect that portion of it which in substance is a separate contract and which is capable of being carried into effect. But here, again, the rule is firmly established that a contract for sale of property in one lot will generally be considered indivisible for the reason that there is obvious injustice in compelling the purchaser of the entirety to take undivided parts or shares of the estate. Now, in the present case the plaintiff having purchased certain specific properties belonging to four persons could not be compelled to take the shares of two of them in those properties. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 could not be heard to say, "it is true that we contracted to sell not our shares in the property, but certain properties belonging to us and two minors and that we are unable to convey the shares of the minors, but none the less you are bound to complete the sale so far as our shares are concerned." The plaintiff would be entitled to say if such a case was put forward by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 "I did not contract to purchase your shares but I contracted to purchase certain specific properties of which you, together with the minor defendants, are the owners." Such a contention on the part of the plaintiff would, in my opinion, be unanswerable, and no Court will force upon the plaintiff shares of the property when he has contracted to purchase the entirety. It is quite true that that is not the attitude of the plaintiff in the present case, and he, through his learned Vakul, has intimated his willingness to take a conveyance of the shares of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, but a contract to be specifically enforced by the Court must, as a general rule, be mutual, that is to say, such that it might, at the time it was entered into, have been enforced by either of the parties against the other of them. Want of mutuality in the contract is a well recognized defence to a suit for specific performance, and was at the bottom of the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Mr Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed (2). The rule is stated in these terms in a recognized work on the subject:—"When, therefore, whether from personal incapacity to contract or the nature of the contract, or any other cause, the contract is incapable of being enforced against one party, that party is, generally, incapable of enforcing it against the other, though its execution in the latter way might in itself be free from the difficulty attending its execution in the former." (Fry on Specific Performance, page 219). The contract was, in my opinion, incapable of being enforced against the plaintiff.

iff. That being so, the plaintiff is incapable of enforcing it against defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

The exact point was decided by the English Court in Lumley v. Ravenscroft (3). That was a case where the defendants, an infant and his sister, agreed by their agent to grant the plaintiff a lease of premises in which they were jointly interested. The plaintiff brought an action for specific performance of the agreement, and applied for injunction to restrain the defendants till after the trial of the action from leasing the premises to another person. It was held that an injunction ought to be granted only where a case was made out for specific performance, and that one of the defendants being an infant the plaintiff was not entitled to specific performance against both of them, nor against the sister as to her interest in the absence of any proof of misrepresentation or misconduct on her part. Lindley, L. J., in delivering the judgment, said as follows:—"If Moore's principals were both of age, there would be a complete contract and no difficulty in the case. But unfortunately one of the principals is an infant nineteen years of age, and the agreement is unquestionably an agreement for a lease by the two. It is an agreement by the two with the plaintiff for a lease to him of cert in property of which as it appears a lease was being granted to the two. What is the law? Specific performance is out of the question. You cannot get specific performance against an infant, and upon the evidence before us no case is made out for specific performance against the other defendant either. This case is not within the exception as to misrepresentation or misconduct stated in Price v. Griffith, (4) and Thomas v. Dering, (5) but comes within the general rule that where a person is jointly interested in an estate with another person and purports to deal with the entirety specific performance will not be granted against him as to his share." It is only necessary to mention that there is no charge of any misrepresentation or misconduct within the meaning of those terms in Price v.

Griffith (4) and Thomas v. Dering (5) as against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in this case.

It was lastly argued that the question should be decided not on the English Law, but on the terms of sections 15, 16, 17 of the Specific Relief Act. It will be noticed that the general rule adopted in the Act is that, except in cases coming within certain exceptions, the Court shall not direct the specific performance of a part of the contract. The general rule is laid down in section 17 of the Act; the exceptions are enumerated in sections 14, 15 and 16 of the Act. It is conceded that section 14 has no application, but it is contended that the case comes not within the prohibition of section 17 but within the exceptions mentioned in section 15 and 16 of the Act. In my opinion, section 15 has no application whatever to this case. The section applies to a case where a party to a contract is unable to perform the whole of his part of the contract. In the case before us, provided the Court could carry into effect the contract as against the minor defendants, no question would arise as to the ability of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to perform the whole of their part of it. Here defendants Nos. 1 and 2 agreed to convey their interests in the disputed properties to the plaintiff. They undoubtedly have an interest in the properties, and they made no representation whatever that they were entitled to the whole interest in the properties. Had they made such a representation, and the contract was concluded on the footing that they were entitled to the whole interest in the properties agreed to be sold, section 15 would have applied and the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree directing defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to perform specifically so much of their part of the contract as they could perform, provided the plaintiff relinquished all claim to further performance, and all right to compensation either for deficiency or for the loss or damage sustained by him through the default of the defendants. But there is no default in the present case on the part of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the whole difficulty has arisen by reason of the fact that defendant No. 2 as the de facto guardian of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 (who are also interested in the properties agreed to be sold) agreed to convey the interests of the minor defendants in the properties to the plaintiff; and to such a case section 15, in my opinion, is not applicable. I should mention that the case would have stood on a different footing had defendant No. 2 (who is the certificated guardian of defendants Nos. 3 and 4) acted with the leave of the Court. In entering into the transaction she did not take the permission of the Court; and, so far as the transaction is concerned, she cannot be considered to have acted as the certificated guardian. In my opinion, section 15 has no application whatever. Section 16, in my opinion, does no more than embody the rule of English Law, and the relevant enquiry under section 16 is, is the contract one and entire or is it a divisible contract. I have given my reasons for holding that the contract is not a divisible contract. That being so, the general rule must apply and it is quite impossible to give the plaintiff a decree for specific performance as against defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

So far as the cross-appeal is concerned, I am quite clear that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for money as against defendants Nos. 1 and 2; but I am equally clear that he is not entitled to a decree as against the minors. Defendant No. 2 is now dead, and is represented in this appeal by defendants Nos. 3 and 4. The decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge will be varied by providing that the plaintiff will have a money decree for Rs. 605 with interest at 9 per cent. per annum from the 11th September 1916 up to the 30th April 1920 with costs as against defendant No. 1 and defendants Nos. 3 and 4 as the representatives in interest of defendant No. 2, and to the extent of the assets of defendant Nos. 2 in their hands. As provided by the learned Subordinate Judge, the decree will carry interest at 6 per cent. from the 30th April 1920 until realization. Subject to this variation, the cross-appeal fails and is dismissed.

Foster J.—This is a suit for specific performance of a contract to sell to the plaintiff shares in six Revenue Estates musi Nos. 1012, 1016, 1046, 1288, 1157 and 1012 in Saran district. The plaint sets out that defendants Nos. 1 to 4, whose genealogy is given below, owned a share in each of these estates: on the 20th August 1916 at Bihar they made a verbal contract to sell and on the 1st September 1916 they completed the contract at Siwan, by receiving the earnest money and passing to the plaintiff a written receipt.

Defendant No. 6 was an agent of defendant No. 2, who was said to have made the contract on her behalf, and defendant No. 7 is a subsequent purchaser of the property by deeds of sale dated the 24th October 1916. The latter was made a party defendant before the hearing of the case, the only relief sought against her being a declaration of the invalidity of the sale-deeds executed in her favour. The main relief specific performance of contract, is claimed only against defendants Nos. 1 and 2. On the issues which were framed between the parties the learned Subordinate Judge has arrived at the following material conclusions. He finds the alleged contract with the plaintiff proved; the necessity for the contract, a decree threatening serious and permanent injury to the interests of the defendant's family, is not a matter in dispute. He finds that the subsequent sale to defendant No. 7 is genuine and valid, but that the contract to sell to her (defendant No. 7) was not prior to the contract upon which the plaintiff is suing; and, moreover, defendant No. 7 purchased with full knowledge of the existence of that contract with the plaintiff. At this point the judgment diverges into a discussion of the twelfth issue, and the Judge finds that defendant No. 7 has a right of preemption which debars the plaintiff from suing for specific performance in respect of three or four of the six estates; as to the rest of the estates, the plaintiff's fortune was left to the decision of a subsequent suit if the plaintiff should think fit to bring it. In the result, no order was passed upon the claim for specific performance but defendant Nos. 1 to 4 were made liable for such money as had actually passed hands upon the contract. The plaintiff appeals.

In my view of the arguments in appeal, they fell under five main propositions: (1) the contract is enforceable against the defendants No. 1 and 4; (2) it is enforceable against the minor defendants Nos. 3 and 4; (3) it is enforceable at least against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for what they can convey; (4) at least compensation in money can be obtained against each and all of these four defendants; (5) the relief sought against defendant No. 7 a declaration that her purchase is invalid should be granted.

I proceed to consider these propositions. The contract itself has, for the purposes of this appeal, been taken to be genuine, the only question being as to its legal effects. To deal with that question I shall, as briefly as possible, discuss the four propositions Nos. (2) to (5) set out above.

The emergent necessity and the fact that the minor's mother contracted are urged as reasons for involving the minors in the consequences of the contract. (I may mention here that the defendants are Sunni Muhammadans). The mother if only de facto guardian and not the legal guardian is not competent to dispose of the immoveable property of her infant children: Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1). In this case it is not denied that the mother defendant No. 2 was the legal guardian of the minor defendants, appointed by the District Judge of Patna under Act. VIII of 1890. Under section 27 of that Act she could do all acts which are reasonable and proper for the realization, protection or benefit of the minor's property, but under sections 29 and 30 she could not validly mortgage, or charge or transfer any part of the immoveable property of the minors without the previous permission of the Court. The word "previous" is important, for it explains how a contract of sale made by a certificated guardian without the permission of the District Judge has been treated by the Court as "a contract made by a trustee in excess of his powers," and so incapable of being enforced specifically under section 21 of the Specific Relief Act: Narain Pattar v. Aukhoy Narain (6). In my opinion, the suit for specific performance fails on this ground as against the minors.

TAIBUNNISSA BEGUM v. JAGDIP PANDEY

The next question is whether the suit is enforceable against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for what they can convey. Had the defendant Yahia Khan brought a suit to enforce the contract written out by his son on his behalf and now relied on by the plaintiff (Exhibit 5) he would have had either to express his readiness and ability to perform his part of the contract or to admit that that contract could not be performed in its entirety. The contract was for the sale of the shares of defendants Nos. 1 to 4 in the six revenue estates. Now, even according to the plaint (paragraph 1) the defendants have concurrent ownership and possession of the properties, which include shares in rents and shares in land held in direct possession. It is manifest that no part of the contract stands on a separate and independent footing from any other part for, whichever portion of the property be affected by the decree for specific performance, there will have to be a partition to ascertain that portion. So I do not consider that section 16 of the Specific Relief Act applies to this case. As to the application of sections 14 and 15 of that Act, I have found more difficulty. The learned Vakil for the appellants is ready to pay the whole price for such shares as defendant No. 1 (or defendants Nos. 1 and 2) are capable of transferring.

I would not go so far as to say that partial performance in specie cannot be enforced, but in such cases as these the question is whether it can and should be enforced. The contract obviously lacks mutuality, but in my opinion this case can be distinguished in its legal aspects from Mir Sarwanjan's case (2). In that case, there was an absolute lack of mutuality. This case in fact falls into one of the exceptions to the doctrine of mutuality, an exception recognised in sections 14 to 16 of the Specific Relief Act. For a clear exposition of this matter I refer to Halsbury's Laws of England, "Specific Performance," Part II, section 5. In my opinion this case is governed by the latter part of section 15 of the Specific Relief Act.

So I return to the question—what is the suitable remedy in the circumstances of this case? In my opinion the relief to be granted should be restricted to compensation in money, the principle being that contracts should not be enforced to the detriment of the rights of third parties. The third party is Musammatt Batul, defendant No. 7. She is a purchaser for value now in possession of the properties. At the time when the contract of this suit was made she was a co-sharer in every one of six revenue estates, and the plaintiff was a stranger in respect of three or perhaps four of them. Under the law of pre-emption, therefore, Musammatt Batul had, on the whole, a superior right to purchase. With this view, I record my opinion that specific performance ought not to be granted, but the plaintiff should, in accordance with section 19 of the Specific Relief Act, be awarded compensation for the breach of the contract. But as the contract would always have been exposed to the superior claims of Musammatt Batul as pre-emptrix in respect of a considerable part of its subject-matter, I would confine the damages to the amount decreed in the lower Court, namely the money which actually changed hands. As Musammatt Maqbul-unnessa is dead, and as there is little or no evidence to show that any part of the money ever reached the minors I agree with the order propounded by my learned brother.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. XIII, rr. 1, 2—Documents, production of, at late stage—Admission—Discretion of Court.

Rule 2 of O XIII of the Civil Procedure Code gives no discretion to the Court to receive documentary evidence at a later stage than that mentioned in the previous rule unless good cause is shown to the satisfaction of the Court for the non-production thereof. [p. 491, col. 1.]

The scope of the rule has sometimes been enlarged by allowing the late production of documents in cases where it is quite obvious that no prejudice would arise to the other party by their late production and where the genuineness of the documents sought to be admitted is beyond all question. [p. 491, col. 1.]

TAIBUNNISSA BEGUM v. JAGDIP PANDEY

The object of the Legislature in enacting this rule was to prevent fraud by the late production of suspicious documents and not to shut out formal evidence beyond suspicion such as certified copies of public documents or records of judicial proceedings. [p. 491, col. 1.]

Taleswar Singh v. Bhagwan Das, 12. O. W. N. 812, referred to.

But the mere fact that a document has been in existence for more length of time before proceedings were instituted is not in itself a sufficiently good cause for allowing it to be produced at a late stage of the proceedings. [p. 491, col. 2.]

Appeals under section 10 of the Letter Patent from a decision of Mr. Justice Ross.

JUDGMENT.

Dawson Miller, C. J.—This is an appeal under the Letters Patent from a decision of Mr. Justice Ross overruling the decree of the lower Courts and remanding the case for retrial after the admission of certain evidence which was rejected by both the lower Courts.

The plaintiff obtained against one Mr. Mackenzie a decree and in execution of that decree sold certain property alleged to belong to Mr. Mackenzie and in the execution sale the plaintiff purchased the property sold. Subsequently, the defendants instituted proceedings under O. XXI, r. 100 of the Civil Procedure Code claiming to have the sale set aside on the ground that they were the sole parties interested in the property and that Mr. Mackenzie was not the proprietor at all. In those proceedings the defendants succeeded. The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit against the defendant Jagdip Pande who had brought the proceedings under O. XXI, r. 100 and certain other persons who are apparently joint with him in estate claiming to recover possession of the property from the defendants.

The plaintiff succeeded in establishing her title to the property and in disproving the defendants' title and judgment was pronounced in her favour by the trial Court and on appeal that decision was upheld.

The only ground upon which the appeal was preferred was that the learned Munsif before whom the case came for trial had improperly rejected certain evidence tendered by the defendants at a late stage of the case. It appears that the issues in the suit were framed on the 14th April and under the rules in the Civil Procedure Code all documentary evidence of every description in the possession or power of the parties ought to have been produced at the first hearing which was either on or before the 14th April. Later, applications were made for adjournment of the hearing and it was not until the 29th May that the actual hearing of the suit commenced and on the following day arguments were heard and judgment was delivered on the 31st. On the 29th May the defendants produced the documents in question and the learned Munsif rejected them on the ground that they ought to have been produced at an earlier stage.

On appeal, the District Judge upheld the ruling of the Munsif being of opinion that he was perfectly justified in rejecting the documents tendered at that late stage of the proceedings.

From that decision a second appeal was preferred to this Court and the matter came before Mr. Justice Ross. The learned Judge was of opinion that the Munsif had improperly exercised his discretion in rejecting the documents in question and remanded the case for re-trial by the Munsif after taking the evidence which had been excluded.

From that decision the present appeal under the Letters Patent is brought by the plaintiff. I ought to mention here that the documents which were tendered in evidence on the 29th May were, first of all, a letter which purported to have been written by Mr. Mackenzie who, I understand, is now dead and certain counterfoils of rent receipts in connection with the property the subject-matter of dispute. These had been used by the defendants and filed before the Judge in the proceedings under O. XXI, r. 100 in which the defendants were successful, and the only possible ground upon which it could be suggested that the defendants had good cause for not producing their documents at the proper time would be that these documents had been in existence before the suit was instituted and, therefore, there was no pressing necessity for producing them at the very first moment and that this in itself was sufficient cause for inducing the Court to admit the document at a later period. In considering this question it is necessary to bear in mind exactly what the law is on the subject as laid down in O. XIII of the Civil Procedure Code. I have already referred to the first rule of that Order which makes it obligatory upon the parties to produce all their documentary evidence at the first hearing of the suit. Rule 2 of the same Order provides that no documentary evidence in the possession or power of any party which should have been but has not been produced in accordance with the requirements of r. 1 shall be received at any subsequent stage of the proceedings unless good cause is shown to the satisfaction of the Court for the non-production thereof and the Court receiving any such evidence shall record the reasons for so doing. It will be observed that rule gives no discretion to the Court to receive evidence at a later stage than that mentioned in the previous rule unless good cause is shown to the satisfaction of the Court for the non-production thereof. The rule is precise and excludes all documentary evidence produced at a late period unless good cause is shown for its non-production. That rule has been found, perhaps, in some cases to work a certain amount of hardship and the tendency has no doubt been to endeavour, to some extent at all events, to enlarge the scope of the rule by allowing the late production of documents in cases where it is quite obvious that no prejudice would arise to the other party by their late production and where the genuineness of the documents sought to be admitted is beyond all question. In the case of Taleswar Singh v. Bhagwan Das (1) the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court pointed out that, whilst it is for the Court of first instance to decide whether the documents which ought to have been mentioned in the original list or ought to have been produced earlier were not so produced for good and sufficient reasons, at the same time, the object of the Legislature in enacting this rule was to prevent fraud by the late production of suspicious documents and not to shut out formal evidence beyond suspicion such as certified copies of public documents or records of judicial proceedings. In that case, although it would appear that no valid excuse had been proved for not producing documents of that nature at the first hearing of the suit, nevertheless the Court allowed the production of public documents at a later period either before or at the actual hearing. The principle relied upon in that case, however, must not, in my opinion, be pushed too far. It seems to me that that decision may be justified upon the ground that where you have a public document which clearly is one beyond all suspicion as to its authenticity and which can be procured at any time by either party that fact may in itself be sufficient cause for not producing the document at the earliest stage, because, unless, some prejudice is suffered by the other side by its late production, which of course would be sufficient to exclude it, it seems fairly obvious that the other party can suffer no harm by its late production because the genuineness of the document is beyond question, and, therefore, as I say, that fact may in itself be quite sufficient excuse or sufficient cause for the non-production of the document in the first instance. In the present case, however, the documents which it is now sought to have admitted after trial and which the defendants asked to have admitted at a late stage in the proceedings are not documents of that nature. They are not public documents. The principal document is a letter said to be signed by Mr. Mackenzie himself which it is said will have a material bearing on the question in dispute in this case and the only ground upon which it has been suggested that there was good cause for non-production of that and of the other documents is that those documents were in fact exhibited in the proceedings under O. XXI, r. 100, and, therefore, it must be presumed that they at least were not fabricated for the purposes of the present case. Further, it is said that both parties were aware of these documents because in the previous proceedings both the plaintiff and the defendants had also been parties. I am not prepared to say that the mere fact that a document has been in existence for some length of time before the proceedings were instituted is in itself sufficiently good cause for allowing the documents to be produced at a later stage of the proceedings. When the application was made to the learned Munsif no cause apparently of any sort was shown why the documents should be admitted and what exactly were the grounds which induced the learned Munsif to reject those documents we have now no means of determining. The learned Vakil can give us no assistance upon that point and all we know from the record of the case is that the documents were tendered and rejected. It may well be, in the absence of any proof as to the cause which was shewn for their late production, that the Munsif had very good reasons either from a perusal of the documents themselves or from something which may have been stated to him in Court for rejecting these particular documents, and in fact, so far as we can judge for ourselves, the principal document in the case is one which indicates something if not exactly a fraud something which would indicate a desire to set up a different state of fact from those which were actually existing. What the exact worth of these documents may be as evidence it is impossible for us to determine but having had the documents produced, an advantage which my learned brother who heard the second appeal in this Court and from whose judgment this appeal is brought, had not, I certainly am not prepared to say that the Munsif exercised a wrong discretion in rejecting them at the stage at which they were tendered. No real cause has, to my mind, been made out why they should necessarily be accepted and, in these circumstances, it does not appear to me that it is right that this Court should interfere with the discretion which in all probability, and as far as one can judge from the circumstances disclosed, was a perfectly proper discretion on the part of the Munsif. I think that the decision of the learned Judge under appeal should be set aside and the decree of the Subordinate Judge affirming that of the Munsif should be restored. The appellant is entitled to her costs of this appeal and of the appeal to Mr. Justice Ross.

(1) 12 O. W. N. 812.

UCHIP KOPRI v. ADHIK MANDAL

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 28—Place of registration—Small item of property included for purposes of registration—Registration, validity of—Mokarrari, malguzar, meaning of.

The mere fact that a small item of property situated in a particular district is included in a deed of transfer in order to give jurisdiction to the Sub-Registrar of that district to register the deed, will not invalidate the registration, if the property was actually intended to be conveyed by the deed. [p. 493, col. 1.]

The use of the word mukarrari does not in itself imply any permanent interest but merely fixity of rent. [p. 494, col. 2.]

The word malguzar means, primarily, rent payer. It may equally be applied to a tenure-holder or a raiya. In North Behar it generally means tenure-holder. [p. 494, col. 2.]

Appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from the decision of Mr. Justice Bucknill.

Messrs. S. Ahmad and S. Saran, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. Imam and S. Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Dawson Miller, C. J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted by the respondents as plaintiffs against the appellants as defendants to object the defendants from certain lands on the ground that the plaintiffs were the occupancy *raiya*s of the land and the defendants were under-*raiya*s holding under them. The plaintiffs also claimed mesne profits from the date of the expiry of the notice to quit, which was duly served, until the date of possession. The plaintiffs' title to the land as *raiya*s is based upon a purchase by registered deed in the year 1914 from Nunoo Lal and Dwarka Nath, the previous tenants.

The defendants disputed the validity of the plaintiffs' title on the ground that the sale-deed was not properly registered. They further contended that the plaintiffs and their predecessors were tenure-holders and not occupancy *raiya*s and that they, defendants, had acquired occupancy rights as *raiya*s under the plaintiffs. They further relied upon a certain representation contained in a rent-receipt granted by the plaintiffs to the effect that they were tenure-holders and pleaded that this created an estoppel.

The Munsif before whom the case came for trial found all the issues in favour of the plaintiffs and decreed their suit.

UCHIT KOPRI v. ADHIK MANDAL

His decision was upheld by the Subordinate Judge on appeal and again by Mr. Justice Bucknill on second appeal to this Court.

The present appeal is preferred by the defendants under the Letters Patent from the decision of Mr. Justice Bucknill.

The first point which was urged before us in this appeal was, that the transfer to the plaintiffs by Nunoo Lal and Dwarka Nath in 1914 was invalid as it was not properly registered. It appears that the land transferred by the sale-deed measured 56 bighas 10 cottahs. The 56 bighas which is the land in dispute in this case are situated in the Purnea district and the 10 cottahs are situated in the Bhagalpur district. It is conceded that the 10 cottahs were included in the sale-deed for the purpose of enabling the sale-deed to be registered in the Bhagalpur district where in fact the registration took place at the sub-registry office at Madhipura. It was not contended that the 10 cottahs of land at Madhipur had no existence nor was any objection taken in the written statement that the registration was not valid and no issue was framed upon this point. The 6th issue, however, was framed thus :—

"Is the kabala propounded by the plaintiffs a legal and valid document or not."

This issue was not pressed at the trial and the Munsif found that it had been abandoned. Before the Subordinate Judge on appeal the appellants contended that the registration was invalid, a point which does not appear to have been taken in the trial Court. They relied upon a deposition given by the first plaintiff in an earlier case in 1915 in the Munsif's Court at Purnea which had presumably been put in evidence at the trial in which he stated: "The kobala was executed at Madhipura. I purchased 10 cottahs of land at Maghipura—it is still in possession of Nunoo Lal for the purpose of getting the kobala registered there." It was found by the Subordinate Judge that the land was in fact purchased and even if it was purchased with the express intention of giving jurisdiction to the Sub-Registrar at Madhipura to register the deed, there is nothing illegal or improper about this. It was for the learned Judge to say whether the purchase of the 10 cottahs was a genuine transaction or not. He found that it was and this appears to me to dispose of this point.

It was next contended that what was purchased by the plaintiffs was not a holding but a tenure and that the defendants were not under-*raiya*ts but *raiya*ts holding under the plaintiffs as tenure-holders and could not, therefore, be given notice to quit. The learned Subordinate Judge treated the case as one in which the onus was on the plaintiffs to prove that the defendants were under-*raiya*ts and that they (the plaintiffs) were *raiya*ts and not tenure holders and no objection is taken by the appellants to his ruling upon this point. He went carefully through the evidence upon this part of the case and came to a clear finding that Nunoo Lal and Dwarkanath the predecessors in interest of the plaintiffs had acquired the land for the purpose of cultivation only and had khas possession by cultivating the land and not by collecting rents from tenants. The rent receipts for the rent paid to their landlord were produced and they were therein described as *raiya*t jotedars and it was found that for nearly fifty years the proprietors Ugranarain and Fatehnarain had treated Nunoo and Dwarka as cultivating *raiya*ts. It was further shewn that some of the defendant's co-sharers had purchased a share of the proprietary interest of the plaintiffs' landlords and that they had collected rent from the plaintiffs describing them in the rent receipts as *raiya*t-jotedars. There were other documents also, notably a plaint in a rent-suit instituted by one of the defendant's co-sharers against Nanoo Lal, in which the interest of the plaintiffs' predecessors was described as that of *raiya*ts in possession of the land through *dar-raiya*ts. The evidence to the contrary given on behalf of the defendants was very meagre and was not accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge. It was contended, however, that the area of the land transferred to the plaintiffs was over 100 standard bighas and that, therefore, there was a presumption arising under section 5 (5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act that the tenant was a tenure-holder until the contrary was shewn. The learned Judge found as a fact that the area was 56½ bighas as stated in the kobala of 1914 and that no such presumption arose. It was pointed out, however, on behalf of the appellants that although in the kobala the total area of the land was described as 57 bighas 1 cottah it was also stated to measure 167 bighas 10 cottahs when measured by a laggi of 4

cubits which is the standard measurement and that the smaller area had been arrived at by measurement with a laggi of $6\frac{1}{2}$ cubits. The evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs was that the standard pole in the chakla where the land in suit was situated was $4\frac{1}{2}$ cubits and not $6\frac{1}{2}$ cubits. If this be accepted the actual standard measurement would be under 100 bighas. This evidence appears to have been uncontradicted by the defendants' witnesses and the learned Judge accepted that evidence as correct and found that the area was under 100 bighas. As a finding of fact this is conclusive. The finding, however, was criticised by the appellants as being contrary to the evidence in the kobala itself which described the area of the land when measured by a 4 cubits pole as over 100 bighas. This statement in the kobala does not appear to have been drawn to the notice of the learned Judge and no mention is made of it in the judgment. It is contended that it is conclusive of the area and that the learned Judge ought to have given effect to the presumption arising out of the Statute in considering the evidence as to the nature of the plaintiffs' interest. I am not prepared to say that the statement in the kobala is conclusive as to the area of the land. It was undoubtedly evidence and very strong evidence of the area but there was evidence of a contrary nature which was apparently uncontradicted by the defendants who appear not to have relied upon the statement in the kobala before the Subordinate Judge, but even assuming that it must be taken that the land in suit measured over 100 standard bighas and that a presumption arose therefrom in favour of the appellant's contention that the plaintiff's interest was that of tenure-holders the learned Judge did undoubtedly place the onus upon the plaintiffs to prove that their interest was that of raiyyats and after reviewing the whole of the evidence agreed with the finding of the trial Court and came to a clear conclusion that the plaintiffs had discharged the burden of proof which lay upon them. In these circumstances, it seems to me that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on this part of the case ought not to be disturbed.

The last point which was urged before us was that in the year 1324 F. the plaintiffs granted a rent-receipt to the defendants which contains at the foot the following entry : "let out the jama zamain mukarrari " and it is signed by the plaintiffs, the first plaintiff Adhik Lal Mandal being described as Sadar Malguzar. This receipt was granted after some dispute between the plaintiffs and defendants and after their differences had been referred to a panchayat and a compromise arrived at. It was contended that the use of the word Mukarrari and the description of the plaintiff as Sadar Malguzar are an admission that the defendants held a permanent interest at a fixed rent and that the plaintiffs are tenure-holders and that as this was arrived at as the result of a compromise by which some nazarana was paid to the plaintiffs the plaintiffs are estopped from denying the truth of the representation made in the rent-receipt. What the exact nature of the compromise was does not appear to have been explained beyond what can be gathered from the rent-receipt. The use of the word mukarrari does not in itself imply any permanent interest but merely fixity of rent. In dealing with this part of the case the learned Munsif observed as follows :—"The word mukarrari means fixity of rent and is not intended to convey the meaning of occupancy raiyyat. It is urged that the rent of an under-raiyyat cannot be fixed in perpetuity and so it must mean occupancy raiyyat with rent fixed. What the parties meant by the expression mukarrari in Exts. A and B-1" (the latter being the counterpart of the former) "there is no evidence to show and I am left to speculate as to its meaning not from evidence but from a mere supposition not borne out by the other circumstances. As far as the Glossary goes no such meaning attaches to the word mukarrari and I am not justified in interpreting it in that light. It is quite probable that the parties intended that the rent must be fixed once for all and that this may operate as an admission of the plaintiffs as to fixity of rent. Beyond that it cannot take away the plaintiffs' right in ejectionment." The learned Subordinate Judge took the same view but neither of them was apparently asked to attach any importance to the description of the first plaintiff as Sadr Malguzar as this is not dealt with in either of the judgments. The word malguzar means, primarily, rent payer. It may equally be applied either to a tenure-holder or a raiyyat and although the word malguzar is one of several used locally in North Bihar to mean tenure holder, the document is not so clear and unambiguous as to amount to a representation on behalf of the plaintiffs that they were treating themselves as tenure-holders and the defendants as *raiya*s holding under them. It is, as Mr. Justice Bucknill pointed out in dealing with this part of the case, "extremely unlikely in view of the position which had always been maintained by the plaintiffs and their predecessors that that position would have been completely thrown away by an admission in a document such as this." The findings of each of the lower Courts are very strong as to the status of the plaintiffs and defendants and I am not prepared to hold that a chance expressio of at least doubtful import in a rent-receipt is a clear representation by the plaintiffs acted upon by the defendants and amounting to an estoppel. In my opinion this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 115, O. XXI, r. 16—Execution of decree—Assignees, dispute between—Question tried in form of suit—Appeal—Revision.

Two persons applied for execution of the same decree, each claiming to be an assignee from the decree-holder. The matter was treated as one under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and eventually the Court converted the proceeding into a suit and decided that the assignment in favour of one of the parties must prevail over the assignment in favour of the other. The latter filed an application for revision against the order ;

Held, that no revision lay against the order passed by the trial Court, for if the matter was one arising under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, the order was open to appeal and not to revision, and if it arose out of a suit the remedy again was by way of appeal against the decree in the suit, but if, on the other hand, it was one to be treated as falling under

O. XXI, r. 16 of the Civil Procedure Code, it could not be said that by trying it in the form of a suit, the Court had passed an order without jurisdiction. [p. 497, col. 1.]

Revision from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Patna, dated the 25th June 1923.

Mr. S. N. Bose, for the Petitioners.

Mr. B. C. Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

Note by Stamp Reporter :—This is an application for revision under section 115, C. P. C. and section 107 of the Government of India Act. The decision sought to be revised is dated 25-6-23 and is the final judgment by the lower Court in suit No. 61 of 1923 which ended in a formal decree, a copy of which has not been filed with the present application. The decision aforesaid is a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The decision being a decree, an appeal lies under section 94 of the Code. As an appeal lies, the application for revision under section 115 of the Code or under section 107 of the Government of India Act does not lie. The application for revision is simply an attempt at non-payment of the proper Court-fee leviable on a memo of appeal from an original decree.

I request that this note may, subject to approval by the Registrar, be placed before the Hon'ble Judges at the hearing of the application.

ORDER.

Jwala Prasad, J.—We have heard the learned Vakils on both sides. On the 24th February 1923 the petitioners filed an application for execution of a mortgage-decree, dated the 8th December 1915, said to have been assigned to them by means of a registered document, dated the 5th February 1923, by one Basant Lal, the original decree-holder opposite party No. 2. On the 26th February 1923, the opposite party No. 1, Bajrangi Prasad, put in an application for execution of the same decree upon the ground that he was an assignee of the decree by the same decree-holder Basant Lal. Both these applications for execution were put up for hearing on 10th March 1923. The question, therefore, before the Court below was as to which of the executions should proceed. This involved a determination as to the validity of the deeds of assignment in favour of the rival claimants to execute the decree, namely, the petitioners and opposite party No. 1. The matter was treated as one under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, namely, as to the right of the rival claimants to represent the original decree-holder and execute the decree. The judgment-debtors did not make any objection, and, therefore, the dispute was with the two rival claimants as representatives of the decree-holder. The case, however, was treated as one under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and in the course of the hearing of the matter the Court thought that the question was one which should have been determined in a regular suit; and the learned Subordinate Judge converted the proceeding into a suit under clause (2) of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. Ultimately, he held by his decision, dated the 25th June 1923, that the deed of assignment in favour of opposite party No. 1, Bajrangi Prasad Singh, must prevail, and that the deeds of assignment set up by the petitioners were ante-dated and were suspicious. He, therefore, held that evidently the opposite party No. 1 was entitled to proceed with the execution of the decree obtained by Basant Lal, opposite party No. 2. The present application is directed against the said order of the Subordinate Judge, and it is said that his order was without jurisdiction and hence capable of being revised by us in our revisional jurisdiction under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The order in question purports to have been passed in a suit into which the proceeding originally instituted was converted by the Subordinate Judge. A decree also has been prepared in accordance with the said order. The opposite party had, under the direction of the Court, to pay Court-fee upon Rs. 7,000, the consideration money mentioned in his deed of assignment. Now, if the order of the Subordinate Judge is one passed in a regular suit and culminated in a decree regularly prepared and passed under the Code of Civil Procedure, then a first appeal would lie from that decree to this Court. If, on the other hand, the order is one passed under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, then also an appeal would lie to this Court.

It is, however, contended that the order in question is neither passed in a regular suit nor under section 47 of the Code, for the question determined by the Court did not arise in a dispute between the parties to the original suit but between the representatives of one of the parties to the suit, namely, the decree-holder.

It is then contended that as the dispute did not come under section 47 of the Code, the Court had no jurisdiction to convert the application made by Bajrangi Prasad Singh into a suit, for it is said that under clause (2) the Court could only convert a proceeding under section 47 into a suit, but as the application was not a valid proceeding under the section the Court had no jurisdiction to treat the same as a plaint in a suit. The learned Vakil contends that the applications of the parties and the order of the Court below would come under O. XXI, r. 16 of the Code, under which the Court has to determine whether an assignee of the decree-holder should be permitted to proceed in execution. It is said that, as the matter comes under that provision of the Code, there is no appeal, and as there is no appeal the present application is competent as an application in revision; but the learned Vakil has failed to show that the final order of the Court below directing Bajrangi Prasad Singh to proceed with the execution was not within the jurisdiction of the Court. Hence the order is not capable of revision. With this final order the learned Vakil has no grievance; but he impugns the procedure adopted by the Court below whereby the Subordinate Judge arrived at this conclusion. In short, his argument is that the Court below should not have tried the application of Bajrangi Prasad Singh as a suit, and should have simply determined the right of one of the rival claimants to execute the decree, leaving the matter to be fought out and determined in a regular suit instituted by Bajrangi Prasad Singh or by the petitioners. He considers the procedure adopted by the Court below to be a grave irregularity affecting the final order passed by the Court below. By whatever method the Court has arrived at its decision, it cannot be said that the Subordinate Judge acted without jurisdiction. In trying the matter as a suit, perhaps, the Subordinate Judge went more exhaustively than he would have done had the matter been treated only as an application under section 47 of the Code. Therefore, we cannot accept the contention of the learned Vakil that the final order of the Court below was without jurisdiction even if it came under O. XXI, r. 16 of the Code. We cannot interfere with this order in revision. If, on the other hand, the matter came under section 47 of the Code, the application in revision is incompetent. Again, if it did not come under section 47 but arose in the course of the trial of the application treated by the Court below as a suit, there is the final decree prepared by the Court below, and the question now raised cannot be determined except in a regular appeal filed against the decree. The present application, therefore, has to be rejected.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the petitioners then asked us to convert the application in revision filed in this Court into a memorandum of appeal against the decree passed by the Court below. This can be done upon the petitioners paying proper Court-fee and filing a copy of the decree.

In the circumstances of the case, we are prepared to treat the application as an appeal upon the condition mentioned above which must be complied with within a week of the determination of the amount of Court-fee payable upon the memorandum of appeal. Upon the requisite Court-fee being paid and copy of the decree filed, the appeal will be heard without the preparation of any paper book, the appellants undertaking to supply typed copies of the papers necessary for determination of the appeal, which we do not think are many.

On the failure of the petitioners to comply with the conditions mentioned above, namely, the payment of the Court-fee and filing of a copy of the decree, the present application will be treated as dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) ss. 25, 87—Landlord and tenant—Non-transferable occupancy holding—Abandonment, relinquishment, repudiation, what amounts to—Sale of holding in execution of decree—Tenant residing in homestead and cultivating land under transferee—Ejectment—Transferee, position of.

A non-transferable occupancy holding was sold in execution of a money-decree and a mortgage-decree against the tenants, but the latter took a tenancy under the transferee and continued to reside on their homestead land and to cultivate several plots comprised in the holding. In a suit by the landlord for ejectment of the transferee ;

Held, that there was no abandonment, relinquishment or repudiation of the holding by the tenants, and the landlord was not, therefore, entitled to evict either the tenants or their transferee.

Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy, 27 Ind. Cas. 61 ; 42 C. 172 at p. 223 ; 18 C. W. N. 971 ; 20 C. L. J. 52 (F. B.), explained.

Per Rankin J.—A mere denial by an occupancy tenant of the landlord's title or of the relationship of landlord and tenant is not, by itself, a ground for eviction of the tenant, but if in a previous suit the tenant successfully denied the landlord's title, then, on the principle of estoppel by record, an eviction may take place. [p. 500, col. 1.]

A landlord who has a mere right of reversion expectant on the determination of the tenancy and who has not, as against his tenant, the right to end the tenancy, cannot maintain ejectment against a third person merely because that third person has no title in himself. [p. 501, col. 1.]

A transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding can claim no right as against the landlord has a right to present possession, he cannot maintain ejectment against the tenant or his transferee. The only remedy which the landlord has against the transferee in such a case is to ask for a declaration that the transferee has not got the tenancy right in the landlord's property. [p. 501, col. 1.]

Semble : There can be no abandonment of an occupancy holding apart from the provisions contained in section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Per Mukerji, J.—The terms "abandonment" "relinquishment" and "repudiation" are terms distinct and not interchangeable ; though proof of one may be some evidence, though not conclusive, yet relevant for establishing facts and circumstances, which might go to constitute another. [p. 501, col. 2.]

Section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, though it does not purport to define abandonment, plainly indicates what it is. The material elements are (i), that the raiyat should abandon his residence, and that he should do so voluntarily, without notice to his landlord, and without arranging for payment of his rent as it falls due, and (ii) that he should cease to cultivate the holding either by himself or by some other person. [p. 501, col. 2.]

More non-payment of rent is not evidence of abandonment or relinquishment, though non-payment of rent, coupled with non-occupation of land or other facts and circumstances, is evidence of an intention to abandon the holding or may amount to relinquishment. [p. 502, col. 2.]

Gohar Sheik v. Alimudin Sheik, 51 Ind. Cas. 856; 30 C. L. J. 13; Nilmany Dass v. Sonatun Doshayi, 15 C. 17; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 597, followed.

The whole law of re-entry is based upon the principle that, so long as the tenancy is not terminated by abandonment, relinquishment or repudiation, the tenancy interposes and operates as a barrier and the landlord cannot re-enter. [p. 503, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Jessore, dated the 24th August 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court, Narail, dated the 15th September 1920.

Babu Surendra Chendra Sen, R.B., (with him Babu Hemendra Chendra Sen), for the Appellant:—Where a raiyat sells his non-transferable occupancy holding and takes a sub-lease, in some cases it has been decided that the landlord is entitled to get khas possession by ejecting both the transferor and the transferee, whereas in other cases it has been decided that the transferor, i.e., the original raiyat is not liable to be ejected but the landlord is entitled to get a declaration that the transferee has not acquired a title as against the landlord. So the decisions are all uniform in this respect that the landlord in such cases is entitled to a declaration that the transferee has not acquired any title.

It is true that the present case is not one of voluntary transfer but is a case where the raiyat's holding was sold in execution of a decree and the defendant purchased at the execution sale. It has been decided that a person who is not the landlord may also acquire a title against the raiyat in execution sale. The question as to abandonment of the holding or repudiation of the tenancy does not arise inasmuch as the present suit is not against the original tenant. Even if such question is relevant for the present purpose, my submission is that the tenant has abandoned the holding and repudiated the tenancy. The admitted facts are that the original raiyat has taken a sub-lease of a portion of the land and is paying rent to the defendant. When, therefore, the original raiyat has attorned to the defendant he should be considered to have repudiated the tenancy, and as he occupies the land as a sub-tenant of the transferee he has abandoned his original raiyati right under his landlord. Refers to the following cases:—

Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (1), Chandra Binode Kundu v. Ala Bux (Special Bench case) (2), Dinanath Roy v. Krishna Bejoy (3), Madan Mandal v. Mahima Chandra Mazumdar (4), Kalim Sheikh v. Mochan Mandal (5), Rajani Kanta Biswas v. Ekkari Das (6), Kalicharan Ghosh v. Arman (7), Kalinath Chakravarti v. Upendra Chandra Chowdhury (8).

I submit that the cases in Naba Kishore Saha v. Dhananjoy Saha (9) and Separjan v. Ramdeh Rai, (10) relied on by the lower Appellate Court are distinguishable.

Babu Trailokya Nath Ghose, for the Respondent:—In this case it is necessary to determine the question whether the original raiyat has abandoned the holding or repudiated the tenancy. The raiyat is still on a portion of the land and, although he is there as a sub-tenant of the transferee he has not actually abandoned in law or fact; he has not repudiated the tenancy inasmuch as neither the taking of a sub-lease nor payment of rent to a third person has the effect of a repudiation of the tenancy. I submit that the present case is covered by the decisions in Separjan v. Ramdeh Rai (10), and Naba Kishore Saha v. Dhananjoy Saha (9), which have been relied on by the lower Appellate Court.

RAMMESH CHANDRA MITRA v. DAIBA CHARAN DAS

Rai Bahadur Surendra Chandra Sen, replied in brief.

C. A. V.

On the day on which judgment was delivered the learned Vakil for the Appellant referred to the case in Monmatha Kumar Roy v. Jasoda Lal (11) and contended that the plaintiff was entitled to get a declaration that the transferee did not acquire any title against the plaintiff.

JUDGMENT.

Rankin, J.—In this case, the landlord sues the transferee of a non-transferable occupancy jote for khas possession of the holding. It appears that two tenants, Raj Mohun and Sonatan, held the suit lands as occupancy raiyats under the plaintiff. In execution of a money-decree obtained against the tenants as well as a mortgage-decree obtained against them, the holding was sold to the defendant No. 1 and thereupon the tenants took a tenancy under the transferee remaining upon their homestead portion which was part of the land of the tenancy and also remaining as cultivators of a certain number of plots being part of the tenancy. In these circumstances, there has been a difference of opinion between the Courts below. The learned Munsif, following Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (1), has held that, as the tenants no longer pay rent to the plaintiff and as they now claim to hold the homestead and some plots of land within the jama under the transferee and not under the plaintiff and as there is no independent evidence that the tenants still regard the plaintiff as their landlord, it is clear that there has been an abandonment of the tenancy within the meaning of Dayamoyi's case. (1) He proceeded in theory entirely upon abandonment and, as a matter of fact, in the first Court, little or nothing appears to have been said either about repudiation or about relinquishment. The learned District Judge of Jessore has taken another view. He has treated the case as a question solely of abandonment. He has pointed out that the plaintiff spoke of abandonment and that there is no allegation of relinquishment or repudiation. He has found that, upon Dayamoyi's case (1) and certain subsequent decisions, there is no abandonment and he has accordingly, as against the transferee, dismissed the suit.

There was another defendant against whom the suit was also dismissed. In my opinion that circumstance helps neither party and I do not propose to refer to it again.

This is a typical case and one constantly coming before the Courts. The conditions under which we have to decide it are, I think, these : we are bound by Dayamoyi's case; (1) but the decisions previous to Dayamoyi's case (1) are not now necessarily binding upon us. This circumstance is of the less importance that the relevant decisions prior to Dayamoyi's case (1) are in almost no single circumstance consistent or well settled. So far as regards the subsequent cases purporting to interpret Dayamoyi's case, (1) we are, I think, bound either to follow those decisions or to refer the matter to a Full Bench. But, above and beyond these cases to which I have just very generally referred, we have to remember that there stand the express provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In dealing with this case, I propose to go first to the decision of Dayamoyi's case (1) and to examine the state of the authorities applicable to such a case as the present.

In the second paragraph in the reported judgment of Dayamoyi's case (1), the proposition laid down by the Full Bench is in these terms : "Where the transfer is a sale of the whole holding, the landlord, in the absence of his consent, is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding ; but where the transfer is of a part only of the holding, or not by way of sale, the landlord, though he has not consented, is not ordinarily entitled to recover possession of the holding, unless there has been (a) an abandonment within the meaning of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, or (b) a relinquishment of the holding, or (c) a repudiation of the tenancy." It will be observed that, in both branches of that proposition, occurs the word "ordinarily", and that word by itself shows that the circumstances mentioned in each branch are being regarded as evidence of, or, as importing reference to, some higher, more precise or more ultimate test. One asks one-self in the present case whether the circumstance that the tenants are still upon their homestead lands and are still cultivating part of the holding is a consideration which takes the case out of the qualification intended by the word "ordinarily". I am quite clear that such a case as this is not an ordinary case for the purpose of the proposition. In the second part of the proposition, it would appear that the ultimate test is abandonment (under section 87) relinquishment or repudiation of the tenancy. But it does seem to me possible that the meaning of the first part of the proposition is that, on proof that a tenant has transferred the whole of his holding out and out, the Court may conclude that there is an abandonment not necessarily within the meaning of section 87 or a repudiation of the tenancy that would not necessarily be allowed as by itself a sufficient reason for eviction under section 25 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I say that that is a possible interpretation of the language of the first branch. It has to be remembered that, whether they were right or not, there were a considerable number of decisions to the effect that section 87 is not exhaustive. Whether the Court meant to keep that open is not clear. In like manner, as regards repudiation, the law, as I understand it, is that a mere denial of the landlord's title or of the relationship of landlord and tenant is not, by itself, a ground of eviction, having regard to the express terms of such sections as sections 10 and 25; but that, if in a previous suit, a tenant successfully denied his landlord's title then, on the principle of estoppel by record, an eviction may take place. This question whether in interpreting the word "ordinarily" in the first part of the proposition, we are to have sole regard to section 87 and to the provisions of the law as regards eviction which I have already expressed is, to my mind, the main difficulty in these cases. In the present case, however, I am of opinion that on the evidence and on the findings, there is no justification for our holding that there is, in any legal sense of the word, an abandonment or in any legal sense of the word a repudiation. In this matter, one has, first of all, to remember that section 87 speaks of the tenant abandoning his residence without making provision for the payment of rent and ceasing to cultivate the holding by himself or another person. In the present case, the tenant has not changed his residence and has not altogether ceased to cultivate the holding. There is no proof of refusal to pay rent. It seems to me, that, on these facts, any mere inference to be drawn from the fact of the sale in execution cannot amount to abandonment or repudiation in any sense of those expressions justifiable under the law. It has to be observed that in this case the sale was forced upon the tenants. Assuming that there was a mortgage-deed as well as a money-deed, still there can be no doubt that the money-deed alone would have necessitated the sale. That being so, the tenants are in this position that they cannot question the title of the transferee. The landlord may elect to do so or may elect not to do so. One has to look to what the tenants in these circumstances have done. Not knowing whether the landlord will or will not assent, they have made terms with their transferee which provide that they shall have still a residence on the suit lands and shall still have the right to cultivate some of the lands. It seems to me that the tenants have done as much as they reasonably could in these circumstances to escape conduct amounting to abandonment or amounting to repudiation.

I do not propose here to discuss the question whether there is any real justification for the proposition that there may be abandonment apart from the terms of section 87. Having regard to the provisions as regards eviction and to the express terms of section 87, it is manifest that there is considerable difficulty in maintaining the doctrine of abandonment outside the Bengal Tenancy Act. The only common law on the subject known to me would be the general principle that, for breach of a condition of a tenancy as distinct from a mere covenant, the landlord may re-enter. So far as contractual conditions are concerned, they are covered by the express language of such sections as section 25. So far as I know, ejectment for breach of an implied condition has always been limited to cases either of estoppel by record or of cases where the tenant has made an attempt to assert a title paramount to the landlord in himself or in some other person.

It was contended by Mr. Sen that, although as between landlord and tenant there might be no right to evict, as between the landlord and the transferee whom he has not recognised and who has no right as against him, a decree for ejectment would be quite admissible. For that proposition, there is undoubtedly some authority prior to Dayamoyi's case (1) in particular, in the cases of Dinanath Roy v. Krishna Bejoy Saha (3) and Madar Mandal v. Mahima Chandra Majumdar (4). Since Dayamoyi's case, (1) I do not regard these decisions as binding and in my opinion, that proposition is absolutely indefensible on any principle. It is perfectly true that the transferee can claim no right as against the landlord; but, unless the landlord has a right to present possession, he cannot possibly maintain ejectment against anybody whether he be the tenant's transferee, the tenant's invitee or licensee or tenant's uncle, cousin or aunt. It is quite impossible that, on any principle of law, the landlord who has a mere right of reversion expectant on the determination of the tenancy and who has not, as against his tenant, the right to end the tenancy could maintain ejectment against a third person merely because that third person has no title in himself. Accordingly, in this particular case, the fact that the suit was brought against the transferee and not against the tenants is, in my opinion, no reason whatever why the landlord should succeed. The correct form of the question in these cases was put by Sir R. Couch in Narendra Narain Roy v. Ishan Chunder Sen, (12) and is quoted in Manlan Mondol's case (4), one has to find whether nothing is left in the tenant which would prevent the Zemindar from recovering the possession from the person who claims under the transfer. The landlord has to show that he is entitled to possession of the land now. If he is not entitled to possession of the land now then the only remedy which he could in any case get against the transferee would be a declaration that the transferee has not got the tenancy right in the landlord's property.

The cases subsequent to Dayamoyi's case (1) do not, in my opinion, conflict with the view expressed. On the contrary, the case of Sehper Jun v. Ramdeh Rai (10), seems to me almost exactly in point and the case of Monmatha Kumar Ray v. Jasoda Lal to (11) which Mr. Sen has been so good as to refer us this morning is, in my opinion, exactly to the same point. For these reasons, I think this appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

Mukerji, J : -- I entirely agree in the order proposed to be passed by my learned brother; but in view of the importance of the questions involved I would make a few observations as to what I consider about the matter.

The original tenants, according to the findings of both the Courts below, are still in possession of their homestead and several of the culturable plots, under the transferee, the defendant No. 1. It has not been found, nor do I think has it been suggested, that the original tenants ever vacated the holding in pursuance of the sale. The sale, therefore, operated in effect not as a transfer of an entire holding but only of a portion of it. There is authority for the proposition that in such a state of things the sale in substance is a sale of a portion of the holding [see Noba Kishore Saha v. Dhananjay Saha (9)]. Now, applying to this position the rule laid down in the case of Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Ray (1) the landlord would not be entitled to recover possession of the holding unless there has been (a) an abandonment within the meaning of section 87. Bengal Tenancy Act or (b) relinquishment of the holding or (c) a repudiation of the tenancy. It is quite clear then that, in order to succeed, the landlord will have to bring his case within one or other of the aforesaid three classes.

Now as to abandonment, it is not open to us upon the plain terms of the aforesaid rule to consider whether the abandonment necessary to be established to confer a right of re-entry on the landlord may not be of a description not covered by section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a point upon which the decisions appear to be apparently conflicting.

The terms "abandonment," "relinquishment" and "repudiation" are terms distinct and not interchangeable; though proof of one may be some evidence, though not conclusive, yet relevant for establishing facts and circumstances, which might go to constitute another. Section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, though it does not purport to define abandonment, plainly indicates what it is. The material elements are (i) that the raiyat should abandon his residence, and that he should do so voluntarily, without notice to his landlord, and without arranging for payment of his rent as it falls due, and (ii) that he should cease to cultivate the holding either by himself or by some other person. In the case of Narendra Nath Ray v. Ishan Chandra Sen (12), which was a case under Act VIII (B.C.) of 1869, Chief Justice Sir Richard Couch observed that if a ryot having a right of occupancy, endeavours to transfer it to any person, and in fact

quits his occupation and ceases himself to cultivate or hold the land, he may be rightly considered to have abandoned his right. In Madar Mondol v. Mohima Chandra Majumdar (4) the Court observed that there can be no doubt that, in order to entitle the landlord to re-enter on abandonment by the tenant, it must be an abandonment in the words of section 87, namely, that the raiyyat voluntarily abandons his residence without notice to the landlord and without arranging for the payment of his rent as it falls due, and ceases to cultivate. In Ram Pershad Koeri v. Jawahir Roy (13) it was held that abandonment is the effect of the act of the tenant in vacating the holding without making arrangement for payment of his rent as it falls due and for cultivating the land. In Separjan v. Ramdeh Rai (10) it was held that where a tenant having a non-transferable right of occupancy sells such right to a third person, and having obtained a sub-lease from the purchaser, remains in possession of the land and cultivates it, the landlord, in the absence of repudiation by the tenant of his relation to the landlord as such, is not entitled to recover possession, inasmuch as it does not amount to abandonment, and the learned Judges relied for this proposition upon the decisions in Madar Mondol v. Mahima Chandra Majumdar, (4) Rajani Kanta Biswas v. Ekkowri Das (6) and Kalim Sheikh v. Mohan Mandal. (5) The decisions in the cases of Ishan Chandra Dhupi v. Nishi Chandra Duphi (14) and Sailabala Debi v. Sriram Bhattacharya (15) may perhaps be distinguished on the ground that in those cases the ryot had parted with the whole of the agricultural portion of the holding and remained in possession of the homestead portion only and ceased paying rent,—circumstances from which abandonment might be inferred. The decision in the case of Kali Nath Chakravarti v. Kumar Upendra Chandra (16) in so far as it purports to lay down that where a tenant transfers his non-transferable holding, ceases to pay rent to his landlord and accepts a new tenancy from the transferee and to be based upon the Full Bench Case in Narendra Nath Ray v. Ishan Chunder Sen (12), referred to above, cannot be treated as dealing with a question of abandonment within the meaning of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the present case none of the facts which would go to constitute an abandonment has been proved or found by the Courts below. Mere non-payment of rent is not evidence of abandonment though non-payment of rent, coupled with non-occupation of land, is evidence of an intention to abandon it. Gohar Shiekh v. Alimuddin Sheik (17).

The next question is, has there been a relinquishment of the holding? It is sufficient for me to say that it was not alleged that there was any. It is true that rent has not been paid, but mere non-payment is not sufficient though coupled with other facts and circumstances it may show relinquishment, Nilmany Dass v. Sonatun Doshayi, (18)

Nextly, has there been a repudiation of the tenancy? I am not prepared to hold that merely entering into an arrangement with the transferee to hold under him a portion of the holding, the sale whereof is binding on the tenant under the law a portion of the holding having been sold in execution of a money-decree and the other in execution of a mortgage-decree would amount to repudiation of the tenancy. If special facts are proved such as were found in the case of Rajani Kanta Biswas v. Ekkowri Das (6) or the refusal on the part of the tenant to pay rent continued for a sufficiently long series of years and is based upon the ground of non-liability, repudiation may be inferred. So also in the case of Monmatha Kumar Ray v. Josada Lal (11) to which our attention has been drawn by Mr. Sen this morning it was held that mere execution of a kabuliat in favour of the transferee does not amount to a repudiation of the tenancy. The original tenants were not parties in the present suit though one of them has been examined as a witness; and what he is alleged to have deposed in the present suit can not be taken to have constituted a repudiation of the tenancy in the eye of law.

A further question arose in the case as to whether the landlord could get a decree for khas possession against the transferee although there was no abandonment, relinquishment or repudiation made out on the part of the original tenants. Mr. Sen contended on the authority of several cases of this Court that a landlord is entitled to have such a decree although he may not succeed in ejecting the original tenants. Reliance has been placed upon the decisions in Madar Mondol v. Mohima Chandra Majumdar (4) and Dina-nath Roy v. Krishna Bejoy Saha (3) and other cases upon which they are based. Speaking for myself, and I say this with the greatest respect for the learned Judges who decided these cases, I have not been able to discover any principle upon which these decisions are founded. The whole law of re-entry is based upon the principle that, so long as the tenancy is not terminated by one or other of the modes indicated above, the tenancy interposes and operates as a barrier and the landlord cannot re-enter. I cannot very well see how the original tenant may not be touched on the ground that the tenancy subsists, and, so far as the landlord is concerned, the tenancy continues unaffected and the landlord is entitled to look for payment of rent to the original tenant, and yet the landlord can get a decree for khass possession as against the transferee. At any rate, we have not been referred to any decision since the decision in Dayamoyi's case (1) in which a similar view has been taken. In the case of Mon-matha Kumar Roy v. Josada Lal (11) under similar circumstances, it appears that the landlord only obtained a declaration against the transferee that the latter had no right as against the landlord. Of course, if the transferee has not acquired any title by his purchase there is nothing to prevent the landlord from getting a declaration in a suit properly framed for the purpose, that the transfer was not binding upon him, as was laid down in the case of Skeikh Gozaffur Hossein v. Dablich (19). I, therefore, agree that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

(17) 51 Ind. Cas. 256; 80 C. L. J. 18.

KASIRAM KAIBORTA v. BOGA KAIBORTA

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.Abandonment or relinquishment, facts constituting—Paikan tenure—Raiyati holding.

Leaving, the village and settling in a distant village, cessation of cultivation, cessation of payment of rent and, in short, a total severance of all connection with the land for a period of 16 years constitute a complete relinquishment or abandonment.

For the purpose of ascertaining the factum of relinquishment there is no difference between the incidents which govern a Paikan tenure, and a rai-yati holding under the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Assam Valley Districts, at Gauhati, dated the 21st June 1921, reversing the decree of the Munsif, Gauhati, dated the 20th July 1920.

Babu Prokas Chandra Majumdar, for the Appellants.

Babu Manmath Nath Ray (Jur.), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decision of the learned District Judge of the Assam Valley Districts reversing the decision of the Munsif of Gauhati. The facts may be briefly summarised. The plaintiffs' case was that the land in suit belonged to one Behia who is described as a paik of Umanand temple. The land was submerged after the great earthquake of 1897 and the plaintiffs say that Behia left the village in 1900 and thereafter in 1915 conveyed the disputed plot to their father. Four years later, they were dispossessed by the defendants.

The defendants, on the other hand, pleaded that Behia had abandoned the land after the earthquake and that the dolai of the temple settled it with them in 1803 B. S. corresponding to 1905 and granted them a pottah on the 22nd February 1912.

The learned Munsif was of opinion that the plaintiffs had proved their possession in the land transferred to them and their subsequent dispossession by the defendants while the defendants had failed to establish Behia's relinquishment. His title, therefore, still subsisted and he was competent to transfer it to the plaintiffs who were thus entitled to succeed.

The learned District Judge on appeal took a different view. He held that the main point for decision was whether Behia had relinquished the land; and upon the evidence he came to the conclusion that that, even though there was no verbal relinquishment on his part, his conduct amounted to relinquishment in fact. The learned Judge, therefore, reversed the decision of the Court of first instance.

On appeal to this Court, the learned Vakil for the appellant has argued that the Court of appeal below erred in allowing the defendants to make out a new case which was not in their written statement, namely, that Behia had forfeited his tenancy on the ground of relinquishment.

There is, in our opinion, no substance in this contention. It is clear from the written statement of the defendants that though the term 'relinquishment' was not actually used the defendants intended to raise that question as a bar to the plaintiffs' claim. They said that Behia had no saleable interest and had no possession within 12 years of the institution of suit. This is tantamount to saying that Behia had no saleable interest because he had relinquished the land and, for the same reasons, had not been in possession of the land within 12 years of the institution of the suit.

The learned Vakil has urged that a paikan is a tenure which is equivalent to what in English law is known as freehold. He had referred to the case of Dinabundu Sarma v. Bodia Koch (1) where the rights and privileges of a paikan-holder are described. It is said that a paikan is a permanent and transferable tenure and, therefore, its incidents are different from those which ordinarily govern a *raiya*ti holding under the Bengal Tenancy Act, but that the learned Judge has failed to distinguish the difference between these two classes of tenures.

We are of opinion that there is no difference in the principle under which the fact of relinquishment is, in either case, to be ascertained. It is pointed out in the case of Ram Churn Singh v. Raniganj Coal Association Limited (2) that the right of relinquishment is a privilege given tenants by means of which they may restrict the lease and establish their tenure upon a new basis or may extinguish the lease altogether and the tenants cannot avail themselves of that privilege to any extent, unless they strictly observe the conditions which are either expressed or implied in the lease. In the case of Chundermonee Nya Bhooshun v. Sumbhoo Chunder Chuckerbutty (3) was observed that, although where a tenure is a permanent and transferable one, mere abandonment is not a valid relinquishment, yet a voluntary abandonment for a long period without any inevitable force majeure or other cause beyond the power of the holder, must be considered to be equal to an express relinquishment; and that, if a man so abandons his holding for years neither he nor anyone under him can reclaim it. Now, the findings of fact at which the learned Judge arrived may be stated in his own words: "We thus have all the elements of relinquishment; leaving the village and settling in a distant village, cessation of cultivation, cessation of payment of rent and, in short, a total severance of all connection with the land for a period of 16 years between leaving the village and the sale to plaintiffs' predecessor". When the principles enunciated above are applied to these findings, it is plain that by his relinquishment of the land Behia's interest was determined and his conveyance to the plaintiffs' father was incompetent.

The result, therefore, is that the decree of learned District Judge is affirmed and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXVII, r. 8, scope of—Leave to defend, when given—Defendant, duty of—Conditional leave.

The question to be considered on an application under O. XXXVII, r. 8 of the Civil Procedure Code is whether or not a triable issue is disclosed on affidavit or otherwise by the defendant. By triable issue is meant a plea which is at least plausible. It is not enough for the defendant to say that he has got a good defence but he must say what the defence is, and, as a rule, bring something before the Court to show that it is a bona fide defence and not a mere attempt to gain time by getting leave to defend [p. 505, col. 2.]

Where there is a triable issue, leave to defend must ordinarily be given unconditionally. It is only in exceptional cases that the exception of O. XXXVII comes into operation to the extent of depriving a man of this right. In cases of this sort the Court has to find if there is any plausible defence, and where there is one, effect must be given to that fact and leave to defend should be granted, and it should be made conditional only in cases, where there appears to be so grave a suspicion that the Court comes to the conclusion that the defence is put in order to obtain further time. [p. 506, col. 1.]

When the defendant sets up some sort of defence which does not bear the stamp of truth as, for instance, when it is contradicted by documents, the Court may make the leave to put that defence conditional on the defendant being prepared to give security for the amount claimed. [p. 505, col. 2.]

Appeal from the order of Mr. Justice Kumaraswamy Sastry, dated the 28th August 1923.

Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. Chandrasakar Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

The Chief Justice :—This is an appeal from an order made by Kumaraswami Sas-tri, J., under O. XXXVII of the Civil Procedure Code, the suit being a suit on hundis given by the defendants to the plaintiffs or their predecessors. Long affidavits were put in on both sides and a large body of correspondence, by no means complete, is exhibited to those affidavits.

The question to be considered on applications under O. XXXVII, r. 3, is whether or not a triable issue is disclosed on affidavit or otherwise by the defendant. By triable issue is meant a plea which is at least plausible. It is not enough, for instance, to say, "I have got a good defence;" but the defendant must say what the defence is, and, as a rule, bring something before the Court to show that it is a bona fide defence and not a mere attempt to gain time by getting leave to defend. There is not a great difference between those cases where it is right to give judgment and those where it is right to give leave to defend on paying the amount into Court or on giving security; but there are cases in which the defendants set up some sort of defence, which does not bear the stamp of truth, as, for instance, when it is contradicted by documents, when the Court may well say that he should only be allowed to come and put that defence before the Court, if he is prepared to give security for the amount claimed. I think the principle applicable here has been laid down clearly in similar applications under O. XIV, r. 1 of the Rules of the Supreme Court in England by the House of Lords in Jacobs v. Booths Distillery Co., (1), Codd v. Delap (2), and Jones v. Stone (3).

In this case I do not think that the learned Judge turned his mind to the consideration of the question whether or not there is a triable issue in this case. He seems to have taken the view that here are hundis on the face of which prima facie the defendants would be liable, and, therefore, they must as a condition of leave to defend pay the money into Court or give security. We have before us the same materials as he had, and on a study of the correspondence, which in these matters is always the most important thing to look at, explained as it is by affidavits on both sides, it seems to me that the relationship between the parties had been so complicated, that there may well have been transactions, which are referred to in certain of the letters, in which the plaintiffs' predecessors and the defendants were signing bills and hundis for each other's accommodation. There is an absence of books on the part of the plaintiffs. There is, on the other hand, a statement on oath that the defendants' books, which of course could have been made available by the plaintiffs if they had so chosen, show that the amounts sued for in this suit were not, as between the plaintiffs and the defendants, due from the defendants to the plaintiffs. I think it is quite impossible on the facts of this case to say that there is not a triable issue. We express no sort of view as to whether the defence is good or bad : that will be a matter for the trial Judge. But having come to the conclusion that there is a triable issue in this case it will not be right to say that, as a condition of being heard at all, these defendants should find money or security, because, if they are not able to do so, it will be depriving them altogether of a right that they have got of having their case tried. It is only in exceptional cases that the exceptional provisions of O. XXXVII come into operation to the extent of depriving a man of this right. In cases of this sort the Court has to find if there is any plausible defence, and where there is one, effect must be given to that fact and leave to defend should be granted, and it should be made conditional only in cases, where there appears to be so grave a suspicion that the Court comes to the conclusion that the defence is put in only in order to obtain further time.

In these circumstances, this appeal must be allowed and leave to defend the suit must be granted. I think the proper order in this case is that the costs of the original application and of this appeal shall be costs in the cause. Written statement in 14 days.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Farrukhabad, dated the 10th February 1922.

Mr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, For the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, Imamuddin, owns a house situated in bazar Katra Ahmad-ganj in Farrukhabad City. The house is occupied by the other plaintiffs, one of whom is a clergyman and the other, who is his wife, practises as a lady doctor. Behind this house is situated a house belonging to the defendant, where a flour mill worked by an oil engine has been recently started. The allegation of the plaintiffs was that the working of the flour mill caused great trouble to the occupants of the house and interfered with their business and ordinary physical comfort. The defendant stated that he had been working the flour mill in another house situated at a distance of about 20 to 25 paces from that place from nine years, that that house was recently purchased by Mathura Prasad who started a steam engine of his own in that locality, and that he had consequently to shift from that place to the present house.

Both the Courts below inspected the locality and came to the conclusion that the working of the flour mill in that locality undoubtedly interfered with the comfort of the occupants of the house and disturbed them in carrying on their usual business. The Court of first instance referred to the evidence of one of the plaintiffs and stated that the soot arising from the chimney of the oil engine would spread into the house of the plaintiffs and fall upon the articles kept there, that there would be bad smell produced from the kerosine oil used in the engine, and that the noise resulting from the close proximity of the house of the plaintiffs to the place where the engine was worked would cause substantial inconvenience to the tenants occupying the same and more so to the lady doctor who had to use a stethoscope to examine the hearts and the lungs of the patients coming to her for treatment. The lower Appellate Court made no attempt to discuss the evidence at all. The view taken by it was that the smell of the smoke from the engine caused little discomfort but the noise and regular throb of the engine so close to the house of the plaintiffs was "a distinct and pervading nuisance" to the occupants of the house, whose nerves would naturally be disturbed till, in course of time, they got accustomed to the same.

What may, however, cause inconvenience to persons with dainty or elegant modes or habit of living may not cause similar inconvenience to persons accustomed to live in the busiest portion of a town. A discomfort to be actionable should be substantial. It should be substantial not merely with reference to the plaintiff; it must be of such a degree that it would be substantial to any person, occupying the premises of the plaintiff, irrespective of his position in life, age, or state of health. As pointed out by Lord Westbury in St. Helen's Smelting Co., v. Tipping, (1) there is a distinction between an action for a nuisance in respect of an act producing a material injury to property, and one brought in respect of an act producing personal discomfort. As to the latter a person must, in the interest of the public generally, submit to the discomfort of the circumstances of the place, and the trades carried on around him. The nature of the interference has to be examined in each case in the light of the circumstances of the place, where the thing complained of actually occurs, and the degree of inconvenience caused must determine the nature of the relief to which the person complaining may be entitled. "If a man lives in a town," said Lord Westbury, "it is necessary that he should subject himself to the consequences of those operations of trade which may be carried on in his immediate locality, which are actually necessary for trade and commerce, and also for the enjoyment of property and for the benefit of the inhabitants of the town and of the public at large. If a man lives in a street where there are numerous shops and a shop is opened next door to him, which is carried on in a fair and reasonable way, he has no ground for complaint, because to himself individually there may arise much discomfort from the trade carried on in that shop." But where an occupation is carried on by one person in the neighbourhood of another, and the result of that trade or occupation or business is a material or substantial interference with the ordinary physical comfort and convenience of another person, residing in that locality, then very different considerations unquestionably arise.

No attempt was made by the Courts below to determine how long this oil engine had been at work, if not in this house, at least in the locality close to this building. The lower Appellate Court does not say that the disturbance would be so substantial as to render the house practically uninhabitable for ordinary people without serious discomfort. It is in evidence that Mathura Prasad has a flour mill worked by a gas engine at about 20 to 25 paces from this locality. It is also in evidence that the present Chairman of the Municipal Board has in his own compound at Fatehgarh close to a public hospital, where patients have to be examined from time to time by the medical attendants, a flour mill in working order, to which no objection has ever been taken on the score of discomfort or otherwise by the residents of the locality. There is also evidence to show that an attempt was made to move the Municipal Board under section 245 of the U. P. Municipalities Act (I of 1916) to remove the oil engines working within Municipal limits or to stop the starting of factories worked by oil engines there and that the Municipal Board refused to take any action in the matter. Several residents of the locality where the flour mill engine is at work, were produced on behalf of the plaintiffs to show that no discomfort was suffered by the neighbours or residents of that locality. A Sub-Assistant Surgeon was, moreover, examined who stated that he had seen the flour mill engine actually at work and that the noise produced by the oil engine was of an ordinary character and that no injury to the health of the residents of the locality was likely to result from the working of that engine at that place. We are prepared to give due weight to the observations made by the Courts below on an examination of the locality and have no doubt that the noise produced by the engine must be a source of some inconvenience to the persons residing there. But a flour mill worked by a gas engine is already in existence in that locality and from the fact that such flour mills exist in other parts of the town we are not prepared to say that any reasonable case for the removal of the flour mill or oil engine has been made out.

Whether anything is a nuisance or not is a question to be determined not merely by an abstract consideration of the thing itself but with reference to its circumstances; and where a locality is used for the purpose of carrying on a trade or manufacture, the fact that such trade or manufacture does exist elsewhere, not far from the place, cannot be left out of account. As pointed out by Clerk and Lindsell, the affairs of life in a dense neighbourhood cannot be carried on without mutual sacrifices of comfort; and in all actions for discomfort the law must regard the principle of mutual adjustment; and the notion that the degree of discomfort, which might sustain an action under some circumstances, must, therefore, do so under all circumstances is as untenable as the notion that if the act complained of was done in a convenient time and place, it must, therefore, be justified, whatever was the degree of annoyance that was occasioned thereby, (Clerk and Lindsell on Torts, 6th edition, p. 419).

It is not seriously suggested that the house of the plaintiffs will become wholly untenable by reason of the construction of the flour mill or the use of the oil engine; and we do not consider that any substantial interference with the physical comfort and convenience of the residents of the house has been made out. In these circumstances, we allow the appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs here and hitherto.

PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.Pre-emption—Wajib-ul-arsz—Earlier document containing no recital of pre-emption—Later document creating right of pre-emption—Custom, whether proved.

Plaintiff sued for possession by pre-emption of certain lands alleging the existence of a custom of pre-emption and basing his right on a clause in the wajib-ul-arsz. It appeared that there were two wajib-ul-arsz on the record and that whereas one created a right of pre-emption in favour of certain classes of persons, the other contained no definite recital of a custom at all.

Held, that on these two documents it was impossible to conclude that there was clear and unambiguous evidence of the existence of a custom of pre-emption in the village and the plaintiff's suit was liable to be dismissed. [p. 510, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Saharanpur dated 28th of June 1922.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Durga Prasad and P. L. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals have arisen out of two separate suits for pre-emption which were brought with respect to the sales of two items of property situated in a village called Purohitwala Birpur in the district of Dehra Dun.

The plaintiffs based their right of pre-emption upon a clause in the wajib-ul-arz.

The defendants denied the existence of custom. Both the Courts below were of opinion that the custom existed, and after deciding some other question which arose for disposal, awarded the plaintiffs in each case a decree for pre-emption.

The vendees have now come here in appeal and the first point which has been taken on their behalf is that the Courts below were erroneous in finding that a custom existed. After examination of the evidence on this point and the judgments of the Courts below we are of opinion that this appeal ought to prevail. We think the decision of the Courts below is erroneous.

It is apparent from the judgment of the learned District Judge that for the purpose of deciding this issue he looked only to one wajib-ul-arz which was filed before him and which according to its tenor was prepared in the year 1884.

According to this document a right of pre-emption is created in favour of certain classes of persons. The first class of pre-emptors according to this wajib-ul-arz are own brothers. The second class consists of co-sharers in the village, and the third class consists of the semindars of contiguous villages. It is then declared that if these three classes refuse to purchase then the sale can be made to a stranger (ghair shakhs).

It was contended, in the first place, before us that the right of pre-emption which is recited in favour of the owners of contiguous villages is an extraordinary right and one which it is very unusual to find in records of custom. While this may be admitted, this fact by itself would not be sufficient in our opinion to render the wajib-ul-arz of no value as evidence of custom and we do not think that for this simple reason the wajib-ul-arz could be withdrawn from the purview of the ruling cited by the learned Judge of the Court below, namely, Digambar Singh v. Ahmed Sayeed Khan.

The learned Judge, however, omitted to notice (though the first Court does notice in its judgment), that an earlier wajib-ul-arz of 1863 was filed in the case.

A reference to this latter document shows, in the first place, that there is no definite recital of a custom at all. There is indeed a mention of rights of pre-emption in a clause of the wajib-ul-arz which is headed zitr iniqal haqiat (recital of transfers of property). This clause begins by providing for a right of pre-emption in favour of near co-sharers (hissedar karibi).

The second class of pre-emptors are the co-sharers of the village, hissedar deh. After these two classes have had the offer transfers can be made to any person.

It has been pointed out by Dr. Katju that this clause, zitr iniqal haqiat, contains reference to many other matters, and he claims that in view of the well-known rulings of this Court this record of 1863 ought not to and cannot be treated as a record of custom. There is no doubt that there are miscellaneous provisions in the clause in question and one of them amounts to a restraint upon the right of gift which could not possibly be the subject of a custom.

Apart from that, it is important to notice that the scheme of pre-emption which is laid down in this document of 1863 is quite different from the scheme which is to be found in the document of 1884.

As will be observed in the latter document the first right of pre-emption is given to own brothers irrespective of their being co-sharers or not, whereas in the 1863 document the first right of pre-emption is reserved to relations who are co-sharers. Then, again, as has been pointed out, the class of pre-emptors recited in the document of 1884 under the name of zemindars of contiguous villages finds no place in the document of 1863.

We are constrained to hold, therefore, that any presumption of the existence of a custom which arises from the production of this wajib-ul-ars of 1884 has been destroyed by a reference to the earlier document of 1863. It seems to us that on these two documents it is impossible to conclude that there is clear and unambiguous evidence of the existence of this custom of pre-emption in the village in question. We decide accordingly.

The result, therefore, is that both these appeals are allowed and the decrees of the Courts below are set aside and it is directed that both suits be dismissed with costs to the defendants in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Mr. M. R. Indurkar, for the Applicant.

Mr. V. N. Bapat, for the Non-applicant.

Order.—This is an application for revision of an order declining to allow the applicant to amend the plaint. The non-applicant objects to the maintainability of this application on the ground that the order is merely an interlocutory order which does not decide the case and at the most it discloses that the Court below has not decided the question of amendment according to law and that the granting of amendments being always discretionary this Court should not interfere with that discretion if the lower Court has thought fit to refuse to exercise it in applicant's favour. Several cases have been cited in support of this objection. I do not think I should leave the plaintiff in the lurch by declining to interfere at this stage. The refusal to allow amendment disposes of the case so far as the question of amendment is concerned and I have jurisdiction to interfere under section 115 Civil Procedure Code. I rely on Mahadeo v. Nago (1) and also Narhar v. Bati (2). I, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection. As regards the merits, I think the Courts should follow the salutary rules that all amendments should be allowed which are intended to shorten the litigation and to put the case of the plaintiff more eminently and clearly if by reason of the plaintiff's case being misconceived in the first instance it has not been put in proper form: See Upendra Narayan Roy v. Janki Nath Roy (3) where the whole law has been very clearly discussed and collected. The same principles have been accepted in several other cases which have the support of their Lordships of the Privy Council : See Charan Das v. Amir Khan (4).

The objections that the amendment is delayed, inconsistent and not bona fide do not seem to me to be valid. The defendant does not lose in any way in having before him the plaintiff's full and clear statement of the case before the parties go to evidence. The stage at which the amendment is sought clearly shows that the plaintiff was not negligent in the matter : compare Ramsaran Roy v. Ram Prasanna Mukerji (5) where amendment was allowed 18 months after. The defendant can well be compensated by an award of costs Rs. 20 for this.

I, therefore, allow the petition for revision, and the lower Court's order disallowing the petition for amendment is set aside and that Court is directed to allow the amendment subject to payment of Rs. 20 as costs to the defendant as a condition precedent to the making of the amendment.

In the circumstances of the case, I do not think I should order the costs of this petition revision to be paid by the non-applicant. They will be costs in the suit. I fix pleaders fee Rs. 15 for this Court.

JUDGMENT.

Das J.—On the 21st of June 1865, an Istimrari mokarrari lease was granted by the then proprietor of the Ramgarh Raj to Kanhai Gir and Jainath Gir. It appears that between 1861 and 1866 the Ramgarh Raj executed a considerable number of Istimrari mokarrari leases and that there has been a considerable controversy between the Raj and the grantees as to the meaning of the term "Istimrarari mokarrari." It was the case of the grantees that by the term "Istimrari mokarrari" a permanent heritable and transferable grant was intended ; whereas, the rival case was that all that was intended to be granted was a lease for life. Certain test cases were instituted by the Raj and the controversy has now been set at rest by the decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Ram Narain Singh v. Chota Nagpur Banking Association (1). That decision was pronounced on the 25th of August 1915 ; and it is now conceded before us that the lease in favour of Kanhai Gir and Jainath Gir was a lease for their life. The survivor of the grantees died sometime in 1890 ; and it has been found by the learned Judge in the Court below that defendants Nos. 1 to 5, who are the heirs of the grantees, have been uninterruptedly in possession of the demised land without payment of any rent to the landlord. On the 16th of November 1911, defendants Nos. 1 to 5 gave an underground lease of 200 bighas of coal lands to defendants Nos. 6 and 7 ; and defendants Nos. 6 and 7 have assigned their interest under the lease of the 16th of November 1911 to defendants Nos. 8 and 9. On the 27th of September 1915, the plaintiff, who was the then proprietor of the Ramgarh Raj, served a notice to quit upon the defendants calling upon them to deliver up quiet possession of the demised land at the end of the Sambat year 1972. On the 18th of September 1917, the plaintiff served a fresh notice upon the defendants asking them to quit at the end of the Sambat year 1974, corresponding to the 11th of April 1918. On the 14th of December 1918, the suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted by the plaintiff for ejectment of the defendants and for recovery of Rs. 10,000 as damages for the unauthorized removal of coal from the demised land. The learned Subordinate Judge has given the plaintiff a decree substantially as claimed by him.

The critical question in this case is whether, having regard to the lapse of time, the plaintiff is entitled to eject defendants Nos. 1 to 5 from the demised land. The lease came to an end in 1890; and it is not disputed by the defendants that the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession of the demised land if he had instituted appropriate proceedings within twelve years from 1890. But the suit was not instituted till the 14th of December 1918. It is contended on behalf of the defendants that the tenancy having come to an end in 1890, the suit is barred under the provisions of Article 139 of the Limitation Act. The case of the plaintiff is that, notwithstanding the determination of the tenancy on the death of the original grantees, defendants Nos. 1 to 5, as the heirs of the grantees continued in possession with the assent of the landlord as tenants from year to year, and that the tenancy from year to year came to an end on the 11th of April 1918. Some attempt was made in the evidence to show that the defendants paid rent to the plaintiff, but the learned Subordinate Judge has not accepted that part of the plaintiff's case and no attempt has been made before us by the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the plaintiff to establish that there was any payment of rent at any time by defendants Nos. 1 to 5 to the plaintiff. The view of the learned Subordinate Judge, however, is that there was an assent on the part of the landlord to the defendants continuing in possession of the demised land sufficient to convert the tenancy by sufferance into a tenancy from year to year. In this view he has come to the conclusion that the tenancy came to an end on the 11th of April 1918, and that the plaintiff's suit is well within time.

It is necessary to scrutinise the evidence with some care to see whether the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point can be supported. I have referred to the fact that there was considerable controversy between the parties as to the meaning of the term "Istimrari mokarrari lease." The controversy was set at rest on the 25th of August 1915 by an authoritative decision of the Calcutta High Court; and it is an undoubted fact that many suits which were held back pending the decision of the Calcutta High Court were instituted subsequent to that decision. It is necessary to remember these facts in dealing with the evidence whether there was an assent on the part of the landlord to the defendants continuing in possession of the demised land. The first witness examined on behalf of the plaintiff is Sibsahay Lal. He makes a perfectly general statement in his examination-in-chief that the heirs of the original grantees were allowed to remain in possession of the disputed mauza as year-to-year tenants; but he admits in his cross-examination that his knowledge was derived from the terms of the notices served upon the defendants, and that he had no knowledge of the real facts independently of those notices. He also admits that there are no papers to show that the defendants were yearly tenants and that settlement with the defendants was not made in his presence. Lastly, he admits that only those tenants who pay rent are recognized as yearly tenants and that there are no papers in the Raj to show that the defendants were in possession with the consent of the Ramgarh Raj.

The next witness on this point is Mahta Tilakdhari Prasad. In his examination-in-chief he says that the heirs of the original grantees were allowed to remain in possession of the demised land, but in his cross-examination he makes it perfectly clear that he has no personal knowledge of the actual facts and that "there is no written note anywhere of the fact that the heirs of other deceased mokarraridars were allowed to remain in possession."

The last witness on this point is Harihar Sahay. He speaks in his examination-in-chief as to a practice in the Raj to make demand for rent upon the heirs of mokarraridars and to treat such heirs as tenants-at-will. In his cross-examination he says as follows :—" I do not recollect if demands for rent were made on defendants 1 to 5 but such demands must have been made. No steps were taken against them for non-payment of rent." Upon this evidence it is impossible to hold that there was an assent on the part of the landlord to the defendants continuing in possession of the demised land as tenants.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad on behalf of the plaintiff strongly relies upon an alleged admission made by Meghlal Gir, one of the defendants. The passage in the evidence of Meghlal Gir upon which reliance is placed is as follows :—" The Raj Tahsildars used to demand rent for Tarni from us but we said that we would pay rent if receipts are granted in our names, but they said that they would grant Marfatdari receipts." Marfatdari, receipts it may be pointed out, are receipts granted in the name of the original tenants through the persons actually paying the rent. The argument of Mr. Sultan Ahmad on this evidence is as follows. The defendants were actually in possession of the demised land. Their possession operated as an offer by them to accept a tenancy. The offer by the Raj to grant receipts to them operated as an offer to recognize them as tenants. There was, therefore, an assent on the part of the landlord to the defendants continuing in possession of the demised land as tenants. With all respect, I am unable to agree with the argument. The defendants were no doubt willing to be treated as tenants on their own term and on recognition of their status as tenants. The refusal on the part of the landlord to grant any receipts other than Marfatdari receipts to the defendants shows that, although he was willing to accept rent from them he was not willing to recognize their status as tenants. And when the history of the litigation between the landlord and the different tenants under different Istimrari mokarrari leases is remembered it will be realised that neither party was willing to make any concession until the controversy was settled by an authoritative decision of the High Court. This, in my view, explains why the landlord was unwilling to give direct rent receipts to the defendants. The evidence of Meghlal Gir upon which reliance is placed establishes that the landlord was unwilling to recognize the defendants as tenants. It is quite true that he suffered them to remain in possession; but a tenant by sufferance is in by laches of the landlord and is entitled to the benefit of the law of limitation.

The learned Subordinate Judge has strongly relied upon the case of Krishnaji v. Anthaji (2). That case no doubt supports the conclusion at which the learned Subordinate Judge has arrived. With all respect, I am unable to agree with the view taken in that case. The learned Judges in that case followed Hellier v. Silcox (3). But in my opinion Hellier v. Silcox (3) is an authority for the proposition that an action for use and occupation would lie against a person who is in possession of the demised land after the death of the tenant with the permission of the landlord: it is not an authority for the proposition that the person in possession could not appeal to lapse of time if an action for ejectment was brought against him after the expiry of the period of limitation. The case of Krishnaji v. Anthaji (2) has, in my opinion, been virtually overruled by the decision of the Bombay High Court in Chandri v. Daji Bhau (4). It was held in that case that the possession of a tenant holding over is wrongful, and if there is no evidence from which a fresh tenancy can be inferred in the strict sense of the term, time begins to run against the landlord when the period of the fixed lease expires. In that case there was a lease for a year. At the end of the year the premises were not given up, nor was any rent paid. The suit was brought more than twelve years after the expiry of the lease. The defendant contended that the plaintiff's claim to recover possession was barred and the High Court gave effect to that contention and dismissed the suit.

In my opinion, the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point cannot be supported and the plaintiff's claim for possession must be dismissed.

[The remainder of the judgment deals with questions of fact and is not material for this report.—Ed.]

In the result, I must allow the appeal in so far as the learned Subordinate Judge has granted the reliefs (a), (b), (c), (e) and (h) claimed in the plaint, and must dismiss the suit so far as those reliefs are concerned the plaintiff is, however, entitled to reliefs (d) and (f); and to that extent the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge must be affirmed. Costs will be in proportion to the success achieved by the parties in both the Courts.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Sch. III, Art. 3—Landlord and tenant—Suit by tenant to recover possession of holding—Dispossession by landlord—Limitation.

Article 3 of Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act applies to a case where dispossession has been by a person who at the time of dispossession, in whatever way the dispossession might take place, either through a civil wrong or by means of criminal force, occupies the position of a landlord or possesses the character of a landlord and has the capacity of a landlord towards the person dispossessed. [p. 516, col. 1]

Plaintiff sued to recover possession of a holding on the allegation that she had been dispossessed from it by the defendant landlord in execution of a fraudulent and collusive decree obtained by him against a third person. [p. 516, col. 1]

Held, that the suit was governed by Article 3 of Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Case-law discussed.

Appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge of Jessore, dated the 20th June 1921.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen) for the Appellant—The land in suit admittedly belonged to two persons, namely, Sita Nath and Dwaraka Nath. These were two brothers. One of them died leaving his widow as heir so far as his share is concerned. I am the landlord. This suit was brought by the widow who claimed the entire plot, one-half by right of inheritance and the other half by virtue of purchase. We have filed a decree showing that we purchased the other half in execution of a rent decree and took possession in execution thereof. In any case, the decree having been found collusive we are bound to accept it, as such. The point before your Lordships is that the suit is time barred under Art. 3 of Sch. III of Bengal Tenancy Act. The Article is applicable because I was all along the landlord. Moreover, the decree I obtained has been found collusive and so the argument that I disposed as purchaser fails. There may be some conflict of decisions but the facts of this case are clear and it is a strong case. Cites Kamaldhari Thakur v. Rameshar Singh Bahadur (1) Nabin Chandra Shaha v. Shesh Wajid (2) Rudra Narain Maity v. Nalabar Jana (3). All the earlier cases are discussed in 31 C. L. J.

Babu Sib Chandra Palit for the Respondent—Art. 3 of the Schedule has no application whatsoever. Here, according to the appellant's own case, they took possession on the strength of a decree, which your Lordships may be pleased to observe, was against other persons and purposely ignoring my client. If he obtained possession at all he obtained it not as my landlord but as a trespasser. So far as I am concerned, Art. 3 cannot have any application by any stretch of imagination. In any case, there is a great deal of conflict in decisions. These have been far from being uniform and if your Lordships feel any doubt, your Lordships should refer it to the Full Bench. This is a point of great importance. The appeal cannot succeed.

KEDAR NATH BISWAS v. KAMINI SUNDARI DUSSYA

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—In this appeal the point involved is whether, on the findings of the Courts below, the plaintiff's suit is barred by two years limitation under Article 3 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The facts are that defendant No. 2 who is the appellant was the landlord in respect of a certain holding which was jointly held by two brothers Sita Nath and Dwarka Nath. Sita Nath died leaving plaintiff as his widow on whom devolved his one-half share. The plaintiff's case is that she purchased the other one-half of Dwarka Nath and thus became entitled to the 16 annas share of the holding. The defendant's case is that in respect of the eastern half of this holding Dwarka Nath was the sole tenant and after his death the defendant No. 4 succeeded him as a tenant; but as defendant No. 4 did not pay the rent in respect of the eastern half of the holding, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, being the landlords, brought a suit for rent, obtained a decree, purchased the land in execution of the same and obtained delivery of possession through Court on the 8th December, 1913. The lower Appellate Court has found that the defendant's decree against the defendant No. 4 and the sale in execution thereof were fraudulent and collusive. It was the case of the plaintiff and it has been found by the Courts below that the plaintiff was all along the tenant of the defendant Nos. 1 and 2 in respect of the land in dispute and that the decree against defendant No. 4 and the sale thereunder did not affect the plaintiff's title. The plaintiff alleged that she was dispossessed in 1925 by a certain act of the landlords. The first Court disbelieved the evidence on that point and found that she was dispossessed by her landlords (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) more than two years before the institution of the suit and held that the suit was barred by limitation. The learned Munsif does not say on which date the dispossession took place but reading the whole judgment it appears that he was of opinion that the plaintiff was dispossessed from the disputed land in 1913 by virtue of the delivery of possession to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in execution of the rent-decree against defendant No. 4. The lower Appellate Court has not found as to when the dispossession took place; but it disposes of the issue, "Is the suit barred by limitation" in these words: "In view of the ruling reported in Kamaldhari Thakur v. Rameshwar Singh Bahadur (1) the suit is not time barred." I think what he means to say is that, because the dispossession was by the defendant in 1913 as purchaser in execution-sale, it was not dispossession by him as landlord and so two years' bar of limitation did not apply to the facts of this case and, therefore, the plaintiff's suit was not barred by limitation.

On this question as to whether the dispossession under Article 3 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act should be dispossession by a person as landlord and not in another capacity though he happened to be a landlord had been the subject of consideration in a large number of cases and there has been a wide divergence of judicial opinion. All the cases on this point have been collected in the Case of Nabin Chandra Shaha v. Sharh Wajid (2) and in the well-known edition of the Bengal Tenancy Act by Mr. Surendra Chandra Sen whose assistance we had in this case, appearing as he did for the appellant at pp 856 and 858. It is not necessary for us to refer to those cases nor do we feel called upon, in the particular facts of this case, to refer the matter to a Full Bench as we have been invited to do by the learned Vakil for the respondent. The facts of this case are of a peculiar nature. It has been found and it is the case of the plaintiff, that the relationship of the landlord and tenant between the defendant and the plaintiff continued down to the date of the suit and I take it that it still continues. At the time when the sale in 1913 took place and delivery of possession was given to the defendant through Court, he was on that date occupying the position of a landlord in respect of the plaintiff. The collusive decree that was obtained against defendant No. 4 did not put an end to that relationship and it is on the basis of that relationship that the plaintiff now comes to Court and demands restitution of the property of which she was dispossessed. I need not consider the question as to what would have been the effect if the rent decree were against the plaintiff and the dispossession had taken place by the defendant as purchaser in execution of that decree. I may only mention that the ratio of some of the decisions of the class of the case of Kamaldhari Thakur v. Rameshwar

Singh Bahadur (1) is, that the landlord having ceased to be a landlord by purchasing the holding himself in execution of this decree, he subsequently obtained delivery of possession through Court and thereby dispossessed the tenant not as a landlord but as an auction-purchaser. But here, as I have said, the dispossession was by the defendant when he was holding the character of a landlord in relation to the plaintiff. If we look at it from another point of view it appears that the plaintiff was dispossessed on the 8th December 1913 from the holding as a tenant in respect of the holding. In my judgment, Art. 3 applies to a case where dispossession has been by a person who at the time of dispossession, in whatever way the dispossession might take place either through a civil wrong or by means of criminal force, occupies the position of a landlord or possesses the character of a landlord and had the capacity of the landlord, the dispossession must be taken to have been effected by the landlord. In this view of the finding of the lower Appellate Court, I think that Art. 3 is not applicable to the facts of this case and the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower appellate Court is set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs.

Page, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question in this appeal is whether or not the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation. The material Article is Article 3 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which provides that a suit by a plaintiff as a rayat, (which was the capacity in which the plaintiff launched the proceedings in this suit) to recover possession of land must be brought within two years from the date when the plaintiff was dispossessed of the land. It is well-settled that dispossession must be by a landlord. I desire to adopt the observation of Jenkins, C.J., in the case of Rudra Narain Maity v. Natabar Jana (3). Referring to Article 3 His Lordship says: "this is an Article, which, after a lapse of a certain time, deprives the plaintiff of his right to come to Court for the purpose of vindicating a claim which is his and, therefore, it must be clearly made out that any particular case falls within its terms. We recently had occasion to enter a protest against extending the terms of this Article by use of figures of speech and metaphors. What we have to see in each case is whether in fact there has been such dispossession as the Article requires. That dispossession, it is conceded, must be by the landlord." There are two findings of fact in this case to which I must refer. 'The first is that the plaintiff was dispossessed of the premises more than two years before she launched the present suit, and the second finding is that, at the time when she was dispossessed and up till the date when the suit was instituted, she was in fact the tenant of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. In my opinion these two findings of fact are sufficient to enable us to dispose of this appeal. Upon these facts Article 3 will bar the claim of the plaintiff. But it is contended that Article 3 does not apply because the defendant No. 2 had obtained a decree for possession against some other person on the ground that such other person was his tenant, and that he obtained possession under that decree. The Court below has found, however, that that proceeding was a fraudulent and collusive proceeding between the parties to it. The plaintiff was not impleaded in that suit and she was not barred by the decree passed in it. In my opinion, the fact that the defendant, in collusion with a third person, obtained possession of these premises by fraud does not affect the position of the plaintiff. The finding of fact that at the time of dispossession the plaintiff was the tenant of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 brings into operation Article 3 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act notwithstanding the fraudulent device to which the defendant No. 2 resorted in order to obtain possession. The determination of the question depended upon this finding of fact and in my opinion this appeal should be allowed.

—HABIB-UD-DIN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENTS.Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 91, 98—Execution of decree—Sale—Auction-purchaser, right of, to refund of purchase-money—Suit to recover purchase money, whether maintainable.

A suit by an auction-purchaser for recovery of the purchase-money paid by him from persons to whom it has been paid on the ground that the judgment-debtor did not possess a saleable interest in the property sold, is not maintainable, his right to obtain a refund of the purchase-money in such circumstances being entirely the creation of rr. 91 and 98 of O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code. The only remedy of the auction purchaser in such a case is to get the sale set aside by the method prescribed by the Code.

Case-law discussed

An auction-purchaser made an application under O. XXI, r. 91 of the Civil Procedure Code for setting aside the sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold. The application was dismissed in appeal and the auction-purchaser was directed to pay into Court the purchase-money which he had withdrawn under the orders of the lower Court. The auction-purchaser thereupon filed a suit for a declaration that he was not bound to repay the purchase-money into Court as the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold;

Held, that the suit was in effect for a refund of the purchase-money on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold, and was, therefore, not maintainable.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Dehli, dated the 8th August 1922.
Lala Sardha Ram, for the Appellant.

Maulvi Ghulam Mohi-ud-din and Mr. Muhammad Monir, for the Plaintiff—Respondent.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Defendants—Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case giving rise to this appeal are briefly as follows. In January 1915 one Musammât Lachhmi was appointed guardian of the property of her step-son Bhagwan Sahai who was a minor. In the 2nd of January 1917 Musammât Lachhmi mortgaged a certain site to Hatim Mirza. In the mortgage-deed the site in question was described as being the property of the mortgagor, no reference being made to Bhagwan Sahai. Hatim Mirza brought a suit on this mortgage-deed and obtained a decree which was made final on the 21st of November 1918. In execution of this decree the mortgaged property was brought to sale at an auction held under the orders of the executing Court and was purchased by one Habib-ud-din for Rs. 4,750 on the 7th of October 1919. The whole of the purchase money was paid in by the 21st of October 1919. Subsequent to this date, Habib-ud-din discovered that the property he had purchased belonged to the minor Bhagwan Sahai and that the judgment-debtor in the decree, namely Musammât Lachhmi, had no saleable interest in the site. He accordingly, on the 10th of November 1919, moved the executing Court under O. XXI, r. 91, Civil Procedure Code, to have the sale set aside. His application was granted on the 23rd of January 1920, and he at once applied for and obtained a refund of the money paid into Court by him. Hatim Mirza appealed against the order setting aside the sale and his appeal was accepted on the 8th of March 1920. On the 8th of July 1920 Hatim Mirza asked the Court for a direction that Habib-ud-din should be directed to repay the money into Court so that he could realise it. The Court held that Habib-ud-din was liable to repay the money and directed that he should do so within a fortnight of the order, or institute such suit as he might be advised and obtain an injunction. Habib-ud-din filed no appeal against this order, but on the 18th of December 1920 instituted this suit asking for a declaration that the mortgage-decree was void as against the minor's property and that, therefore, he was not bound to repay the money into Court. Hatim Mirza and Bhagwan Sahai, minor, were made defendants in the case. It should be mentioned that, subsequent to the order in appeal setting aside the cancellation of the sale (8th March 1920), but prior to the order directing Habib-ud-din to repay the money into Court the District Judge passed an order at the instance of Bhagwan Sahai, minor, declaring the mortgage of the site in question void as against his rights therein. This order was passed on the 2nd of July 1920 and was made under section 30 of the Guardians and Wards Act.

The trial Court decreed the suit and an appeal by Hatim Mirza having been dismissed

he has come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Sardha Ram, while I have heard Mr. Ghulam Mohi-ud din for Habib-ud din and Mr. Mukand Lal Puri for the minor. Mr. Sardha Ram has urged that the suit, for all practical purposes, amounts to a suit by an auction, purchaser for the refund of his purchase-money on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property auctioned and that such a suit is not competent. On the other hand, for the respondents it has been urged that the suit is not one for the refund of purchase-money but for a declaration that the auction-purchaser should not be called upon to carry out his contract to purchase on the ground that the decree under which the property was sold and the auction was held was inoperative as against him. I may say at once that it seems to me that the suit really is one for the refund of purchase-money. It is common ground that the sale has been confirmed. Prior to the confirmation the auction-purchaser could, under r. 91 of O. XXI, move the Court to set aside the sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold. Mr. Sardha Ram has urged that, inasmuch as the procedure to be adopted by an auction, purchaser, in the circumstances such as exist in the present case, has been laid down by statute, namely the Civil Procedure Code, it is that procedure alone that can be followed and that no suit for the refund of purchase, money was competent. In Lingappa Goundan v. Esudasan (1) this view was given effect to although that case did not deal with execution proceedings. In Lakhmichand v. Chaturbhuj (2) it was clearly held that a suit by an auction-purchaser for recovery of the purchase-money from persons to whom it has been paid, on the ground that the judgment-debtor does not possess a saleable interest in the property sold, is not maintainable, his right to obtain a refund of the purchase-money in such circumstances being entirely the creation of r. 91 and 93 of O. XXI and that the result was that, without getting the sale set aside through the Court and by the method prescribed by the Code, the auction-purchaser had no remedy. It was also held that the general principles of caveat emptor affects the purchaser unless he chooses to adopt the remedy given to him by the statute. To the same effect is the case reported as Bepin Behari Ghosh v. Hari Chivran Ghosh (3). In Ram Saroop v. Dalpat Rai (4) a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court specifically laid down that there was no principle of equity or law according to which on auction-purchaser was entitled to a refund of the purchase-money in case it was discovered later on that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest and that a suit for refund of the purchase-money was not maintainable. In the following cases the same principles were laid down:—Parvathi Ammal v. Govindasami Pillay (5), Bhagwan Das v. Allah Baksh (6), Nannu Lal v. Bhagwan Das (7), Krishnaji v. Ladhuram Ghasiram (8), Subbu Reddi v. Ponnambalu Reddi (9), Dewaji v. Amrila (10), Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (11), Tirumalaisamy Naidu v. Subramaniam Chettiar (12), Ram Daya! v. Rampal Singh (13), Mahadev Narayan v. Sadashiv Keshev Limaye (14), and Tirumalaisamy Naidu v. Subramanian Chettiar (12).

On the other hand, my attention as been been drawn to Munna Singh v. Gajadhar Singh (15), Rustamji v. Vinayak Gangadhar (16), Prasanna Kumar Bhat-tacharjee v. Ibrahim Mirza (17), Parvathi Ammal v. Govindasami Pillai (5), Girdhar Das v. Sidheshwari Prasad Narain Singh (18), and *Premraj v. him show that there is a conflict of authority on the question of the maintainability of a suit such as I hold the present to be. A reference to these authorities, however, shows that the more recent decisions of the High Courts in question are against the maintainability of such a suit. It has been laid down by the Privy Council in Dorab Ally Khan v. The Executors of Khajah Mohesooddeen (20), that there is no warranty of title at a Court sale, and Annanajhula Venkatchallamayya Garu v. Ramipjee Neelakantha Girjee (21) and U. Pau v. N.R.M.A. Chetty (22) are to the same effect. The right to recover the purchase-money in such a case is, therefore, merely the creation of the Code as provided in rr. 91, 93 of the Civil Procedure Code. Mr. Ghulam Mohi-ud-din laid great stress on the decision of the Bombay High Court Rustomji v. Vinayak Gangadhar (16) where it was held that at an auction purchase some sort of guarantee of title was conveyed. This view appears to me to be clearly opposed to the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee referred to above, and in Balwant Rangnath v. Bala Malu (23) it was pointed out that rr. 91 and 93 of O. XX, Civil Procedure Code had very materially altered the provisions of sections 3, 15 of the old Code and that an auction-purchaser, at a Court sale, must get the sale set aside before he can obtain the right to ask for a refund of the purchase-money. It was further held, however, that he would be competent to maintain a suit against the judgment-debtor on the ground of fraud or misrepresentation. No such ground has been urged in this case and I think I am bound to follow the catena of cases referred to above in which it has been consistently held that an auction-purchaser could not sue for the recovery of his money in a separate suit but that his remedy was confined to the procedure laid down in r. 91 of O. XXI. I must, therefore, hold that the present suit which, to all intents and purposes, is for the refund of purchase-money on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold, was not competent.

In this view of the case, it is scarcely necessary for me to refer to the other points raised at the bar, namely, as to the applicability of section 144, Civil Procedure Code, and the effect of the order passed under section 30 of the Guardians and Wards Act. I would, however, note that section 144, Civil Procedure Code, scarcely applies to the present case as that section deals with the variation or reversal of a decree.

In my view of the case, this appeal must be decreed, and I accordingly accept it and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs.

Second appeal against the decree of the First Additional District Judge of Gorakhpur, dated the 21st November 1921.

Mr. U. Upodhiya, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Jang Bahadur Lal and S. P. Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this case is whether the lower Appellate Court was right in holding that the plaintiffs-respondents were entitled to succeed in their suit for pre-emption.

The suit as framed was based on an alleged custom of pre-emption. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the ground that the custom was not proved. The Subordinate Judge was also of opinion that the plaintiffs could not rely on any contract for pre-emption inasmuch as no such case had been set up in the plaint.

The plaintiffs went in appeal and the learned Additional Judge, while agreeing with the first Court that there was no proof of custom, nevertheless, held that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed on the ground of contract.

It is now argued before us on behalf of the defendants vendees that the Judge of the Court below ought not to have decreed the claim on the basis of contract no such case having been set up in the plaint.

On the other hand, the learned Counsel who has argued the case on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents maintains that the decision of the Court below should be upheld on the ground that the evidence which was produced in the case conclusively proves the existence of custom.

We will deal with the second matter first. The learned Counsel has laid great stress upon the Full Bench case reported in Ali Nasir Khan v. Manik Chand (1). There it was pointed out with reference to certain entries in the Record of Rights which were prepared in the Basti and Gorakhpur Settlement in the year 1885 that a peculiar weight must be assigned to entries of custom made in the Settlement Records of that time because special instructions had been issued by the Board of Revenue to Settlement Officers. Among other directions given was one regarding the Record of a Right of pre-emption. Such a regard was to be made when the proprietors expressly demanded that it should be noticed and proved conclusively that a custom exists.

There can be no doubt, therefore, that when we find an entry of this kind, as we do find in the present case, we start with a very strong presumption in favour of the existence of custom.

But we do not understand the Full Bench decision to lay down that such an entry is conclusive proof and is binding on the Civil Courts. It will be noted that in the case which was before the Full Bench the only evidence to be considered was a wajih-ul-arz of 1866 and an extract from the Record of Rights of the Settlement of 1886-87.

In the present case there is other evidence to be considered and it is principally on this other evidence that the Courts below have decided against the plaintiffs. Documents were produced before the lower Court to show that there was no record of custom in the wajih-ul-arzes of 1833 and 1860 and it was further proved to the satisfaction of the Court below that in both those years the village was in the possession of a single proprietor.

We have further evidence in the shape of the statement of the patwari which says that there was no transfer of property in this village up till the year 1894 when a sale was effected in favour of Ram Subhag who was the father of the first plaintiff Sarju Mahto. The next transfer which took place was in or about the year 1901 when a second transfer was made in favour of the same Ram Subhag.

In these circumstances, we think it was competent for the Court below to say that there was evidence on the record which overthrown the presumption founded upon the entry in the Record of Rights for the year 1885. We cannot, therefore, interfere with the finding of the Court below on this point.

There remains the question of contract. It has been laid down that where plaintiffs rely upon a contract in order to succeed in a suit for pre-emption the contract ought to be pleaded, for in such a case it would be necessary for the plaintiff to show that the person through whom he claimed was one of the contracting parties.

We think this objection although a technical objection is one which ought to prevail. However we do not find it necessary to decide this question on any mere technicality. We have already adverted to the fact that the first plaintiff got a footing in the village for the first time in the year 1894, that is, some 7 or 8 years after the settlement had been made.

If it be the fact, and it does appear to be the fact, that these plaintiffs first got a footing in the village by purchase some 7 or 8 years after the Settlement was made we do not think that they are entitled to enforce a contract which was entered into at the time of the Settlement assuming that the record in the wajih-ul-arz is a record of contract. These people were no parties to the contract and we do not think they ought to be allowed to enforce it.

We have come to the conclusion, therefore, that this appeal ought to be allowed and we allow it accordingly. We set aside the decree of the Court below and restore the decree of the Court of first instance. The defendants-appellants are entitled to their costs both here and in the lower Appellate Court. The costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Arbitration—Appointment of arbitrator—Uberrima fides, necessity of—Arbitrator related to one party, effect of—Ex-parte award, when can be set aside—Time for filing award, extension of—Arbitration Act (IX of 1899) S. 12.

In case of an arbitration where a person is appointed by two parties to exercise judicial duties there should be uberrima fides on the part of all the parties concerned in relation to his selection and appointment and every disclosure, which might in the least affect the minds of those who are proposing to submit their disputes to the arbitrament of any particular individual, as regards his selection and fitness for the post ought to be made, so that each party may have every opportunity of considering whether the reference to arbitration to that particular individual should or should not be made. [p. 523, col. 1.]

The fact that the arbitrator is related to one of the parties as his first paternal cousin does afford a real likelihood of an operation of prejudice on his part and the existence of such relationship with one of the parties unknown to the other disqualifies him from acting as an arbitrator. In such a case as the above it is not necessary, in seeking to have the award set aside, to prove actual bias or partiality on the part of the arbitrator or that the existence of the relationship had any operation on his mind [p. 523, col. 1.]

An award passed ex parte will be set aside only if the absent party can convince the Court that he had sufficient cause for his non-appearance. [p. 523, col. 2.]

Petition under the Indian Arbitration Act to file an award, and objections thereto.

Mr. Dipchand T. Ojha, for the Respondents I.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Respondents II.

JUDGMENT:—This is an application by the arbitrator Tikamdas Walabdas for an order that the time for making the award be extended by the Court under section 12 of the Indian Arbitration Act and for an order that the award to stand filed and be enforced as a decree under the provisions of that Act.

The reference to arbitration on which the award is based, is dated 21st January 1921 and is signed by one Dowlatram Metharam, whom I shall refer as respondent No. 1, as attorney of the Trustees of the firm of Metharam Dowlatram as the first party and one Dowlatram Mayadas, whom I shall refer as respondent No. 2, on behalf of the firm of Mayadas Dowlatram as the second party. The reference provided that the first party was claiming a sum of about Rs. 40,000 from the second party and that the second party disputed that so much was due by him.

The arbitrator has passed an award, dated 21st March 1922 for Rs. 49,640-4-0 inclusive of interest up to the date of the award in favour of the first party. It recites that the arbitrator held a sitting on the 17th March 1922 at his office in terms of his notice when respondent No. 1 was present on behalf of the first party and that the second party was absent, and that he proceeded with the matter ex parte and passed his award on consideration of the evidence produced before him.

Certain persons, other than respondent No. 2, were served with notices under O. XXX, b. 3, Civil Procedure Code as the responsible partners of the firm of Mayadas Doulatram. The parties have, however, agreed that the liability of persons other than respondent No. 2 may not be determined in the present proceedings and that the present inquiry be confined to the objection raised by respondent No. 2 which may be summarized as under:—

1. That respondent No. 1 has improperly procured the reference and the award as he failed to disclose the fact that he and the arbitrator were first cousins, and that the arbitrator has misconducted himself in entering upon such a reference without disclosing his relationship.

2. That the arbitrator has misconducted himself in not granting an adjournment to respondent No. 2 on the ground of his illness.

3. That the arbitrator was not in Karachi on 17th March 1922, the day fixed for hearing, and that the arbitrator should, under the circumstances, have given a further notice to respondent No. 2 before proceeding with the case.

4. That, the arbitrator has misconducted himself by awarding more than the amount claimed.

5. That, under any circumstances, this is a fit case for the Court to refuse to extend time for making the award.

The first objection. It is admitted that the arbitrator and respondent No. 1 are first cousins being the sons of two brothers. It is also admitted that the respondent No. 1 is the chief person concerned in the claim. He carried on business in the name and style of Metharam Doulatram and that behaving failed in business has, with the concurrence of his creditors, appointed certain trustees who have in their turn appointed him as their attorney. The trustees have no personal interest in the matter. Respondent No. 2 states in his evidence that he came to know of the existence of the relationship between respondent No. 1 and the arbitrator after the award. The only witness examined on behalf of respondent No. 1 is the arbitrator, Tikamdas. Ex. 11, respondent No. 1 himself not having gone into the witness box. Tikamdas does not allege that he informed respondent No. 2 of the relationship either before or after the reference or that respondent No. 2 knew about it. He, however, states that he and respondent No. 1 carried on business in partnership about nine years ago, and that at that time the firm of Bharpurmal Mayadas, which subsequently adopted the name of Mayadas Doulatram has a commission agency account with his firm, and that respondent No. 2, his brothers and father knew then that respondent No. 1 was working as his partner. He has not produced the account-books of his firm to show that the firm of Bharpurmal Mayadas or the firm of Mayadas Doulatram had an account with his firm or the extent of their dealings and states that the old books have been destroyed.

Respondent No. 2 has denied that his firm had any dealings with the firm of the arbitrator and has denied knowledge of the fact that respondent No. 1 did work for the arbitrator. I cannot hold on this evidence that respondent No. 2 did know that the arbitrator and respondent No. 1 were partners at any time. Even if it be assumed that they did work as partners, I cannot infer therefrom that respondent No. 2 knew that they were both closely related as well, or that the arbitrator would be interested in respondent No. 1, because nine years ago both worked as partners.

Respondent No. 2 belongs to the Punjab, and it is not at all likely that he would agree to refer such a large claim for Rs. 40,000 to the arbitration of respondent No. 1 who belongs to a different caste and a different place in Sind.

I am of opinion that it was incumbent on respondent No. 1 and the arbitrator to, disclose the existence of such close relationship between them to respondent No. 2. As said by Maclean, C.J., in Kali Prosanno Ghose v. Rajani

Kant Chatterjee (1): "In case of arbitration where a person is appointed by two parties to exercise judicial duties there should be uberima fides on the part of all the parties concerned in relation to his selection and appointment and every disclosure, which might in the least affect the minds of those who are proposing to submit their disputes to the arbitration of any particular individual, as regards his selection and fitness for the post, ought to be made, so that each party may have every opportunity of considering whether the reference to arbitration to that particular individual should or should not be made." In the case referred to above failure to disclose the fact that the arbitrator was the retained pleader of the plaintiffs was held to invalidate the award. In Mahomed Wahiduddin v. Hakimian (2) failure to disclose the indebtedness of the arbitrator to the party in whose favour the award was passed was held to invalidate the award. In Turnbull v. Piperton (3) (Canada) referred to in Vol. II of the British Empire Digest, page 549, the Court held that the fact that the arbitrator was a brother of one of the parties to the proceedings affords a real likelihood of an operative prejudice on the part of the arbitrator.

Whatever may be the effect of such relationship among other people, so far as the Hindus in Sindh are concerned, the fact that the arbitrator is related to one of the parties as his first paternal cousin does afford a real likelihood of an operative prejudice on his part and the existence of such relationship with one of the parties unknown to the other disqualifies him from acting as an arbitrator. It is not necessary for respondent No. 2 to prove actual bias or partiality on the part of the arbitrator or to prove that the existence of this relationship had any operation on his mind, which is "for the most part incapable of evidence and may remain unknown to every human being, perhaps even unknown to himself per Stuart, V. C., in Kemp v. Rose (4). The rulings in Bykunt Nath Mookerjee v. Prianath Ghose (5) where the party objecting to the award knew of the arbitrator's relationship, or the rulings referring to the contracts for works or for supply of goods where the Engineer of the employer is named as an arbitrator in the Submission Clause contained in the contract and agreed to as a person not indifferent to the subject-matter of the dispute as in the case of the Secretary of State for India v. Arathoon (6) or Jackson v. Barry Bail Co. (7) have no bearing on the present case. A party who agrees with open eyes to abide by the decision of a person who, he knows, is not an indifferent person, cannot subsequently object to the award, unless he proves as a fact a good deal more than the existence of this relationship such as actual partiality.

As there is no evidence that respondent No. 2 knew of the existence of this relationship either before the reference or before the award, I am of opinion that the award must fail on this ground alone.

The second and third objections. There is no substance in the second and the third objection. By Ex. 6 the arbitrator had given clear notice to respondent No. 2 of his intention to proceed ex parte if he failed to make arrangements to appear on 17th March 1922. The arbitrator had a just cause to proceed with the matter. He had already granted several adjournments on the ground of illness. Though the arbitrator did not proceed on the day fixed, there was no obligation on him to issue a fresh notice for the date on which he actually held his sitting. No doubt in proceeding ex parte the arbitrator took the risk of his award being set aside by the Court if the respondent No. 1 could convince the Court that he had sufficient cause for his non-appearance. See H. C. Whitehouse v. Messrs Kahn Kahn & Co. (8). Respondent No. 1 has failed to show such cause.

I was not impressed with the manner in which either respondent No. 2 or his brother Dayaram gave evidence. There appears to have been some attempt on their part to delay the arbitration proceedings. Dayaram, Ex. 10, admits that he knew about the dealings which were the subject-matter of the reference and in a previous letter dated 28th July 1921 adjournment was asked for to enable him to appear at the hearing. He was not ill and could have attended. In his evidence he has stated that he could not attend on 17th March as his brother was dangerously ill. In his letter of 13th March 1922, however, he did not allege that his brother was dangerously ill or that he was prevented from attending the hearing by such illness, I disallow both these objections.

The fourth objection. Mr. Kimatrai has contended that respondent No. 1 only claimed a sum of about Rs. 40,000 in the reference. This is the maximum amount which he considered himself entitled to. If interest at the rate of nine per cent. is added on for fourteen months, the period which elapsed between the date of the reference and the award, the total sum due by respondent No. 2 would be Rs. 44,200 and not Rs. 49,640-4-0. The arbitrator is guilty of partisanship in awarding to respondent No. 1 a sum of Rs. 5,440 more than his claim. There is a good deal of force in his contention specially as the arbitrator is related to the respondent No. 1. The correspondence leading up to the reference and the account-books of respondent No. 1 are, however, not before the Court. It is not impossible that the words "about Rs. 40,000" were used in the reference as indicating the approximate amount and not the maximum amount claimed by respondent No. 1. In the absence of evidence explaining the circumstances under which the words "about Rs. 40,000" were inserted in the reference, I am not prepared to hold as a fact that the arbitrator is guilty of partiality, though I consider that the award is open to grave suspicion and that I should take this circumstance into consideration in exercising my discretion under section 12 of the Indian Arbitration Act.

The fifth objection. The award has been admittedly made out of time. The arbitrator applied for an indulgence of the Court to extend the time for making the award and thereby to validate it. The Court must take into consideration all the circumstances of the case and decide if the arbitrator should be granted such indulgence: Cf. Pamanmal Lemundas v. Hotanbai (9). Though there is no conclusive evidence to accuse the arbitrator of partiality, his award is open to grave suspicion and I am not satisfied that it is a just award. There is another circumstance which shows that the Court should be more astute in granting the indulgence asked for by him. He has made a deliberately false statement in the award that he proceeded with the matter at Karachi on 17th March 1922, the date fixed by him for hearing, when respondent No. 1 was present and respondent No. 2 was absent. This statement has been proved to be false by the postal acknowledgment, Ex. 7, which shows that he received the letter of Dayaram, brother of respondent No. 2, at Shikarpur on 18th March 1923 when it had been redirected from Karachi. Mr. Dipchand T. Ojha has admitted that the arbitrator was not at Karachi on the 7th March. The arbitrator has also admitted that he came back to Karachi on the 19th March after a stay of about fifteen days at Shikarpur. It is not certain if the arbitrator did hold a sitting after his return to Karachi and, if so, what transpired at such a sitting. The award is for a very large amount. Respondent No. 2's case has not been placed before the arbitrator. If extension of time is not granted respondent No. 1 is very probably not without a remedy and may be able to enforce his claim so far as it is just, as there is no express recital in the reference that respondent No. 2 admits that a certain amount is due by him and that the reference should operate as an acknowledgment under section 19 of the Limitation Act.

I think that, taking into consideration all the circumstances of the case, I should decline, in the exercise of my judicial discretion, to extend the time applied for.

I set aside the award both on the ground of misconduct of respondent No. 1 and the arbitrator in not disclosing their relationship to respondent No. 2 and on the ground of the award having been made out of time.

I order that the Trustees do bear the costs of Doulatram Mayadas, and that other persons who were served as the responsible partners of the firm of Mayadas Doulatram do bear their own costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1918 OF 1921.

PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.Appeal—Decree passed against some defendants—Review-decree against other defendants—Former decree, whether affected—Decree against which appeal should be filed.

A suit was decreed against some defendants and was dismissed as against others. One of the former preferred an appeal against the decree. During the pendency of the appeal, the decree was modified on review at the instance of the plaintiff and the suit was decreed against the remaining defendants also. The appellant was not a party to the review proceedings and the judgment and the decree, so far as they related to him, were not affected by the review :

Held, that the only decree against which the appellant could appeal was the first decree which was passed against him and that he was not bound to appeal against the decree passed on review as he was not a party to or in any way concerned with that decree.

Case-law discussed.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Dacca, dated the 4th July 1921.

Babu Gopal Chandar Das (with him Babu Niskunja Behari Ghose) for the Appellants—Somedates are necessary for the disposal of this appeal. The suit was for a right of way. It was decreed against some of the defendants on 15th April 1920. The decree was signed on the 22nd April 1920. An appeal was preferred on the 27th May. An application for review was filed by the plaintiff on the 15th June 1920. It is important to note that in the review application the present appellant was not a party. The review application was granted and the decree was modified, but that modification did not in any way touch the present appellant or the decree so far as he is concerned. When the appeal came on for hearing objection was raised that the appeal was not competent as it was preferred from the original decree and not from the modified decree. My submission is that the view of the lower Court was wrong. It is very important to note that in the review application the present appellant was not made a party. No notice was served on him at all and as such the review proceedings have no effect on the appellant's rights of appeal. Brijbasi Lal v. Salig Ram (1) and Kanhaiya Lal v. Baldeo Parsad (2) have no application whatsoever. In those the review application made all parties. Now to take advantage of this review against others, to curtail the appellant's right of appeal, was against all principles of law.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter (with him Babu Narayan Chandra Kar) for the Respondent.—The difference which my learned friend wants to make out, is really trivial and with much importance. Cited Kanhaiya Lal v. Baldeo Parsad (2). Moreover, the decree as such was not divisible at all. In an indivisible decree when it has been upset on review, the appellant should have preferred an appeal from the new decree. Instead of that the old decree is being appealed against. This is unwarranted by all.

Mr. Das, in reply, cited O XX, r. 7 ; O. IX, r. 13.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are peculiar and give rise to an important question of law. The plaintiffs-respondents brought a suit against the appellant and several others for declaration of right of way. The suit was decreed against the appellant, but dismissed against the defendant Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 10 on the ground that summonses were not properly served on them. The appellant, who was the defendant No. 2 in the suit, preferred an appeal against the decree to the lower Appellate Court while the plaintiffs filed an application for review before the trial Court against that portion of the order of that Court which purported to dismiss the suit against the defendant Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 10. A few dates will be of importance in considering the question raised. The judgment was delivered on the 15th April, 1920 and the decree signed on the 22nd April 1920. The defendant No. 2 preferred an appeal to the lower Appellate Court on the 27th May 1920. The application for review by the plaintiff was granted by the trial Court on the 15th June 1920. The effect of it was that the order of dismissal of the suit against the defendant Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 10, was set aside and the suit against them also was decreed. This has resulted in a slight alteration in the judgment of the Munsif as well as in the decree so far as it related to defendant Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 10. The other portion of the judgment and the decree in which those defendants were not interested were not altered. The appeal before the lower Appellate Court came on for hearing on the 4th July 1921. It was objected by the plaintiffs-respondents that the appeal could not proceed because the decree was modified on review and the appeal should have been against the altered decree, namely, the decree as it stood on the 15th June 1920. I may mention here that the plaintiffs have also appealed against the decree of the first Court on the ground that the suit against the defendants Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 10 was wrongly dismissed. The defendant No. 2 also objected at the hearing of the appeal that the plaintiff's appeal should not have been entertained as it was not preferred against the decree as modified by the review. Whether the defendant was right in his objection or not is not a question which should not affect the decision of the present appeal. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal held that the appeal was incompetent inasmuch as the decree as amended on the 15th June had superseded the original decree and the appeal ought to have been preferred against the decree as amended. The Court of Appeal below has for its view relied upon the cases of Brijbasi Lal v. Salig Ram, (1) Kanahiasya Lal v. Baldeo Prasad (2).

It is argued on appeal that the view taken by the lower Appellate Court is wrong inasmuch as the amendment of the decree or the alternation made in it on the 15th June 1920 did not effect the appealing defendant. The defendant No. 2 (the appellant before us) was not made a party in the review proceedings. Under O. XLVII, r. 4, the opposite party had to be served with notice of the application for review and the opposite party in that application were the defendants Nos. 7, 8, and 10. The present appellant was not rightly made a party in the review proceeding because no relief was sought against him. It is argued on behalf of the respondent that the decree is indivisible and, however slight the alteration may be, and whether it affected the right of the appellant or not, the decree so subsequently altered must be taken to be the decree in the suit against which an appeal would lie under section 96, Civil Procedure Code. It appears that in this particular case the facts are totally different from those in the cases which have decided that the decree modified on review is the proper decree in the suit against which an appeal ought to be preferred. In the Allahabad cases above cited the application for review was directed against all the parties to the suit and the modification made in the decree affected all the parties to the suit. It may, therefore, be correct to say that the decree as modified on review was the decree in the suit. This view has been adopted also in this Court in case of Pyari Mohan Kundu v. Kalu Khan (3). But in the present case the circumstances were so peculiar as, in my opinion, to make the decision in the above cases wholly inapplicable to the present case. Here, so far as the determination of the right between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 2 was concerned, the decree passed on the 22nd April 1920 was final between the parties and the amendment made in the decree on review did not touch that part of the decree which related to the appellant. It would, therefore, seem apparent that the decree, so far as defendant No. 2 (the appellant) was concerned, is the decree which was passed in the first instance by the trial Court. This question may be looked at from another point of view. If the question of limitation arises in the execution proceedings, from which date will the time be counted, whether as against defendant No. 2 it would be calculated from the date of the original decree or from the date of the modification made in the decree? It is not necessary for me to decide this question, but, on the view that I take, it seems to follow that, so far as defendant No. 2 is concerned, the period ought to be calculated from the date of the original decree. Some light on this subject may be obtained by a reference to the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Benimadhar Mitter v. Matangin Dasi (4). There the question directly arose as to what is the date of the decree. By section 205 of the Code of 1882 it was provided that the decree should bear the date of the day on which the judgment was pronounced. The section corresponds to O. XX, r. 7 of the present Code. The Full Bench held that though that is the date of the decree under the law, the date from which the period has to be computed for the purpose of the appeal from the decree must be the date on which the decree was signed. In the present case the decree still bears the date 15th of

INDRARAJBHAU v. SITARAM

April 1920, that being the date when the judgment was pronounced I submit that if a party who is not affected by subsequent proceedings wants to appeal against the decree the period must be computed from the date when the judgment was pronounced or the decree signed. I am prepared to go so far as to hold that if the present appellant had preferred on the last day an appeal from the decree as modified on the 15th June 1920 computing the period from that date the appeal would have been out of time.

It is contended by the respondent that the decree is indivisible. I do not think that there can exist no circumstance in which the decree could be divided. I can mention circumstances in which it is possible to divide up a decree. Take, for instance, a decree passed ex parte against A and B. A applies for re-hearing but B does not. The decree is not such as to be governed by the proviso to O. IX, r. 13. The effect of the revival of the suit on the application of A will be to set it aside in so far as it went against him. But the decree as against B will remain unaffected. Suppose the suit proceeds and the suit is decreed as against A also. Now, if A wants to appeal he must do it against the decree passed subsequently. But if B wants to prefer an appeal from the decree as against him, he cannot take advantage of the modification of the decree and the subsequent decision of the suit; but he has to prefer an appeal within the period of limitation reckoning from the date on which the ex parte decree was made. So that it is possible that in one suit there may be different decrees against different parties from which different periods will be computed. Another instance may be found, where a suit is decreed against A and B. A appeals making the plaintiff the respondent to the appeal (the other defendant B not being a necessary party to it for the determination of the question raised in the appeal), and that decree against A on appeal is modified. The result will be that there will be two decrees one of the first Court against B and one of the Appellate Court against A. If the plaintiff wants to put into execution these decrees he must compute his period from the date of the decree of the Appellate Court as also from the date of the decree in the original suit. That a decree can be vacated or varied either in part or in its entirety is beyond dispute. In the case of Bhubaneswari v. Ajodhya (5) Mookerjee, J., observed that an application for review of judgment may be granted in part. It depends upon the circumstances of each case whether the whole suit should be reopened or whether it should be tried only in part. The same view has been adopted in the recent case of Gnur Krishna Sircar v. Nilmadhab Shaha (6), in which all the cases on the point have been collected. The result of the view I take of the law in this case is that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is wrong, and must be set aside.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower appellate Court set aside and the case remitted to it to be re-heard. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court.

R. B. INDRARAJBHAU v. SITARAM

Appeal against order of the District Judge, Bhandara, dated 10th March 1919.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the order of the District Judge granting a review of judgment in suit No. 2 of 1915. The suit was brought by Sitaram against Brijlal for possession of the two villages of Pardibandh and Kindgipar. Sitaram claimed the villages on the ground that he was the nearest reversioner of one Chaitram who was the last male holder of the villages and who held them as protected thekadar. R. B. Indraraj Singh who was the superior proprietor, being the Zemindar of the estate in which the villages lie, was also impleaded as a defendant. Sitaram failed to produce satisfactory evidence in proof of his relationship with Chaitram and his claim was dismissed by the then District Judge on the 27th of June 1915. On the 31st of October 1916 Sitaram applied for a review of the judgment on the ground that he had discovered new and important documentary evidence which would conclusively establish that he was the nearest sagotra sapinda of the deceased Chaitram. The review was granted and as a result Sitaram has won his case. R. B. Indraraj Singh did not oppose the application for review which was, however, opposed by Brijlal. Both Indraraj Singh and Brijlal have appealed against the order granting the review, the appeal of Brijlal being Miscellaneous Appeal No. 23 of 1919. The judgment in this case governs that appeal. In his affidavit accompanying his application for review Sitaram stated that during the pendency of the suit in spite of his effort he could not discover any documentary evidence to establish his relationship with Chaitram. He goes on to say that on the 28th October 1916 he was told by Kisan alias Bapu that some documentary evidence had been brought in a suit brought by Indraraj Singh against Brijlal (this suit was brought by Indraraj Singh against Brijlal for possession on two grounds that he was the superior proprietor and that he was a nearer relation of Chaitram than Brijlal was), Sitaram accordingly left his village on the 28th October 1916 and reached Bhandara on the 29th October where on enquiry he found that the information given him by Bapu was correct.

On the 30th, Monday, he applied for copies of the papers from the Deputy Commissioner's office and got copies of the papers and a copy of the genealogy the same day and filed his review application on Tuesday the 31st. It is obvious that after getting the information there was no delay at all on the part of Sitaram in making the review application. The grounds of appeal are based on the delay prior to the 28th October 1916. The documents produced on which the review was granted were all records of the proprietary settlement made in 1863. Of the four documents the most important is a genealogical tree which entirely support Sitaram's case. There can be no doubt that the result of the granting of the review has been to decide the case according to the real facts. It is not denied in appeal that the documents were of the utmost importance and that if the other essentials for the granting of a review were present the importance of the documents warranted the action taken. The normal limitation for an application for review is 90 days from the date of the decree. The last natural date for filing the review application would thus have been 19th September 1916 but the application was, as a matter of fact, made 13½ months later. No copy of the decree was filed, and there was no time to be deducted under section 12 of the Limitation Act. It being admitted by Sitaram that he made no attempt to search Settlement misal during the progress of his suit or after the case was decided against him because of the want of documentary evidence, it is urged in appeal that he showed no due diligence at all either during the progress of the suit, or after its dismissal on ground which should have put him on enquiry at once for documentary evidence. Indraraj Singh brought his suit against Brijlal, Suit No. 23 of 1915, after the dismissal of Sitaram's suit all the four documents were filed by Indraraj Singh in Suit No. 23 before the end of 1915. It is urged that as Indraraj Singh had taken the trouble to consult the Settlement misal Sitaram should have taken the same trouble himself as the two villages for which he was suing were the same as the villages sued for by Indraraj Singh and that Sitaram cannot ask to take advantage of a discovery by one of the defendants in his own suit which discovery he ought to have made himself. It is further urged that it was the obvious thing to do for Sitaram to consult the Settlement misl. of the first Settlement since genealogies and statements as to relationship are usually to be found in such records.

Stated in this way, it looks as if there had not been due diligence on the part of Sitaram. But there are additional facts which put a different complexion on the matter. The evidence of Mr. Gangadhar Balwant Gokhale who was the pleader of R. B. Indraraj Singh in the suit brought by him gives important details. After the failure of Sitaram's suit, on the evidence of some of the witnesses in the case it struck Mr. Gokhale that Indraraj Singh himself might be a nearer relative to Chaitram than Brijlal was, and he got from Indraraj Singh the names of villages in the Zemindaris held by Dodhi families, and in the Settlement Records of Umri he found the relevant papers including the genealogy. Now the only two villages in which Sitaram is interested are Pardibandh and Kindgipar. Umri had also belonged to the family, but is stated in this Court and not denied that Chaitram's mother surrendered Umri 8 years ago. There was nothing to help Sitaram in the records of Pardinandh and Kindgipar; the genealogy, etc., were produced at the time of the Umri Settlement because there was a dispute about that village, and, as far as we know, there was no dispute about other villages. Mr. Gokhale appeared for Indraraj Singh in the suit by Sitaram in which Indraraj Singh was joined as a formal party, and it never struck Mr. Gokhale until after that suit was over that the Settlement Records of some village might possibly throw light on the situation, and even then it involved much research to get the information. Indraraj Singh did not oppose the review application, and he has throughout been financing Sitaram. It is not quite clear what interest Brijlal now has in the matter as Indraraj Singh has since ousted him by suit. It also appears that it was Mr. Gokhale who gave Bapu the information which Bapu passed on to Sitaram. Sitaram is illiterate. Brijlal who is literate admits that he himself had no idea that evidence as to relationship could be found in the Settlement Records.

It is argued for the appellants that as the new evidence was not discovered by Sitaram's own diligence, but accidentally, he showed no due diligence at all within the meaning of r. 1 of

O. XLVII. I am, however, of opinion, under the circumstances, that Sitaram could not be expected to know that documentary evidence as to relationship was to be found in the Settlement Records of Umri, and that it cannot be said that with due diligence he could have discovered the evidence before it was disclosed to him. I hold that Sitaram has strictly proved that the new evidence was not within his knowledge and could not be produced by him when the decree was passed, within the meaning of r. 4 (2) (b) of O. XLVII. It appears to me that if ever there was a case for review, this was one.

There remains the question whether the lower Court acted rightly in granting the review application after the expiration of the period of limitation or whether it acted without sufficient cause, see r. 7 (1) (c) of O. XLVII.

There are very few reported cases of the application of section 5 of the Limitation Act to review applications. The cause of the delay in applying for review was identical with the ground for review, namely, that the new evidence had not been discovered before. In Gopal Narhar v. Hanmant Ganesh (1), the mere fact that the application for review was made 18 months beyond limitation was not the only ground for rejecting the application; it was rejected mainly on the merits though the lateness of the application was also taken into consideration. The case sought to be supported by the new evidence was a new case. In Bai Nemathu v. Bai Nematullahu (2) the delay was after the discovery of fresh evidence and was excused on other grounds than the delay in discovering the fresh evidence. But there is no warrant for supposing that the sufficient cause mentioned in section 5 of the Limitation Act may not include the late discovery of the new evidence on which the application for review was granted. I will not go so far as to say that where there are good grounds for granting review on the discovery of new evidence, those grounds will always be also sufficient for admitting the application after the period of limitation, provided that there has been no delay in making the application after the discovery. But I do hold that the grounds for granting review on account of the discovery of fresh evidence may in certain cases be a ground for also extending time under section 5 of the Limitation Act, and this case is, in my opinion, eminently such a case, especially as limitation about the villages in suit was still progressing when the application for review was made.

For these reasons the appeal is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 25.

Kashi Nath Narayan v. Govinda, 15 B-82 ; 8 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 56, referred to.

Mr. S. K. Mitra, for the appellants.

Government Advocate for Crown.

STAMP REPORTER'S REPORT.—

This was a suit for certain reliefs in the alternative. One relief sought was for possession of Schedule IV land and the alternative to this relief was a declaration that defendant No. 5 was a tenant under the plaintiffs for the said land. As an alternative to the above reliefs a prayer for partition of Schedule I land minus the Schedule II land was made. The suit was valued at Rs. 49 and a Court-fee of Rs. 3-12-0 was paid on the plaint. The suit was dismissed. The plaintiffs appealed and valued their appeal to the lower Appellate Court at Rs. 49 and paid a Court-fee of Rs. 3-12-0 in the lower Appellate Court. The appeal having been dismissed they have preferred this second appeal valued at Rs. 49 and stamped with a Court-fee of Rs. 3 12-0. The Court-fee paid in each of the three Courts is insufficient. It is a settled law that where the plaintiff sues in the alternative for one of two reliefs the larger of the two reliefs sought determines the amount of the stamp: Kashinath Narayan v. Govinda (1) and Mukhlal Gir v. Ramdheyan Rai (2) a Patna case. The stamp for the relief for possession in the present suit is Rs. 3-12-0 only. The stamp for the relief for the declaration or the partition is Rs. 15. Therefore, the relief for the declaration or for the partition is larger than the relief for possession. Therefore, the Court-fee leviable in each Court is Rs. 15. Rs. 3-12-0 having been paid, the plaint, the memo of appeal to the lower Appellate Court and this memo of second appeal are insufficiently stamped by Rs. 11-4-0 each, total Rs. 33-12-0. This is due from the plaintiffs-appellants.

If the appellants can show that the plaint was filed before 24th August 1922 the deficit on the plaint will be Rs. 6-4-0 only and the total deficit due from them will be Rs. 28-12-0.

Order of Registrar.—This is a Court-fee matter.

The learned Vakil disputes the Stamp Reporter's note arguing that, because the value of the relief for partition cannot anyhow exceed the value of the relief for exclusive possession, the relief for partition is not the higher of the two reliefs and that, therefore, the principle that Court-fee is payable on the higher of two reliefs does not apply in this case. If this were so, then the appellant would escape paying Court-fee on the relief for partition and I cannot interpret Kashinath Narayan v. Govinda (1) in this way. I prefer to interpret it as implying that where two reliefs are identical in actual money value, but different in respect of the Court-fee leviable on each, then Court-fee is payable on the relief carrying the higher Court-fee; this is in accordance with the practice of this Court and with Desai's Court-Fees Act, page 95, 5th Edition, and the cases cited there.

RAJRANGISINGH v. SHEO BARAT

I, therefore, hold that Rs. 15 is the Court-fee leviable on this memorandum of second appeal. Rs. 3-12-0 having been deposited, the memorandum of appeal is insufficiently stamped by Rs. 11-4-0. There is a similar deficiency on the memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court as also on the plaint.

If the deficit Court-fees be not paid in or before the 23rd instant place before the Bench for orders.

Order of Court.—The view taken by the learned Registrar is perfectly right. The deficit Court-fee must be made good within a fortnight from to-day, failing which the appeal will stand dismissed without further reference to the Bench.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901) ss. 20, 31—Occupancy holding—Mortgage created by tenant—Death of tenant—Resumption by landlord—Mortgagee, position of.

Where on the death of an occupancy tenant without heirs, the landlords become entitled to resume the occupancy holding they can only do so subject to the rights created by the deceased tenant which the landlords failed to challenge within the period allowed by law. So that, if the holding is in possession of a mortgagee from the tenant, whose mortgage was not challenged by the landlords within one year of its creation, the landlords cannot resume possession of the holding without paying off the mortgagee. On the other hand, the mortgagee cannot set up a title by adverse possession against the landlords.

Second appeal against the decree of the First Additional District Judge of Gorakhpur, dated the 25th of January 1922.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Jang Bahadur Lal and S. P. Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT :—The dispute in this appeal relates to an occupancy holding which belonged to Bhukul, who died leaving a widow Mt. Lachminia. In 1314 F. Mt. Lachminia mortgaged the said holding with possession in favour of the defendant-respondent, Sheo Barat-ahir, for Rs. 49 on an agreement to redeem the same in Baisakh 1316 F. she did not, however, pay the mortgage money. In March 1913 Mt. Lachminia died. The plaintiffs and another person named Nath Baksh, who are the co-sharers of the village in which the occupancy holding in question was situated, then sued for the ejectment of the mortgagee in the Revenue Court, alleging that the mortgage was invalid and that the mortgagee held the land as a non-occupancy tenant. The trial Court found that the mortgage in question was executed to pay arrears of rent due to the co-sharers by Mt. Lachminia, and that the mortgagee had paid the rent for three years as nasran to Nath Baksh in order to obtain his consent to the mortgage. It was also found that Nath Baksh attested the mortgage in evidence of his recognition of its validity and that the then plaintiffs were estopped from suing for the ejectment of the mortgagee without paying the mortgage-money. On appeal that decision was upheld. In the course of his judgment the learned Commissioner who heard the appeal observed that it was unlikely that the mortgagee would have paid the rent for three years in a lump sum to occupy fields on a tenure that was liable to be terminated at any moment by the death of Mt. Lachminia and that the view taken by the learned Assistant Collector as to the nature of the agreement entered into was reasonable. He further observed that the receipt of rent for three years by the Zemindar carried with it an agreement that the position of the mortgagee should be that of a mortgagee holding on terms, which, although they did not actually confer occupancy rights, precluded the Zemindar from ejecting him.

In the present suit, which has been filed by some of the then plaintiffs, it is contended that they were not bound by the action of Nath Baksh and that the mortgage was invalid and not binding on them. An attempt is now being made to treat the mortgagee as a trespasser from the time of the death of Mt. Lachminia. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiffs could not eject the mortgagee without paying the money due on the mortgage inasmuch as Nath Baksh had consented to the mortgage and the other co-sharers had allowed the mortgage to remain unchallenged for 78 years even after the death of the mortgagor. It awarded the plaintiff a decree accordingly for possession subject to the payment of Rs. 49 to the mortgagee on account of the money due on the mortgage. The lower Appellate Court, however, treated the decision of the Revenue Court as precluding the plaintiff altogether from seeking the ejectment of the mortgagee and estopping him from seeking to eject the mortgagee as if he were a mortgagee (sic) or trespasser.

The latter view cannot, however, be upheld. The decision of the Revenue Court qua the status of a tenant is binding on the Civil Court; but the effect of the decision of the Revenue Court was not to give the mortgagee a permanent tenure but to recognise his rights as such mortgagee in consequence of the consent which Nath Baksh had accorded to the mortgage by the acceptance of the rent for three years from the mortgagee at the time of the mortgage. Section 20 of the U. P. Tenancy Act (Act III of 1901) declares that the interest of an occupancy tenant is not transferable except by a voluntary transfer between the co-sharers of the tenancy. Section 31 lays down that every transfer made by a tenant in contravention of that Act shall be voidable at the instance of the landholder and the latter can sue for the cancellation of the same and for the ejectment of the tenant and his transferee. The period of limitation provided for such a suit is one year from the date of such transfer. Nath Baksh, one of the co-sharers, is found to have expressly assented to the mortgage by accepting rent from the mortgagee and attesting the mortgage. He was probably acting on behalf of the entire co-parcenary body, and even if he has not so acting the right of the others co-sharers to challenge the validity of the mortgage expired with the lapse of the period of limitation provided for that purpose. The decision in the Revenue Court did not have the effect of investing the mortgagee with complete immunity from ejectment except for the period the mortgage subsisted. When Musammat Lachminia died without leaving any heirs the co-sharers became entitled to resume the occupancy holding subject to such rights as had been created by Musammat Lachminia in her life time. They are not entitled to larger rights than those which Mt. Lachminia herself possessed at the time of her death and they can only get back possession on paying the money due on the mortgage, the validity of which they omitted to challenge during the time allowed by law. It is as little open to the co-sharers to treat the mortgagee as a trespasser in the face of the decision which was arrived at in the previous ejectment-proceeding as it is for the mortgagee to set up adverse possession in the face of that mortgage.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs throughout. The time for the payment of the mortgage-money will be extended till the end of Baisakh mite.

Lambardar-Occupancy rights, surrender of—Co-sharers, claim by, in respect of their shares, Delay, effect of—Discretion of Court—Appellate Court, interference by.

When a tenant surrenders his occupancy rights to a co-sharer Lambardar, the other co-sharers if they wish to recover their shares in the fields surrendered, on payment of a proportionate share of the expenses of acquisition, must prefer their claim without unreasonable delay. Such a claim is a merely equitable one and is within the discretion of the Court to grant or to refuse, and unless there is something wrong with the manner in which that discretion has been exercised, it is unusual to interfere with it in appeal.

When such a claim was preferred more than three years after the date of the surrender and the Lam- bardar had, in the meantime, spent money on the land and leased it out to a tenant ;

Held, that the delay was unreasonable and that the lease granted by the Lambardar was binding on the co-sharers.

Appeal against the decree of Additional District Judge, Chanda, in appeal No. 80 of 1921 decided on 23rd December 1921.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, R. B., for the Appellants.

Mr. D. W. Kathalay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant in this case is the co-sharer Lambardar of Mouza Wandli in the Warora Tahsil, while the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 are co-sharers in same village, each owning a four-anna share. One Bhadu was the tenant of occupancy field No. 1, area 30-35 acres and rental Rs. 15 of the above Mouza. He surrendered it to the defendant under a deed of surrender dated 20th April 1917. Plaintiff's story is that the defendant refused to give them their half share in the field in spite of their willingness to contribute their quota towards the reasonable expenses of the acquisition of the field. The defendant contended that he had paid to Bhadu Rs. 592 on a bond in consideration of which the field was surrendered. Other pleas were raised which are unnecessary to be considered in this second appeal.

The first Court's finding may be summarised as follows. Bhadu surrendered the field for the consideration of Rs. 592. Plaintiffs refused to keep the half of the field and contribute their share of the expenses. The defendant leased the field to one Jagannath before he received the notice from the plaintiffs telling him not to deal with the land. The defendant spent some money on improving the field but what the exact amount was was not established. The suit resulted in the trial Court in a dismissal, it being further held that the lease granted by the Lambardar was binding on the plaintiff and that the plaintiffs had made unreasonable delay in bringing the present suit.

Though the lower Appellate Court did not agree with the first Court in all its conclusions, still, on the authority of Ramdayal v. Gulabia Bai (1), it held that there had been unreasonable delay by the plaintiffs in bringing the suit and confirmed the dismissal.

(1) 4 N. L. R. 129.

The argument in this Court has principally been that what has been decided in the above quoted case is that a claim must be advanced without unreasonable delay, and if the co-sharers tell the actual person who has accepted the surrender or the co-sharer purchaser of the field that they intend to demand their share, and if such information is conveyed within a reasonable time, the principle enunciated in Ramdayal v. Gulabia Bai (1) has been complied with. It is contended that the delay does not mean delay in bringing the suit. In this case the delay between the plaintiffs' knowledge of Bhadu's surrender and the bringing of the suit is some three years and eight months. The claim is a claim in equity within the discretion of the Court to grant or refuse, and I think must be advanced without unreasonable delay. It is laid down in many cases that the discretion to be exercised in the claim in equity is a judicial discretion, and unless there is something wrong in the manner in which the discretion has been exercised, it is unusual to interfere with such discretion. Here, the plaintiffs, though they may have told the defendant that they meant to claim their right, allowed the defendant Lambardar to spend money on the land and gave him time within which he leased it to a tenant; and I think it has been rightly held that, if the plaintiffs did intend to enforce their rights in a Civil Court, they should have done so earlier.

I decline to interfere with the discretion exercised by the two Courts below. The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The appellants will pay the respondent's costs.

Nor should his pronouncement with respect of their credibility be put aside on mere calculations of probabilities by the Court of Appeal. There is no restriction on the discretion of the Appellate Courts in the consideration of the evidence but where the issue is simple and the only question is which set of witnesses is to be believed the verdict of a Judge trying the case should not be lightly disregarded.

Appeal from the judgments and decrees of the Additional Judicial Commissioner, dated the 13th December 1920 and 5th May 1921, respectively.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Appellants.

Respondents, absent and ex-parte.

JUDGMENT.—Appeals 48 and 12 of 1921 have been both argued together by Mr Kimatrai, who appeared for the appellants, the firm of Jessomal Valiram, in both cases.

The facts are common, namely, that one Jessomal owned a building in which Virji, the respondent in appeal No. 48, and Chellaram, respondent in appeal no 12, had leased tenements. Jessomal wished to evict these two tenants and brought suits against them in this Court of Additional Judicial Commissioner. His grounds were three, namely: (1) alleged non-payment of rent; (2) alleged need of the premises for his own bona fide use, and (3) misbehaviour of the tenants to such an extent as to create a nuisance. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner disbelieved the evidence led by Jessomal. He held that the tenants had tendered such rent as was due from them, that the premises had never been required by Jessaram for his own bona fide personal use, and that the defendants never misused the premises in such a way as to create a nuisance. He, therefore, dismissed both suits.

Against these two decrees Jessaram has lodged the present appeals. Mr. Kimatrai argued them on his behalf. The respondents were not represented.

The learned pleader very frankly informed the Court that he did not propose to press point No. 3. We have, therefore, only to consider the two other points argued by the learned pleader. Now, in the first place, it must be remembered that the matters on which the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner's decision turns were matters of fact and in no way matters of law. It has long been the practice of the Appellate side of the High Court of Bombay not to interfere, save in very rare cases, with the findings of fact of Judges of the High Court sitting on the Original side. This practice was approved and departure from it condemned in the case of the Bombay Cotton Manufacturing Co., Limited v. Raja Bahadur Motilal Sivalal (1). The observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council were as follows:—

"The Appellate Court refused to accept as conclusive the judgment of the lower Court as to the veracity of the witnesses. It is doubtless true that on appeal the whole case, including the facts, are within the jurisdiction of the Appeal Court. But, generally speaking, it is undesirable to interfere with the findings of the fact of the Trial Judge who sees and hears the witnesses and has an opportunity of noting their demeanour especially in cases where the issue is simple and depends on the credit which attached to one or other of conflicting witnesses. Nor should his pronouncement with respect of their credibility be put aside on mere calculations of probabilities by the Court of appeal. In making these observations their Lordships have no desire to restrict the discretion of the Appellate Courts in India in the consideration of the evidence. They only wish to point out that, where the issue is simple and straightforward and the only question is which set of witnesses is to be believed the verdict of a Judge trying the case should not be lightly disregarded."

Following the principle laid down by the Judges of the Privy Council for the guidance of the Higher Indian Courts, we are not disposed to interfere with the findings of fact arrived at after careful consideration by the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner.

We dismiss both the appeals and confirm the findings and decree of the lower Court.

C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898)—Lambardar—Tenancy created by Lambardar, whether can be challenged—Consideration for lease, failure to pay, effect of.

It is impossible to challenge a tenancy purporting to have been created by the Lambardar more than a quarter of a century ago, except on the allegation that it never was in fact created and that the transaction was a mere pretence on paper and that the ostensible tenant has never had possession of the land. If the Lambardar did in fact create the tenancy, the question of the actual payment of the consideration for the lease does not arise.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal by Radha Bai, the third defendant in the case, like that of the fifth defendant Bansidhar (F. A. No. 86 of 1922), must fail in respect of the grounds which it has in common with that of the first defendant Jageshwar Pant (F. A. No. 88 of 1922), but it is hardly contended that it is not bound to succeed otherwise. The portion of the property in dispute is occupancy fields in Vihirgaon and a house and kotha and a well situated in one of them. The numbers and areas of the fields are 9 (3-23), 70 (10-48), 93 (10-16) and 100 (29-36). Little or nothing has been said about the title to the house and well and it is apparently agreed that they go with the field in which they are situated.

Fields No. 93 and No 100 with two others formed an absolute occupancy holding which Jageshwar Pant bought for Rs. 2,000 on the 27th of May 1904, and on the 24th of November 1905 he conferred, or at least purported to confer, occupancy rights in them on Radha Bai on a rental of Rs. 46 which was that previously paid by the absolute occupancy tenant by a deed which recites that Radha Bai had paid him a nazarana of Rs. 155, or two-and-a-half times the rental. The lease is Exhibit P. 72 and by mistake shows field No. 93 as field No. 91. The entry of the two fields as khudkash, which was made in 1904-05, was allowed to stand till 1908-09, but was corrected in 1909-10, and since then Radha Bai has been shown as the occupancy tenant. The other two fields, No. 9 and No. 70, were similarly made over to her by Jageshwar Pant by a deed dated the 11th of March 1912 on a rental of Rs. 24 for a nazarana of Rs. 6'.

It is impossible to challenge tenancies purporting to have been created as long ago as these except on the allegation that they never were in fact created and each transaction was a mere pretence on paper and the ostensible tenant has never had possession of the land. The question of actual payment of the consideration for the lease does not arise, as if the Lambardar did in fact make Radha Bai a tenant it does not matter whether she paid him anything or not, nor indeed would it make any difference if he made a false statement of receipt of payment in the deed. As to possession, there is the strong evidence of the village papers, which does not stand alone, to show that Radha Bai has had possession of the fields and enjoyed the income of them ever since she was made an occupancy tenant and there is no evidence whatever to the contrary.

All that could be urged on behalf of Pandurang here was that the absence of good faith in the original transaction was proved by the admission of Jagoshwar Pant in his position that he gave the fields to Radha Bai to save them from the clutches of his son. Now, Pandurang was only 11 years old in 1904, not more than 19 in 1912, so that even if his father had said such a thing it would be no more probable than all the rest of the mass of imbecilities of which his deposition consists. But he did not say it. What he said was, that the fact that the fields stood recorded in the name of his mistress Radha Bai would not save them from the clutches of his son.

The tenancy rights in the four fields and the right in the well and the house and kotha are clearly not a part of the property liable to partition. The decree of the lower Court will, therefore, be modified by the removal from it of the list attached to it as Schedule P. 2. The respondent Pandurang will pay all the costs incurred by the appellant Radha Bai in this and in the lower Court. The remaining respondents will pay their own costs in this Court.

The Pleader's fee payable to Radha Bai, in the schedules of costs of both Courts, will, however, be calculated on Rs. 2,000 only. The sum of Rs. 18,000 stated in the petition of appeal as the value of the relief sought, and so accepted in the decree of the lower Court for the calculation of the pleader's fee, is that of the quarter share in the property of which partition has been decreed in favour of Pandurang. But Radha Bai is concerned with nothing but the tenancy rights in four fields of about fifty acres and a well and a house and kotha. The value of this property is stated in the plaint to be Rs. 2,000 and though that is very probably the value of the full proprietary rights in it, for want of further information, we can only take it as the value of the relief claimed and obtained by Radha Bai in this appeal.

A cross-objection was filed by the plaintiff Pandurang, but as it was not mentioned in argument, and we cannot even understand it without explanation, the only order we can pass is that it is dismissed and the respondent Pandurang must pay all the costs incurred in connection with it.

Hindu Law—Joint Family—Managing member, rights and duties of—Misappropriation, what constitutes—Partition—Right of residence, nature of.

Under the Hindu Law, a managing member is not bound to give a general account of his dealings and, in the absence of fraud or misappropriation, he cannot be called upon to justify his past transactions. He is not bound to keep general accounts and co-parceners cannot complain if he, in his discretion, favours in his expenditure one of the co-parceners at the expense of the other.

In this matter there is no difference between the position of an infant co-parcener and another.

Capital monies proved to have come into the hands of a manager must be considered as available for partition in the absence of evidence showing what has happened to them.

In this connection, misappropriation by a manager means nothing more than the expenditure by him of the money on other than justifiable family expenses.

But when assets are traced into the hands of the managing member, he is bound to account for them on partition whether the co-parceners are minors or majors. It is not enough for him to say that he has no longer got these assets.

The right of members of a joint family to residence in a particular house is not a right in rem. It is true that while it is being used as a family house, they have a right to reside there. But on partition, it is clearly a matter for the tribunal arranging the partition to say whether it is in the general interest of the co-parceners that residence should be given in a particular house or not.

JUDGMENT.

The Chief Justice.—This is an appeal from the judgment of Krishnan, J., in a partition suit from so much of his decree as directed that the first defendant should account for a sum of Rs. 6,500 shown to have come into his hands as a part of the joint family assets. The 1st defendant was the manager of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law, the other persons interested being a minor brother, and their mother and sister who were entitled to rights of maintenance. The 1st defendant has become an insolvent and the Official Assignee of Madras on behalf of his creditors represents his interest. The facts, so far as they are relevant, are that Rs. 6,500 which formed part of the ancestral property were deposited in a Bank and, some years ago, drawn out by the 1st defendant. Of that amount Rs. 2,500 were deposited with Messrs. Beardsell & Co., as security for the honesty of the 1st defendant who was entering the service of that firm as Cash-keeper. The balance has disappeared. There was a suggestion that it was used by the first defendant for purposes of his own marriage or other legitimate family expenses. But this was negatived by his mother who stated that she had found the necessary money for the marriage and by the fact that the sums were drawn out sometime after the marriage, and no evidence was forthcoming of any other necessary family expenditure which could not be met out of the income. The 1st defendant was not called as a witness. It was suggested that he was helping his relations as against his creditors which might account for the Official Assignee not calling him as a witness. But all his affairs were in the hands of the Official Assignee who had every opportunity of examining the insolvent and ascertaining the true facts. The money was drawn by the 1st defendant in 1914. In 1918 he was found to have committed defalcations in his office of Cash-keeper to Messrs. Beardsell & Co., amounting to Rs. 15,000. It is possible that the balance of the money so drawn out by the 1st defendant was invested in some other manner. At the time, he told his mother that he was lending a large part of it to a Muhammadan, a business man; but there is no evidence that this loan is still outstanding, and it is much more probable that it was ultimately used to meet the defalcations of Messrs. Beardsell & Co., or to meet the 1st defendant's losses in some unfortunate speculations which led to his making away with this large amount of Beardsell's money.

The learned Judge has held that the 1st defendant has received these moneys and has not accounted for them except as to the Rs. 2,500 mentioned. He has held, further, that it is a rule of Hindu Law that a coparcener upon partition is not entitled to call upon the managing member to render an account of his past management so as to debit him with any loss caused to the joint property by his management but can only get his share in the properties available for division at the time of partition, and for this proposition he quotes Balakrishna Aiyar v. Muthuswamy Aiyar (1) and Kodali Krishnayya v. Kodali Guruvayya (2). He points out that there is an exception to this rule, when a person is able to establish misappropriation on the part of the manager. He also held that there is another exception, namely, that if a co-parcener is a minor, the manager can be made to account generally in respect of the corpus of the estate, at any rate, where there are no adult members except the manager; and as the plaintiff in this case was at all material times a minor, he holds that the first defendant must bring into account this sum of Rs. 6,500.

I agree to the result arrived at, but I do not agree with the reasons given. That a managing member is not bound to give a general account of his dealings, that in the absence of fraud or misappropriation, the managing member cannot be called upon to justify his past transactions, that the manager is not bound to keep general accounts and that co-parceners cannot complain if the manager in his discretion favours in his expenditure one of the co-parceners at the expense of the others are matters, I think, beyond controversy: nor do I find any authority in support of the proposition that in this matter there is any difference between the position of an infant co-parcener and another. In fact, on an examination of the cases establishing this proposition, it will be found that in most of them there were persons who were minors at the date of the partition or had been minors at the time of the expenditure by the manager. But in respect of assets proved to have come into the hands of the manager, in my judgment, he has to account. It is not enough for him to say that he has no longer got those assets; nor do I think it right to say, once it had been proved that the assets came into his hands, that the co-parcener has also to prove that they remained in his hands at the date of the partition; in my judgment, capital monies proved to have come into the hands of a manager must be considered as available for partition, in the absence of some evidence showing what has happened to them. It is not necessary in this case to discuss what would be sufficient evidence. It may be that the proof of family necessities which would involve an expenditure greater than the income would lead to the presumption that the assets have been properly expended on behalf of the family. But, in this case, there is nothing of the sort, and I think that the proper inference to be drawn is that these monies have been misappropriated by the managing member. In this connection, I think that misappropriation means nothing more than the expenditure of the money on other than justifiable family expenses. Rs. 2,500 were clearly misappropriated. It was not a legitimate family purpose to place that money with Messrs. Beardsell & Co., as security for the good behaviour of the managing member. But it remained joint family and, when he caused the loss of that money to the family by his misconduct as an employee of Messrs. Beardsell & Co., in my judgment, he clearly misappropriated the money. As regards the balance of Rs. 4,000 it was traced into his hands. It was proved that it was deposited in a Bank and that he drew it out. There is no evidence that he spent it on family necessity or that there was any family necessity for which such a sum of money would have been required, and in my judgment, under those circumstances, when the assets are traced into the hands of the managing member, he is bound to account for them on partition, whether the co-parceners are minors or majors, and in this case the first defendant, and the Official Assignee representing him, have entirely failed to do so. If authority were required for these propositions, I think, it is to be found in the account that was ordered in Balakrishna Aiyar v. Muthusami Aiyar (1) and in the clear judgment on the point of Phillips and Krishnan, JJ., in Kodali Kristnayya v. Kodali Guruvayya (2), particularly of Krishnan, J., at p. 509, where he states the law correctly. It was suggested that Tummi Reddi v. Gengu Reddi (3), was an authority to the contrary. But, as I read the judgment, particularly on p. 287, it supports the view expressed above.

The result is that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Waller, J.:—I agree that this appeal must be dismissed with costs. The rule of Law, as stated by Krishnan, J., is, that a co-parcener can get a share only in such properties as are actually available at the time of partition. If this means that when a manager is asked to account for missing property it is a sufficient answer on his part to point out that it no longer exists, I cannot accept it as an adequate statement of the law. The ruling in Balakrishna Aiyar v. Muthuswami Aiyar (1) shows that it is open to a co-parcener to call upon the manager to account for specific items of property which are alleged to have come into his hands. Though he is not entitled to ask for a general account of the management he is entitled to an account of the property at the time he asks for partition. And by that is meant not the property as it actually exists, but as it ought to be. This is the view taken in Kodali Kristnayya v. Kodali Guruvayya (2) and there is nothing to the contrary in Tummi Reddi v. Gengu Reddi (3).

In the present case it is clear that the manager had to account for Rs. 6,500, the sum of money he probably appropriated to his own use. In any event, it has not been proved that he spent it for any necessary or legitimate family purpose. He must, therefore, make good plaintiff's half share.

(Continuation of the judgment pronounced in open Court this day.)

The Chief Justice :—Another point arises under the judgment of Krishnan, J. The second and third defendants, being the mother and sister of the co-parceners, he directs that they should have a maintenance of Rs. 15 a month, and that the daughter should have a sum of Rs. 2,000 for her marriage. He also holds that they should be allotted each a room in the house item 1, that is, the family house, for their residence. Now, it is objected that the last part of the order will seriously interfere with the advantageous partition, namely, the sale of the house, which is the only valuable family property that there is if it is to be sold subject to a right of these two ladies each to have one room in that house. It is argued, on the other hand, that they have an absolute right to them, it being called a right in rem. In my judgment, it is quite wrong to say that the members of a joint Hindu family have rights in rem to residence in a particular house. It is true that, while it is being used as a family house, they have a right to reside there, but I have serious doubts whether they have a right to any particular separate room; but, on partition, it is clearly a matter for the tribunal arranging the partition to say whether it is in the general interest of the co-parceners that residence should be given in a particular house or not. Some other provision can be made if there are more houses than one to choose from. It may be for the general advantage of the family that provision should be made in money instead of in kind. I think that, so much of this judgment as purports to hamper the Official Referee's discretion in effecting this partition by giving these two ladies an indefeasible right to occupy a certain part of this house is wrong, and that the matter must go before the Official Referee to decide what is best to be done unfettered by any such discretion.

Waller, J : I agree.

Appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Stuart, dated the 3rd April 1922.

Mr. Bhagwati Shankar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kumudu Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent brought in the Revenue Court by the plaintiff Ata Husain against Ramman Lal, defendant, and others. The rent claimed was for the years 1324, 1325 and 1326 Fasli. The land in respect of which the rent was claimed formed the occupancy holding of one Musammal Katwari. The plaintiff alleges himself to be the mortgagee of the holding from Mt. Katwari, and he said in his plaint that the defendant was his sub-tenant and was, therefore, liable to pay him rent. The defendant Ramman Lal denied that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the plaintiff and him. He asserted that he had taken the land from Mt. Katwari and that he had paid the rent claimed to the latter. There can be no doubt that Mt. Katwari was incompetent to mortgage her occupancy holding and that the alleged mortgage in favour of the plaintiff is void in law. Therefore, the plaintiff has no right to the land in suit.

The lower Appellate Court held this to be one of the grounds on which the plaintiff's suit was bound to fail. That Court further found that the defendant had paid the rent sued for by the plaintiff to Mt. Katwari and that the defendant was not the plaintiff's tenant. That Court dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed to this Court and his appeal was dismissed by a learned Judge of this Court.

Two contentions have been raised before us. The first is that, even if the plaintiff has no title, the defendant took the land from him and, therefore, could not deny his title as defendant's landlord, and the second contention is that the plaintiff has obtained a decree against the defendant for his ejectment from this holding, and that the effect of that decree is that the defendant must be deemed to be the plaintiff's tenant.

As we have already said, the mortgage alleged to have been made in the plaintiff's favour being in contravention of the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act, is a void mortgage and, therefore, the plaintiff has no title to the land in respect of which rent is claimed. Mt. Katwari, the mortgagor, was competent to resume possession of the land, although she could not bring a suit in Court for recovery of possession unless she made good to the plaintiff the money which she had received from him. At the same time, if Katwari dispossessed him the plaintiff could not come into Court to enforce his right as mortgagee and to eject her from the property. The fact, as found by the lower Appellate Court, of Mt. Katwari having realized the rent from the defendant is equivalent to Mt. Katwari having resumed possession of the land, and if she resumed possession of the land the plaintiff has no remedy as against her so far as the land is concerned. If he had no remedy against Katwari, he could not have any remedy against the defendant who has paid the rent to her, and on this ground the plaintiff's claim was bound to fail.

Again, the passing of a decree for the ejectment of the defendant cannot affect the rights of Musammat Katwari, and if she realised the rent from the defendant and thus took back possession of the holding which she had mortgaged to the plaintiff, the ejectment proceedings against the defendant cannot prejudice her rights and by reason of payment of rent to her the defendant has been relieved of liability to pay rent to the plaintiff.

From any point of view, therefore, the plaintiff who has taken an illegal mortgage cannot receive any remedy at the hands of the Court. If a decree were passed against a tenant under such circumstances, it would enable an occupancy tenant whom the Legislature intended to protect, to circumvent the law and allow a mortgagee from him to take possession of his holding. Further more, in the present case there was an allegation by the defendant that he has not taken the land from the plaintiff. That allegation was not repudiated by the plaintiff, nor was any issue raised in the Court of first instance on that point. Therefore, we cannot assume that the land had been let to the defendant by the plaintiff. If the defendant had already been cultivating the land before the mortgage to the plaintiff was made, the plaintiff who has really no title under his mortgage, cannot seek to realize the rent from him if he refuses to pay it. The appeal is, therefore, in our opinion, untenable, and we dismiss it with costs.

A decree cannot be passed in accordance with an adjustment which depends upon a future contingency which may or may not happen.

An agreement between the parties to a suit that if the plaintiff eats food cooked by a particular person the whole suit may be decreed, is merely executory and does not amount to an adjustment of the suit within the meaning of O. XXIII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Fyzabad, dated the 19th February 1923.

Mr. E. R. Khidwai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Haider Husein, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is the plaintiff's appeal in a suit for the recovery of possession of certain shares in two villages on the ground that the shares in suit belonged to one Gajadhar and to his brother, Padarath; that the last holder of the property was Mt. Dilasi, widow of Gajadhar; that Mt. Dilasi died on the 11th October 1921 and that thereby the inheritance devolved on plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 as the nearest reversioners of Gajadhar and Padarath. The plaintiff No. 1 is the transferee from plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 of an interest in the subject matter of the suit. In the defence raised by the defendants the legitimacy of plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 was disputed. Certain transfers made by the widow were also set up as binding on the plaintiffs, the transfers having been made for legal necessity. It was also denied that Mt. Dilasi held the property in the character of a Hindu widow or that it devolved upon her from her husband and from Padarath by way of inheritance. These pleadings resulted in a large number of issues. The Court proceeded to record evidence on those issues. One of the issues in the case was in relation to the question of the legitimacy of plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3. While the evidence was being recorded, Banse, defendant No. 1, and the pleader of Bipat, defendant No. 2, made a proposal to the effect that if the plaintiff No. 1 ate food prepared by the plaintiff No. 3 the plaintiff's claim should be decreed in whole.

It appears that on the date when the above-mentioned proposal was made the defendant No. 2 was absent. The case was adjourned to another date to enable the defendant No. 1 to appear in Court and express his own wishes in respect of that proposal. He appeared on the 10th February 1923 and accepted the proposal mentioned above. Kachcha food was accordingly prepared and in the presence of the Court and the defendants and their respective pleaders the plaintiff No. 1 took the food prepared by the plaintiff No. 3.

It appears, however, and the Court below has accepted this fact, that before the food was actually eaten by the plaintiff No. 1, the pleader for the defendant No. 2 informed the Court that his client would not abide by the agreement entered into previously, and that the case might be heard and decided on merits. The Court of first instance took the view that it was not possible for the defendant to renege from the position which he had previously accepted. In result, that Court decreed the plaintiff's suit on the sole ground of the agreement mentioned above.

The defendants were dissatisfied with the decree of the Court of first instance. They, therefore, appealed to the Court of the District Judge of Fyzabad. That Court has set aside the decree of the Court of first instance and remanded the suit for determination according to law. The order of the lower Appellate Court is impugned in appeal before me by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs. He argues that the agreement was an adjustment of the suit within the meaning of r. 3 of O. XXIII of the Code of Civil Procedure, and, therefore, the Court of first instance had rightly based its decision upon that agreement.

I am of opinion that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is right and should be maintained. An agreement of the nature of which the agreement under consideration was cannot be construed as an adjustment of a suit. It was open to the plaintiff No. 1 to refuse to take the food prepared by the plaintiff No. 3 even at the last moment when it was served before him for being eaten and if he had done so it follows that the suit could not have been adjusted by the agreement under consideration. At the most the agreement was merely executory and it could only have been on the happening of the contingency anticipated by the agreement that the suit would have been adjusted in terms of it. If the adjustment is to depend upon a future contingency which may or may not happen, I am of opinion that that is not an adjustment of the suit according to which a decree could be passed.

There is one matter, however, which I desire to mention before I take leave of this case. As already observed, one of the issues in the case raised the question of the legitimacy of plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3. I have no doubt in my mind that the fact that the agreement under consideration was made and that it was acted upon would be relevant evidence on the decision of that issue and the trial Court would be justified in treating it as such.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti dated 7th February 1921, in Civil Suit No. 10 of 1920.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Krishna Bai, widow of Ganeshdas, of Anjangaon Surji, brings this suit for a declaration that a trust-deed executed by herself and her husband's adopted son Motilal with respect to the property of Ganeshdas was a nullity for several reasons set forth in paragraphs 6 and 8 of the plaint. The trust-deed is dated the 26th June 1916 and was presented for registration by Motilal Ganeshdas on the 21st July 1916. It was registered on the 30th August 1916 in office as against Motilal, and at the house of Krishna Bai at Anjangaon so far as Krishna Bai was concerned, presumably because she was a parda nashin lady who, according to the custom of her community, could not be compelled to attend the Sub-Registrar's Office. Ganeshdas died on the 26th December 1915 and Motilal died on the 7th July 1917. It is alleged that at the time of Motilal's death his son Misrilal was 4 years old, that is, he had come into existence during the lifetime of Ganeshdas and was also in existence on the date of the trust-deed. Misrilal died on the 26th August 1919 at the age of 6. The property dealt with by the trust-deed is alleged in the plaint to be ancestral so that Misrilal could acquire an interest in it as soon as it passed by succession on Ganeshdas's death. Thus, Motilal and Misrilal were joint owners of the property and on Motilal's death Misrilal became the sole owner thereof by survivorship. The plaintiff's contention is that, on Misrilal's death on the 26th August 1919, she inherited the property as an heiress to her grandson, that she had no interest in the property on the date of execution of the trust deed and, consequently, the deed is not binding as against her in her capacity of an heiress of Misrilal. She also contends that, just as it was open to Misrilal to repudiate the factum and validity of the trust, it was open to her also to repudiate it in her capacity of an heiress of Misrilal. In paragraph 9 of the plaint she stated that she was unwilling to deliver possession of the property and to fulfil the trust. Being in possession, she has claimed only the relief of declaration that the deed is null and void and of no effect as against the estate possessed by her as Misrilal's heir. The suit was filed on the 10th July 1920 the plaintiff basing her cause of action upon the rights which accrued to her on Misrilal's death on the 26th August 1919 and upon their infringement by the defendants' assertion from time to time that the trust was valid and enforceable.

The defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are the co-trustees along with plaintiff appointed under the deed. Among the several pleas urged by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 only one plea urged in paragraph 9 of the defendant No. 1's written statement dated 4th October 1920 which gave rise to issue No. 9 is relevant to the decision of this appeal. The Court of first instance has upheld the plea and dismissed the suit on that ground alone, although there were several other issues framed in the case. The plea is to the following effect: "The defendant submits that the plaintiff entered into possession of the property in the lifetime of Motilal by virtue of her position as trustee when she admittedly had no right to the property or its possession and is even now in possession as such. As the plaintiff definitely states in paragraph 9 of the plaint that she is unwilling to surrender possession and divest herself of her character as trustee, she cannot maintain the present suit under law as she is estopped from doing so." In support of this plea defendant No. 1, in paragraph 14 of his written statement, prominently mentions certain acts or conduct on the part of plaintiff showing an acceptance of the trust by her, and asserts that plaintiff is thereby precluded from disclaiming the trust thus accepted. Defendant No. 2 adopted defendant No. 1's pleas. Defendant No. 3 does not appear to have contested the plaintiff's claim. In the plaintiff's written reply dated the 27th October 1920 we find the following answer to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2's aforesaid plea raised in paragraph 9: "Plaintiff did not get possession of trust property during Motilal's life-time. He may have taken leases in her name. She acted as trustee after his death. But having discovered that the trust is void she can repudiate the same. She is not estopped. As regards the acts set forth in paragraph 14 her reply is contained in paragraphs 18, 19, 20 and 21 wherein she denies having been present at the meeting of the trustees on 8th January 1917 and says she made her mark to some proceedings which were brought to her. She admits that she did act as trustee in Miscellaneous Case No. 27 of 1918 but contends that she was not estopped from saying that the trust is void."

Issue No. 9 runs thus:—

"Having obtained possession of trust property even after Motilal's death, as is admitted by plaintiff, can she maintain this suit without surrendering possession of that property to the other trustees?"

The case was fixed for arguments on this issue by Mr. Parande who heard part of the arguments and adjourned the case to 21st December 1920 for further arguments. On this adjourned hearing the case came on before Mr. R. D. Pande, Additional District Judge, who has thrown the suit out as not maintainable, following certain observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Shrinivasa Moorthy v. Venkata Varada Aiyangar (1) to the effect that no person who has accepted the position of a trustee and has acquired property in that capacity can be permitted to assert an adverse title on his own behalf until he has obtained a proper discharge from the trust with which he has clothed himself.

The plaintiff has come up in appeal to this Court and urged the following grounds:—

"1. That the plaintiff as a person who was already in possession of the property forming the subject-matter of the trust before the trust was created could sue to obtain a declaration that the deed of trust is voidable at her instance as obtained by fraud without relinquishing possession of the said property.

KRISHNABAI v. DHONDO RAMCHANDRA

"2. That the lower Court has failed to observe that, besides suing in her own right on the ground of fraud, the plaintiff has sued as heir to her grandson, Misrilal, who was no party to the creation of the trust and who as a co-parcener with his father Motilal in the property covered by the deed of trust had the right to set it aside as beyond the powers of his father, the property being ancestral family property."

The third ground which related to costs was not argued before us.

It is argued before us that the suit was wrongly dismissed on the preliminary point without ascertaining the necessary facts. It is contended that the question whether, on Motilal's death, the plaintiff came into possession as a trustee or as an heir of Misrilal was a question of fact and that if the pleadings are construed as a whole there was no unqualified admission by plaintiff from which it could be inferred that she admitted having entered into possession of the property as a trustee. On the other hand, several passages were brought to our notice from the plaint to show that what plaintiff admitted was that she obtained possession of the property in virtue of her right of succession to her grandson. In the argument, the validity of the trust on the ground that the property was ancestral, was also challenged and it was urged that this and several other questions covered by other issues were questions of fact which required determination on the merits. It will be noticed that the parties are at variance also on the question of Misrilal's capacity to take interest by birth in the property covered by the deed and, therefore, to challenge the trust. It was further argued that if the so-called trust was void or could not be legally created, none came into existence, and, therefore, nothing which the plaintiff did would in law fix her with the character of a trustee as such or signify her acceptance of the so-called trust, and, consequently, there would be no necessity for disclaiming what was legally a non-existent trust or even for surrendering possession, as a condition precedent to its repudiation by plaintiff. Lastly, it was argued that, in any case, the plaintiff was entitled under law to give evidence for showing that the so-called admissions of hers were in ignorance of her legal rights and for explaining away her conduct. We think there is great force in each of these contentions and we are convinced that the case has been wrongly decided without ascertaining the real facts and giving the plaintiff an opportunity to explain her conduct or admissions.

The Additional District Judge takes it as the basis of his judgment that it was admitted for the plaintiff that she had taken possession of the property as a trustee but that this was after Motilal's death, and that the position of a trustee was admittedly accepted by plaintiff after Motilal's death and she managed the property and realised the assets as such. He, therefore, concludes from this that it was not open to the plaintiff to repudiate the trust unless she surrendered possession over the property taken in her possession or under her management as a trustee. In our opinion the Additional District Judge has misconstrued the pleadings as regards the so-called admissions of plaintiff contained therein. A pleading includes a plaint, and, therefore, in construing admissions in a pleading a Court ought to look to the plaint and the pleadings as a whole. This is an ordinary rule of interpretation of pleadings. The principle upon which this rule as to accepting the admissions in a pleading as a whole seems to be based, is that if a party makes a qualified statement, that statement cannot be used against him apart from that qualification; an unfair use is not to be made of a party's statement, by trying to convert into a particular admission by him that which he never intended to be such an admission. Baikantharath Kumar v. Chandru Mohan Chowdhury (2). Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Motabhoj Mulla Essabhoj v. Mulji Haridas, (3) observed as follows.

"It is permissible for a tribunal to accept part and reject the rest of any witness's testimony. But an admission in pleading cannot be so dissected, and if it is made subject to a condition it must either be accepted subject to the condition or not accepted at all."

Judging the pleadings in the light of this rule of interpretation and of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council, we are at a loss to find any unqualified admission by plaintiff in her plaint to the effect that she entered into possession of the property as a trustee and managed it in that capacity. Her so called admissions in paragraphs 6, 18 and 19 of her written reply set forth above are also not unqualified or unconditional because she, side by side with them, clearly challenges the trust as being void and of no effect. We do not think the admissions could be considered to be unconditional. If the judgment is to be based upon such admissions we must take the admissions as a whole subject to the condition, or not accept them at all. No case of an unqualified acceptance of the trust by the plaintiff can, therefore, be construed out of the the so-called admissions in the pleadings, and, therefore, no question of her surrendering possession of the property as a condition precedent to her maintaining the present suit arises on the present state of the record.

The case reported in Shriniwasa Moorthy v. Venkata Varada Aiyangar (1) was decided after going into evidence of the various acts of the person who, after having acted as one of the co-executors, subsequently wanted to repudiate the trust on the ground that the property was ancestral and, therefore, could not be bequeathed. It was found as a fact concurrently by both the lower Courts that the property was not joint property but was acquired by the testator and, therefore, the testator had full power to dispose of it by Will as he might have done inter vivos. To the facts so found their Lordships of the Privy Council applied the law and held that the trust was valid and the co-executor who had shown his acceptance of a valid trust could not repudiate it afterwards, without obtaining discharge. With due respect, we are inclined to hold that that case is no authority for the proposition that a trustee acting under a trust which he knows or subsequently discovers to be void or invalid, is bound to surrender the possession of the trust property before he can be allowed to repudiate it by giving evidence to explain away his admissions arising from his conduct as a so-called trustee. It is, therefore, necessary to find the facts first and then apply the law of estoppel if the facts warrant such application.

(7) Under these circumstances, we set aside the dismissal of the suit and remand the case for trial on the merits. The costs of this appeal will be paid by the respondents, while those of the first Court will abide the result.

JUDGMENT

Roe, J.—This appeal arises from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Patna making the appellants personally liable for any sum that may be found due to the respondents after the sale of certain property in satisfaction of the respondents' mortgage. The appellants were not the mortgagors but had, as purchasers from the mortgagors of the mortgaged properties, given a verbal undertaking to the mortgagor to pay off the mortgage and, collaterally with that undertaking, a clause had been inserted in the deeds of sale to the effect that the mortgagor vendors had "left in deposit with the said purchasers" the sum necessary to redeem the property. The case is in no respect distinguishable from that of Jamna Prasad v. Ram Autar Pande (1). The learned Subordinate Judge has apparently attempted to distinguish it on the ground that the plaintiff has been prevented by fraud from pursuing the mortgaged property. I can see no rational basis for this suggestion. Not only has the plaintiff here not been prevented by fraud from pursuing the mortgaged property, he has actually pursued it and brought it to sale. The learned Judge's suggestion is hopelessly inconsistent with the decree made, that the defendants shall not be held personally liable until the mortgaged property has been successfully pursued. The learned Judge then relies upon the cases of Khawaja Muhammad Khan v. Husain Begam (2) and Debnarain Dutt v. Ram Sadhan Mandal (3), and at the Bar the case of Dwarka Nath Ash v. Priyanath Malki (4), has been quoted. The case of Khawaja Muhammad Khan v. Husain Begam is authority only for the proposition that, where property is secured for the payment of a grant, the sole beneficiary may enforce the security though not a party to the contract. If, indeed, the cases of Debnarain Dutt v. Ram Sadhan Mandal and Dwarka Nath Ash v. Priya Nath Malki are inconsistent with that of Jamna Das v. Ram Autar Pande we could not follow them. The learned Subordinate Judge has stated it as a fact that the plaintiff was no party to the agreement engrossed in Exhibits 2 and 3 the deeds of sale—and no other finding would have been possible, for, it was the defendant's case not only that he had no agreement with the plaintiff Nankhu Persad Singh, but also that Nankhu Persad Singh had no interest in the transaction, the mortgage being in fact given on a loan made by a party not on the record, Amar Singh.

The true position is patent on a reference to section 55 (5) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act: "The buyer may retain out of the purchase-money the amount of any incumbrances on the property existing at the date of the sale and shall pay the amount so retained to the persons entitled thereto." The clause inserted in the deeds of sale is no more than an admission of the buyer's statutory rights and the oral contract to pay, no more than an admission of the buyer's statutory liability. The buyer's liabilities to the seller in this regard have been fully stated by the Judicial Committee in the cases of Muhammad Siddiq Khan v. Muhammad Nasirullah Khan (5) and Izzat-un-nissa Begum v. Fertap Singh (6), and it is clear from the case of Jamna Das v. Ram Autar Pande that, in the absence of a direct contract with the encumbrancer, the seller has no liability towards him. I would decree this appeal with costs and direct that the suit as against the appellants be dismissed with costs.

Coutts, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

A deed of transfer which was ostensibly a sale provided for a right of redemption within a certain period on payment of the money advanced, and in the event of default of payment within that period the sale was to become absolute. In the event of redemption, the person exercising the right was liable to pay interest on the principal sum at the rate mentioned in the deed :

One test which may be applied in determining whether a transaction is a mortgage or not is, whether the remedies are mutual and reciprocal and the transferee has all the remedies a mortgagee is entitled to. [p. 549, col. 2.]

Case-law discussed

Appeal against the Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, dated the 28th June 1921.

Messrs. Niamat Ullah, Haider Husain and P. C. Gupta, for the Appellants.

Mr. R. K. Srivastava, holding the brief of Pandit G. N. Misra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bahraich dated the 28th June 1921. We have also before us the cross-objections filed by the defendants-respondents in respect of that portion of the decree with which they are aggrieved. The original plaintiff No. 1, Sardar Gulzar Singh, died during the pendency of the appeal in this Court. His minor son, Sardar Daljit Singh, is his legal representative in these proceedings through his next friend Mt. Indarpal Kunwar. The other plaintiff in the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, was Sardar Autar Singh, the younger brother of Sardar Gulzar Singh. The suit was for the recovery of possession of village Kapraul, Pargana Fakhar-pur, in the District of Bahraich.

Sardar Jagjot Singh was the grandfather of Sardar Gulzar Singh. Under the deed dated the 19th November 1913 executed by Sardar Jagjot Singh, possession of the village in suit passed into the hands of the defendants. The precise nature of the transaction evidenced by that deed is a matter in controversy between the parties. The plaintiffs claim that it was a mortgage. The defendants, on the other hand, allege that it was a sale with a right of re-purchase in the heirs of Sardar Jagjot Singh. The relief for possession asked for by the plaintiffs was primarily by a decree of cancellation of the deed of the 19th November 1913 and, in the alternative, subject to such payment of money as the Court might deem fit to make in the circumstances of the case.

The Court below has refused to cancel the deed and has held that it is not a deed of mortgage and that it is a deed of sale with a right of re-purchase. The decree under appeal is consequently founded mainly upon the terms and conditions of the deed of the 19th November 1913. The plaintiffs are awarded possession of the village in suit on payment of Rs. 33,620 with the condition attached, that if the said payment is not made within two months from the date of the decree, the plaintiffs' suit shall stand dismissed with costs. Treating the deed in question as one of mortgage, the plaintiffs deposited a sum of Rs. 31,700 in Court under section 83 of Act IV of 1882 on the 24th February 1920 in satisfaction of the defendants' claim in respect of the property in suit. The defendants refused to accept the payment with the result that the present suit was brought on the 19th May 1920 for the reliefs indicated above

GULZAR SINGH v. SHEO NATH

The Court below has found that the amount tendered was insufficient and consequently any interest due to the defendants on the principal sum did not cease to run from the date of the tender.

Whether the deed of the 19th November 1913 is interpreted as a deed of mortgage or as a deed of conditional sale, the plaintiffs' right to recover possession of the village is not affected. The deed provides for that right to subsist for a period of 20 years. It will thus be seen that the question of interpretation of that document has a bearing only on the defendants' liability to account for the rents and profits of the property in suit in the character of a mortgagee. The first matter, therefore, for determination is the nature of the transaction of the 19th November 1913. It is a short document and it would be convenient to reproduce it in full.

"I am Sardar Jagjot Singh, son of Kuar Pishaura Singh, caste Jat, resident, of village Pipri, Ilag Chahlari, Pargana Fakharpur, Tahsil Qaiserganj, District Bahraich.

"Whereas village Kapraul, demarcation No. 463, stands from before mortgaged with possession to Sheonath Avasthi, now I do hereby sell the said village in lieu of Rs. 50,000 as detailed hereunder to Sheonath Avasthi, son of Shankar Prasad Avasthi, deceased, resident of village Sukarpur, District, Pargana and Tahsil aforesaid, and deliver proprietary possession from to-day. The details are that I have allowed Rs. 30,000 as a set off to the aforesaid mahajan towards the price of the village Kapraul amounting to Rs. 50,000 on account of two registered deeds, one for Rs. 20,000 in respect of village Kapraul and the other for Rs. 10,000 in respect of village Dhannauli; and as for the realization of the balance of Rs. 20,000 remaining due from the vendee mahajan it has been settled between me and the mahajan as set forth below. At present the settlement of village Kapraul stands at Rs. 1,212-15-0 per annum. The aforesaid mahajan will, every year, continue paying me, for a period of 20 years, the sum of Rs. 1,000 per annum, i.e., Rs. 500 every sixth month; and the remaining Rs. 212-15-0 I have relinquished in favour of the aforesaid mahajan towards the deficiency in the amount of interest, i.e., 4 annas per cent interest payable by me on the sum of Rs. 14,000. The aforesaid mahajan will continue paying me only Rs. 1,000 per annum. Other sewai items and the Government revenue assessed at present in respect of the said village, or which may be assessed by the Government in future, will be paid by the aforesaid mahajan; I and my heirs having nothing to do with the same. Secondly, if my heirs wish to redeem the aforesaid village within the period of 20 years, then they will have to pay the interest from to-day, the 19th November 1913, on the entire amount as recorded in the registered deed, i.e., 6 as. on the sum of Rs. 14,000 instead of 4 as. recorded and 8 as. per cent. on the entire remaining amount and having paid the entire principal and interest within the period of 20 years, have the village redeemed whenever they please. After the expiry of 20 years, they will not have the power to redeem. The decision as to the sir land of the other Thakurs (sic) amounting to 100 bighas will rest with me.

"Wherefore this sale deed miadi has been recorded so that it may serve as an authority.

(Sd) JAGJOT SINGH,

Autograph.

Dated 19th November 1913."

Our construction of the foregoing document is, in disagreement with the opinion of the lower Court, that it is a deed of mortgage by conditional sale and not a deed of sale with a right of re-purchase. It begins with the sale of the village in suit for a sum of Rs. 50,000 out of which Rs. 30,000 are set off against the mortgage-money due from the executant on two previous deeds and the balance is made payable to the executant by means of instalments of Rs. 1,000 a year, every instalment is to arise out of the annual profits of the property calculated at Rs. 1,212 and the balance of Rs. 212-15-0 is abandoned in favour of the creditor in consideration of the low rate of interest charged under one of the two previous mortgages. In the event of redemption by the heirs of the executant within the period of 20 years, the party redeeming is made liable to pay interest from the date of the document at the rate of six annas per cent. per mensem on the sum of Rs. 14,000 instead of four annas, the rate which was agreed upon under one of the previous deeds of mortgage (Ex. A9) and further at the rate of eight annas per cent. per mensem

"on the entire remaining amount." On payment of the principal and interest thus calculated and within the period stated above the redemption of the village in suit is to follow: the right to redeem is extinguished if it is not exercised within the said period. The deed is christened as a bai muah, which means that the sale is to become absolute on the expiry of the period stated above.

The terms of the deed as given above clearly fall, in our judgment, within the definition of a mortgage by conditional sale in section 58, clause (c), of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). The transfer under consideration is ostensibly a sale with a right to redeem within a period certain on payment of the money advanced and, in the event of default of payment within that period, the sale is to become absolute. It follows that the equity of redemption in the property in suit will subsist all through in spite of the expiration of 20 years till a decree for foreclosure is made in a suit brought by the mortgagee or till the confirmation of the sale in pursuance of a decree for redemption in a suit brought by the representatives of the mortgagor. This effect will follow from the provision of sections 60 and 67 of the Transfer of Property Act. Both the parties to the contract have, therefore, co-extensive remedies: one has the remedy of a suit for foreclosure and the other of a suit for redemption. Further, in the event of redemption the persons exercising that right are saddled with the liability to pay interest on the principal sums at the rates mentioned in the document under consideration. This liability is, in our opinion, a reliable ground for the decision that the relationship of creditor and debtor was created between the transferee on the one hand and the representatives of the transferor on the other.

It is generally fruitless to refer to precedents on the question of construction of a document. Each document must be construed with the aid of the language used therein and such other surrounding circumstances as may be relevant to the question of construction. They may, however, be referred to in so far as they lay down any general principle of interpretation. In the case of Goodman v. Grierson (1), Lord Manners made the following observation:—"The fair criterion by which the Court is to decide whether this deed be a mortgage or not I apprehend to be this:—Are the remedies mutual and reciprocal? Has the defendant 'all the remedies a mortgagee is entitled to?' These questions we have already answered in the affirmative. Another case on the point is the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (2). In delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, Lord Davey said, in respect of the decision in the case of Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (3), that "their Lordships decided that case on the language of the deeds then in 'question' and with regard to the documents in question in that case his Lordship was of opinion that they contained important indications of the intention of the parties that they evidenced a transaction of mortgage by way of conditional sale. In the case of Jhanda Singh v. Wahid-ud-Din (4) Lord Atkinson, on the question of the interpretation of the documents in that case, observed:—"It was not disputed that the test in such cases is the intention of the parties to the instruments. That intention, however, must be gathered from the language of the documents themselves viewed in the light of the surrounding circumstances." The transaction was held to be one of an absolute sale and not a mortgage. The case before us resembles closely in important aspects the case of Muhammad Hamid-ud-din v. Fakir Chand (5).

The next point urged by the learned Advocate for the appellants is, that the deed of the 19th November 1913 should be cancelled altogether for the reason that the appellants have the right to rescind the contract. This right is founded on two grounds: (1) that the transferee has failed to fulfil his promise of payment of yearly instalments of Rs. 1,000, and (2) that he failed to pay the Government revenue in respect of the village in suit which he had undertaken to do under the terms of the document in question. In view of our finding that the document of the 19th November 1913 is a deed of mortgage the consequences of the default on the part of the mortgagee in payment of the annual instalments and of the Government revenue will be considered in the accounting which must be made between the parties on the footing of the relationship of the mortgagor and the mortgagee existing between them. The plaintiffs are, therefore, not entitled to rescind the contract embodied in the document in question.

Two questions of fact were argued at the hearing of the appeal. The Court of first instance has found that the defendants paid to the plaintiffs a sum of Rs. 2,200 towards the instalments due under the deed of the 19th November 1913. This finding is challenged by the appellants. On the other hand, the respondents challenge, in cross-objections, the finding of the Court below that a further sum of Rs. 4,300 is not proved to have been paid by the defendants to the plaintiff towards the same instalments. They also do not accept the finding of the lower Court that the payment of the Government revenue by the defendants is not proved. These questions may now be disposed of.

The finding as to the payment of Rs. 2,200 towards the instalments mainly rests upon three documents which purport to be receipts (Exs. A-5, A-6 and A-7). Both A-5 and A-6 are of the same date, 21st December 1918, and each is for a sum of Rs. 1,000 and purports to be a receipt for deposit made with the executant Gulzar Singh by Kanauji Lal Mahajan in the case of Exhibit A-5 and by Madho Prasad Mahajan in the case of Exhibit A-6. A-7 is a similar receipt for Rs. 200 executed by Autar Singh, the younger brother of Gulzar Singh, and is dated the 22nd June 1919. Each document contains a promise on the part of the executant that the money will be repaid when it is demanded and the deposit receipt taken back. We are unable to hold that these receipts prove the payment of any sum in satisfaction of any part of the instalments due under the deed of the 19th November 1913. The mortgagees are money-lenders. It is impossible to believe that they do not keep account-books. They have produced none. The presumption, therefore, is that if they had produced them the evidence furnished by those account-books would have gone against them. It was argued on behalf of the appellants that Exhibits A-5, A-6 and A-7 relate to separate and independent loan transactions between the parties. The language of these Exhibits is not consistent with that hypothesis either. In any case, the onus was on the defendants to prove the payments alleged to have been made by them. In our opinion they have failed to discharge that onus.

With reference to the finding of the lower Court against the respondents in respect of the further sum of Rs. 4,300 we are of opinion that the finding is correct. Except the ipsi dixit of the defendant Kanauji Lal in the witness-box, there is no evidence in support of the contention urged against the finding of the trial Judge. We, therefore, accept that finding as correct.

The next question of fact relates to the payment of the Government revenue by the defendants as stated above. Here, again, there is no evidence in support of the defendants' contention except the statement of Kanauji Lal. We accept this finding also of the Court below.

The appellants also claim that a sum of Rs. 1,460 be debited against the respondents as representing the amount of nazrana realized by them from the tenants of the property in suit. The Court below has rejected this claim and we see no sufficient ground for disagreeing with the opinion of that Court on this point. The evidence in support of it mainly consists of tenants, who are shown to be under the influence of the plaintiffs. The defendant No. 2, however, admits to have received a sum of Rs. 69 under that deed. This sum must, of course, be shown in favour of the plaintiffs in the accounts.

In view of the terms of the deed of the 19th November 1913, we do not think it to be equitable to call upon the defendants to render an account of their receipts and expenditure in relation to the property in suit. We find no justification for placing on them a greater liability than what was agreed upon between the parties to the contract of the 19th November 1913. The accounts must, therefore, be made on the footing of Rs. 1,000 annual profits. The appellants have abandoned before us their claim for the sum of Rs. 212-15-0 annually against the respondents as it was originally relinquished in their favour under the deed in question.

The accounts between the parties will, therefore, stand thus on the 24th of February 1920.

Amount due to the respondents.

2. Interest (a) on Rs. 14,000 at 4 per cent. per mensem from 19th November 1913 up to 24th February 1920 (date of application under section 83 of Act IV of 1882) ...	2,632

(d) Interest on above ...	209
(e) Nazrana ...	69
Total ...	8,939

The amount due to the appellants must be deducted from the amount due to the respondents. The balance reached is Rs. 29,709. This amount is less than the sum of Rs. 31,700 deposited by the appellants under section 83 of Act IV of 1882 on the 24th February 1920. The interest, therefore, must cease to run altogether from that date on the sum of Rs. 30,000 while the interest allowed to the appellants in the account and the several amounts due to them, as mentioned above, should be brought down from the date of the deposit to the date of the decree of this Court. The account stands thus:—

	Rs.
(a) Rs 500 payable six monthly from 25th February 1920 to 24th January 1924 ...	4,000
(b) Interest on the above, plus Rs. 6,000 at 8 annas per cent. per mensem ...	1,874
(c) Government Revenue and cesses from 25th February 1920 to 24th January 1924 at Rs. 150 annually ...	525
(d) Interest on above, plus Rs. 1,575 from 25th February 1920 to 24th January 1924 ...	445
Total ...	6,844

Deducting Rs. 6,844 out of Rs. 29,709 the net amount due to the respondents is Rs. 22,865 which will be made payable by the appellants to the respondents within six months from this date, if they have not already paid the whole or any portion of it.

We, therefore, allow the appeal and pass a decree for redemption in favour of the appellants. The decree will be prepared in terms of O. XXXIV, r. 7, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The appellants are entitled to their costs in both the Courts on a claim for redemption.

The cross-objections are dismissed. No order as to costs.

CIVIL REVISION No. 153 OF 1921.

An administrative act including an area within the limits of a Municipality or a Notified Area does not necessarily operate to destroy the pre-existing character of that area, and such administrative act is not in itself sufficient to make the area so included a sub-division of a town; but such inclusion is strong evidence of the urban character of that area. [p. 553, col. 2.]

The fact that an area is urban immovable property for purposes of pre-emption is not in itself conclusive proof that the village proprietary tenure of sites no longer exists in that area, but it does give rise to a presumption to that effect. [p. 553, col. 2.]

It is possible for an area in course of time completely to change its character, and what was originally a village may become a town. [p. 553, col. 2.]

Where a village has become definitely and unmistakably a town, even the most shadowy title of a ground landlord may disappear altogether, leaving in operation the ordinary presumption that possession of a site implies ownership of that site unless the contrary is proved. [p. 557, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The material facts of this case are these. The plaintiff, Malik Maidan, is a Jat occupying two houses in Kulachi, in the D. I. Khan District. He claims to be the owner both of the superstructure and of the sites of the houses. The first two defendants, Jamal Khan and Mat. Fatima, who is the widow of Jamal Khan's brother Khanizaman, are members of the proprietary body of the Jafarzai section of the Gandapur tribe. They asserted a title of ownership in the sites of the two houses occupied by the plaintiff. By a deed of exchange, dated the 3rd of March 1919 they transferred their alleged rights as ground landlords to the remaining defendants, namely Hafiz Umaradaraz Khan, a leading member of the Gandapur tribe, and his sons. The plaintiff sued for a declaration that the first two defendants were not owners of the houses in question, that the transfer was null and void, and that it could not affect plaintiff's interest. It was admitted by the defendants that the plaintiff was the owner of the superstructure, but it was alleged that in the case of one house the permission of Jamal Khan as ground landlord had been obtained for the purchase of the materials, and that in the case of the other, though the plaintiff's occupation was of old standing, the site had originally been taken on loan from the ancestors of Jamal Khan. It was also alleged by the defendants that certain customary dues known as "jhagri" had been realized from the plaintiff. The plaintiff has succeeded in obtaining the declaration sought for in the two Courts below. They have concurred in finding that he has never paid any "jhagri" dues to any ground landlord, and that he is the owner not only of the superstructure, but of the sites of the houses.

I do not intend to disturb the finding of fact that the plaintiff has never paid these dues. I have taken up this case on the Revisional side on the application of the defendants under section 84 (b) of the North-West Frontier Province Law and Justice Regulation on the ground that an important question of law and custom is involved. It is necessary to state clearly what this question is. It is contended before me by the defendant's Counsel that there has been a misconception in the Courts below of the real position to which the suit relates. He argues that, even if it be conceded that the plaintiff has a permanent right of residence in the houses with full powers to transfer, and that even if he pays no form of rent or of customary dues, it is still impossible that he, a non-member of the Gandapur proprietary body, but a member of the class usually known as "hamsayas", can be a ground landlord as against the members of the Gandapur proprietary body. It is contended that the proprietorship of a site, although it may be encumbered with every kind of privilege by the occupier, has, nevertheless, a certain ultimate value, such value at least which would attach to the right of reversion in an case of abandonment. While it is an admitted principle of law arising from section 110 of the Evidence Act that occupation of a site in a town raises a presumption of ownership, the learned Counsel contends that the area in which this house is situated is not a town, but a village, and that the decision of the case must hinge largely upon the determination of this question. He quotes paragraphs 223, 224, 236 and 238 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law as showing that, in the case of a village site, the presumption is that a non-member of the proprietary body has not a right of ownership. He also points to numerous precedents in this Province for the same view. It is contended, on the other hand, by plaintiff's Counsel that this aspect of the case was not specifically raised in the two Courts below, and that, in any case, Kulachi is a town in which the presumption created by section 110 of the Evidence Act must necessarily apply, and that Kulachi is entirely removed from the conditions which govern the ownership of sites in agricultural villages. It appears to me necessary, therefore, as the question is one of considerable importance, to come to a definite finding as to whether the area in which these houses are situated is a town or a village as affecting the presumption of site ownership.

It is argued for the plaintiff that we have in Kulachi all the usual features of a town. It has been declared a Notified Area under the Municipal Act and has the Headquarters of a Tahsil, a Police Station, an Anglo-vernacular Middle School, a masonry bazaar and a population of 10,000 (I see that the population according to the Census of 1921 is actually 7,811.) Harjailu Mal v. Nathu Ram, (1) is quoted in this respect. I do not, however, attach very much importance to the above features taken alone. So far as regards the argument based upon the existence of a Tahsil Headquarters, Police Station, a school and large population, there are undoubtedly areas in this Province which may boast of substantially the same features, but which, nevertheless, may still be regarded as retaining the quality of villages. As regards the inclusion of Kulachi within the limits of a Notified Area, I have pointed out in a ruling published as J. R. 113 in the case Sherali v. Kalandar Khan what I believe to be a sound view of the law, namely, that an administrative act including an area within the limits of the Municipality (or Notified Area) does not necessarily operate to destroy the pre-existing character of that area, and that such administrative action is not in itself sufficient to make the area so included a sub-division of a town; but that, at the same time, the inclusion is strong evidence of the urban character of that area. The ruling quoted was on a question of pre-emption. It would, no doubt, be going too far to say that the fact that an area is urban immoveable property for purposes of pre-emption is in itself conclusive proof that the village proprietary tenure of sites no longer exists. At the same time, it may be stated with confidence that there is a presumption to this effect. Now, cases have been before the Courts in which pre-emption in Kulachi has been based solely upon the law governing urban immoveable property. I have been shown no cases in which the inhabited area of Kulachi has been treated, for purposes of pre-emption, as village immoveable property.

A point which has not been dealt with by the two Courts below, but which has come to light during this revision, is that a portion of Kulachi is enclosed by a City wall, but certain sections or Kirris, as they are called, lie outside the wall. It is admitted that the present section, Kirri Jafarzai, is one of the sections which lie inside the wall. This point is material in considering one portion of the evidence. In the wajib-ul-arz of the Settlement of 1878 a distinction is drawn between what is described as "khas gasba kiabadi" and "baqi kirrijat bairuni". The wajib-ul-arz begins by the rather curiously worded clause "Khas gasba ki ababi mutaalaq diwani hai. Is men Kharid o-farokht samin wa makanat har ek ko ikhthiyar hai." It continues :—"baqi kirrijat bairuni ki milkiyat malikan darj ho kar mutallaq mal ikhi gai hai". Then follow certain provisions which undoubtedly recognize at least some form of interest by "malikan", (which evidently means the village proprietary body) in building sites. Among other things it lays down that in case a building is destroyed and the owner of the building does not rebuild it, the site shall be considered the property of the "malikan". It is contended by the defendants Counsel that this clause discloses a complete recognition of some interest in the sites by the proprietary body. Plaintiff's Counsel, on the other hand, argues that all the provisions relating to the interest of the proprietary body in these sites are confined to the Kirris or sections which lie outside the walls of the town. An examination of the document leaves no doubt in my mind that this latter view is the correct one. The expression "mutaalaq diwani" is certainly curious, and it is argued for the defendants that it cannot possibly be held to imply any thing affecting site ownership, for even in a purely village area disputes as to houses and sites would be a matter for Civil and not Revenue Courts. I have not the least doubt, however, that there is, in this wajib-ul-arz, a very obvious attempt to lay down a clear distinction between portions of the area. The interpretation of the words "mutaalaq diwani" has already come before the Courts on a previous occasion. In the appeal Ghulam Sarwar v. Tola Ram decided by the Divisional Court, Derajat, on the 10th of October 1907, the Divisional Judge, Mr. Bolton, remarked :—"Kulachi is a qasha and not a village, and under Rattigan's Customary Law (paragraph) 236 the sites in qasha are presumed to belong to the owners of houses existing thereon. Respondents are admitted to have been the owners of the buildings on this site. Moreover, in the papers the Kulachi site is entered as 'abadi deh mutaalaq diwani' which is interpreted as meaning that 'the occupiers own their sites.' It may be admitted that the words quoted, as they stand, do not, in themselves and taken alone, necessarily bear the interpretation which has been put upon them. I consider, however that the context completely demonstrates the fact that, so far as the wajib-ul-arz is concerned, the conditions which were laid down respecting the ownership of sites in Kirris outside the town wall, were intended not to apply to the town inside the wall, and I think that it is difficult to put any other construction upon the document. There are other revenue documents which have been referred to in this case. One is the "misal bandobast of 1878. In this the ownership of the whole site is described as "abadi deh muttalaq diwani," and the cultivating column shows "maghuza bashindagan deh." There then follows an explanation to the following effect :—"No record has been prepared by houses, regarding possession, etc., between occupants of houses, nor has any record of house rights been drawn up in the Settlement papers. Therefore, when any dispute of this kind is instituted, the Court will settle it by its own decision." This document does not materially assist the case. It is argued for the defendants that in it, at any rate, all sections of Kulachi are lumped together, and no distinction is drawn between those inside and those outside the City wall. So far as this question is concerned, more importance obviously attaches to the wajib-ul-arz as the more detailed document. It is also argued for the defendants that the "misal bandobast" does contemplate some difference between owners and mere occupiers, but I am unable to see that it bears this construction. Another document on the record is the "Khasra abadi" of the present Settlement which was put in by the defendants in the Appellate Court only. Plaintiff's Counsel has objected that the document was improperly admitted by the Appellate Court, as under O. XLI, r.27, Civil Procedure Code, a record of the reasons for admission was necessary, and that no reasons have been recorded. This contention is undoubtedly correct, as the sole order on the record in this respect is "to be attached to the file." It may be as well, however, in these proceedings for me to consider briefly whether this document has any real bearing upon the case. It is one drawn up at the Settlement with a view to recording the rights in plots within the town or village sites which are actually cultivated. The defendant's Counsel lays stress on the entry of persons as cultivating tenants-at-will, the column of proprietorship merely showing "abadi deh." In one case the son of the present plaintiff is shown as a tenant-at-will of this character. It is contended that such tenants must necessarily be tenants of some persons and that, therefore, the expression "ahadi deh" when used in the column of ownership, implies a recognition of the existence of the original proprietary body of the tribe, or of branches of that proprietary body as ground landlords of the area covered by a village. As this record was not produced in the trial Court and has been improperly admitted to the record of the Appellate Court, the plaintiffs has had no opportunity of producing evidence in respect of particular entries. I do not consider, however, that it is necessary for me to direct any further inquiry upon this point. Its value as showing that persons cultivating land are necessarily tenants of the proprietary body as general ground landlords is not very great. There must necessarily be some origin, however remote, for the ownership of sites. It seems to me quite possible to recognize that, in the case of cultivated plots, the title to the site may still vest in the original proprietary body without necessarily affecting the question of the title to the sites of house property at all. Owing to the document not having been produced in the first instance, there is no possibility of identifying each of the cultivated plots or of discovering how and when the recorded tenant came into occupation.

Other evidence, however, besides the documents referred to above, is relied upon by the defendants in support of their position. It is contended that, if it can be shown that at some period the title to the proprietary body in building sites has been recognized, this right, in however attenuated or encumbered state it may now exist, cannot possibly be extinguished altogether. The learned Counsel for the defendants has called attention to the case of the village of Serai Saleh in the Hazara District. In a published ruling of this Court, J. R. 96 of 1917, it was found that the occupiers of houses in Serai Saleh had rent-free rights of residence with unrestricted rights of transfer. It was held, nevertheless, in a recent appeal before this Court decided on the 31st of July 1923 by Mr. Fraser as Judicial Commissioner (Civil Appeal 105 of 1921, Muha. Farid Khan v. Ram Kishan (2) that, in spite of all these encumbrances, the proprietary body of Serai Saleh had, nevertheless, an ultimate right of reversion to sites in the case of a widow holding a limited interest who had made an invalid alienation. Certain cases are then referred to as showing that in Kulachi also some interest by the proprietary body has been recognized. The first of these is Bukhtiyar Khan v. Ishar and Mangu, etc., decided by the Extra Assistant Commissioner D. I. Khan on the 22nd of February 1857. The case related to the section Kirri Jafarzai with which we are now concerned. It was settled in that case by arbitration that the site belonged to the plaintiff and that the Hindu occupiers were owners of the superstructure, paying 1-as customary due on every marriage or male birth. This appears to be the same due as is now described as "jhagri", though the latter word is not actually used in the case. Another case is one decided by the Deputy Commissioner, D. I. Khan on the 30th of September 1864, in which it was held that the site belonged to a branch of the Gandapur tribe, and that the occupier had rights of residence only. The dispute referred to a house in Kirri Barakhel and not in Kirri Jafarzai, but the Barakhel Kirri is also inside the town wall and is said to be in the centre of the town. Another case is that of Mst. Gulbibi, wife of Guldul Khan, (a Gandapur proprietor) v. Chundan Khan and others decided by an Extra Assistant Commissioner on the 25th of May 1879, regarding four vacant sites. It has not been shown in what section the sites were situated. This case is, in my opinion, of some importance. The claimant alleged that she had been realizing "jhagri" dues. The judgment refers to the similarity of the tenure of sites in Kulachi with that of residential plots in D. I. Khan and Loiah. In the case of D. I. Khan at least it could not be argued that there is any question of proprietorship by an original agricultural body. The order recites that "jhagri" is very little realized, and either may be given or not given. It also contains the following words upon which great stress has been laid for the plaintiffs:—"No rights of ownership in a house accrue to the person who receives 'jhagri' as against the person who gives it." It has been pointed out by defendants' Counsel that the trial Court in the present case remarked in its judgment that, if Jamal Khan or Hafiz Umardaraz Khan had been able to realize "jhagri" from one or two persons, this was due to their influence as Rais and did not make the due one payable by the hamsayas as a matter of right. It is said, therefore, that realisation of "jhagri" in some cases at least has been established. It is to meet this argument that the words which I have quoted above in the 1879 case are emphasized as showing that the payment of "jhagri," even if proved, has no connection with the ownership either of site or of super-structure. In my opinion these previously decided cases show that, up to 1879 at least, the Gandapur proprietary body in the whole of Kulachi town had, from time to time, claimed an interest in sites occupied by buildings; that their claim was a shadowy one, but that from time to time they had succeeded in realizing certain dues from persons occupying houses, but that these realisations bore no direct relation to the occupation of particular sites, and constituted mainly a general recognition of the power and influence of the original proprietors. It may be noted that there appears no instance later than 1879 of any general interest in sites by the Gandapur proprietors being judicially recognised. On the contrary, in the case decided by the Divisional Court in 1917 and referred to above, which related to the Barakhel Kirri in the centre of the enclosed town, it was very definitely contended that the Gandapur proprietors had the right of reversion in the site of a serai when the building ceased to be occupied by a serai, and it was equally definitely held that, as the site in question was in a town and not in a village, there was no such right of reversion. It is again urged for the defendants that one of the plaintiff's own witnesses, Allahyar, admitted in evidence that Jamal Khan was the owner of all unoccupied sites. This, no doubt, is important, but as I shall show below, I do not consider that the actual ownership of unoccupied sites necessarily proves that the ownership of occupied sites still vests in the proprietary body. Evidence has also been produced from the Registration records to show that the present transferee Jamal Khan has made various sales of sites in the Jafarzai section. One of these was in 1912 and three in 1918. Here, again, it may be remarked that the ownership of a particular site does not necessarily prove a general proprietary interest in the whole area. We do not know how the title of particular sites was acquired and, even if it be conceded that it was derived from an original title held by the tribal proprietary body, this is not conclusive proof that a right of proprietorship still subsists throughout the whole area. It may further be said that it is difficult to distinguish between genuine transfers of actual property and comparatively recent speculative attempts to reassert a title which in 1917 had been in one case judicially held to be non-existent. There is little doubt that the transfer in 1919, with which we are now concerned, was in the nature of a pure speculation made with a view to re-asserting a title of this kind.

The question which I have to determine is whether on the above evidence there is reason to hold that the case of Kulachi is parallel to that of Serai Saleh and whether, however attenuated the title of the proprietary body may be in sites of houses of which the super-structure is owned by the occupiers, there is at least some title existing. The question may be expressed, as I have already expressed it, in another way, as one between the presumption arising from section 110 of the Evidence Act in the case of a town and the presumption arising from established custom in the case of a village. It appears to me necessary in the first instance to recognize the fact that it is possible for an area in course of time completely to change its character, and that what was originally a village may become a town. This has been fully recognized in the case-law on pre-emption. In respect of site ownership under paragraph 236 of Rattigan's Digest there are quoted under Exception (1) the following rulings of the Punjab Chief Court; Kula Khan v. Saru (2), Ramji Das v. Hamir Chand (3), Mewa Singh v. Hakam Ali (4) as showing that in villages that have grown into towns or qashas the proprietor of the house is held to be the proprietor of the site on which it is built. Although an examination of those rulings certainly shows that they hardly bear the construction which has been placed upon them, and that they relate rather to the question not of actual ownership, but of freedom to transfer rights of residence, I think, nevertheless, that the principle that development into a town may even operate to destroy original rights of site ownership is one which must actually be recognized, and there seems to me evidence to show that this is what has occurred in the town of Kulachi, so far at least as regards the portion which is enclosed in the city wall. The relations between original ground landlords and occupiers of houses have passed through various stages in villages in this Province. In some cases original ground landlords have been able to preserve a comparatively unencumbered title. In others they have preserved a right to customary dues without power of eviction. In others they can control transfers, though no rent is realized. In, e.g., Serai Saleh, practically nothing is left except an ultimate right of reversion in a rare contingency. There seems to me nothing inconsistent in recognizing that, where a village has become definitely and unmistakeably a town, even the most shadowy title of a ground landlord may have disappeared altogether, leaving in operation the ordinary presumption that possession of a site implies ownership of that site unless the contrary is proved. A clear distinction must be made between the origin of the proprietary tenure of sites and its subsisting character. It seems to me difficult to accept the extreme contention that if, once such proprietorship can be proved to have existed at all, nothing can prevent its surviving in some form or other. It further appears to me that the fact that unoccupied sites vest at the moment in members of the original proprietary body while it may be evidence of the origin of ownership of all sites, has no necessary effect upon the existing ownership of particular sites. There is every thing to show that the character of Kulachi, so far as regards the portion enclosed within the City wall, is wholly dissimilar from the character of a village such as Serai Saleh. It has at this moment all the characteristics which can be predicated of a town. It is a town for the purposes of pre-emption, it is a town for the purposes of administration, and it has judicially been held to be a town for the purposes of the very question to which this suit relates, namely the rights of reversion in building sites. It would, no doubt, be perfectly open to a member of the proprietary body to show that he was the owner of any particular site, and even that he derived his title to that site from the original proprietary tenure existing at the foundation of the village. In a case, however, such as the present, where a member of the village proprietary body has not succeeded in proving a specific title to a specific plot, the presumption which must guide the Courts is that arising from section 110 of the Evidence Act and not that arising from customary law, inasmuch as we are now dealing with a town and not with a village. It is perfectly possible that the original rights of the Gandapur proprietary body may still exist in respect of sites situated in the "Kirris bairunjat," or settlements outside the town wall. So far as regards those sections which are situated within the town wall, I hold that they constitute a town and not a village, and that no presumption of title, attenuated or otherwise, to the ownership of a particular site can be admitted as overriding the general presumption which arises under section 110 of the Evidence Act from the rent-free possession of a house in a town, and that the latter presumption covers the site as well as the superstructure.

The present case turns wholly upon the presumption of site ownership. There is nothing proved, except that presumption, which would bar the plaintiff from obtaining a declaratory decree affecting his ownership of the site as well as the superstructure. In view of my finding that the presumption in this area is that the owner of the house is also owner of the site, I consider that the decree was rightly passed. I, therefore, dismiss this application for revision with costs.

—Previous decision in Land Acquisition cases—Price of land with buildings—Relevancy.

In assessing the market-value of a piece of land the price paid in other transactions relating to land in the neighbourhood is admissible in evidence, as previous decisions in Land Acquisition cases are relevant in a subsequent case where the market-value of lands in the same neighbourhood is in issue.

Secretary of State for India v. India General Steam Navigation and Railway Co., 4 Ind. Cas. 448; 36 C. 967; 10 C. L. J. 281; 11 Bom. L. R. 1197; 14 C. W. N. 184; 19 M. L. J. 645; 86 I. A. 200 (P. C.), followed.

In determining the value of a piece of land, the evidence as to the sale of land with a building thereon is not inadmissible.

Appeal against the decree of the President, Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, dated the 28th February 1922.

Babus Provas Chandra Mitter, Charu Chandra Biswas and Manindra Kunvar Bose, for the Appellants.

Babus Dwarkanath Chakrabrurthy and Surendranath Guha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under the Calcutta Improvement Appeals Act, 1911, against the decision of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal awarding compensation for land that has been acquired in connection with the operation of the Calcutta Improvement Trust. The President of the Tribunal held that the amount of compensation to be awarded in respect of the market-value of the land should be calculated at the rate of Rs. 6,500 per cottah. The two assessors held that the market-value should be taken as Rs. 7,000 per cottah, and the award was made in accordance with the opinion of the majority.

The claimant has appealed and the point of law pressed before us is that certain evidence was wrongly excluded. The learned President whose decision on points of law at the trial is binding on the assessors refused to allow the claimant to adduce evidence about the amount of compensation awarded to him in respect of the set back and the compensation awarded in respect of the acquisition of Premises Nos. 161, 162 and 163, Machuabazar Street, and No. 1, Upper Chitpur Road. The reason he gave was that in those cases the awards were made as the result of decisions given by the Civil Court in Judicial proceedings, and he held that the judgments were inadmissible under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act relating to judgments and orders. We are unable to agree with him on this point. In assessing the market-value of a piece of land the price paid in other transactions relating to land in the neighbourhood must be of some value. What its value is it is for the Court of fact to determine; but we hold that it cannot be rejected as inadmissible on the ground given in the judgment of the learned President. For the view we take we have the authority of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Secretary of State for India v. India General Steam Navigation and Railway Co. (1). In that case certain judgments of the High Court in other proceedings were relied on by the claimant. It was argued on behalf of the appellant to the Judicial Committee that these judgments were not evidence of the value of the land in dispute. Their Lordships, after stating in their judgment that the High Court in a very careful judgment had revised the earlier awards, dismissed the appeal, holding that no question of principle was involved in it. There cannot be a clearer authority that previous decisions in Land Acquisition cases are relevant in a subsequent case where the market-value of lands in the same neighbourhood is in issue.

Another piece of evidence which we hold has been wrongly rejected is Ex. 13; that relates to the sale of a piece of land in the neighbourhood in which there was a pucca building. We are unable to understand why this should not be relevant. It may be difficult to determine the value of the land apart from the building, but it is not necessarily so, and the claimant is entitled to put this evidence before the Court and ask the Tribunal, on a consideration of the evidence, to decide what portion of the purchase price represented the value of the land then sold. In rejecting this evidence the learned President referred to a decision of this Court. The case was not cited by him but we understand it to be the judgment of a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Manindra Chunder Nundi v. The Secretary of State for India (2). But an examination of the judgment in that case shows that no such principle was laid down as that in valuing waste land the evidence as to the sale of land with a building thereon was inadmissible. What was held in that case was that certain questions set out in the report were rightly disallowed. None of these questions relate to a sale of land with buildings thereon. So far as that ruling asserts any principle, it follows the case of Harish Chandra Neogu v. The Secretary of State for India (3), and there also we find nothing to support the decision of the learned President.

The learned Government pleader was unable to support the decision of the learned President as being correct in law. His contention was that the learned President's language was inaccurate and that, when he spoke of inadmissible evidence he meant evidence that was of no value. But we must interpret the judgment according to the plain meaning of the words used. It was further contended that we should not interfere because the claimant had been in no way prejudiced by the exclusion of this evidence. Sitting as a Court of Appeal, with our powers so limited that we cannot consider the evidence on the facts, we are unable to say that the claimant has not been prejudiced. It is pointed out that the majority of the Tribunal held that the land would be normally worth at least Rs. 9,000 per cottah and that this in itself shows that their award was unaffected by the exclusion of this evidence. But we are unable to say that if this evidence had been considered by them they might not have put the normal value at a higher figure than Rs. 9,000 and the actual value higher than Rs. 7,000 per cottah.

We must, therefore, allow this appeal, we set aside the award of the Tribunal and direct that the reference be re-heard after admitting the evidence which we hold to be wrongly excluded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 88, 87, applicability of—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 165—Suit against Ruling Chief as co-sharer—Property in suit outside State territory—Suit, whether maintainable without consent of Government.

The provisions of ss. 83 to 87 of the Code of Civil Procedure apply to suits under the Agra Tenancy Act. [p. 560, col. 1.]

The fact that a Ruling Chief may own immovable property within the limits of British India and outside his own State territories, does not entitle the Courts to treat him, with respect to the latter property, as an ordinary private citizen. [p. 561, col. 1.]

Second Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Allahabad, dated 1st November 1920.

Mr. Narayan Prasad Asthana, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kamuda Prasad, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—These three second appeals have arisen out of suits for profits under section 165 of the Tenancy Act. The property in respect of which the profits were claimed is situated in the Allahabad District and it is admitted that His Highness the Maharaja of Benares is one of the co-sharers in each of the villages in respect of which these suits for profits were brought.

His Highness the Maharaja was made a defendant in each of the three suits and as against him both the Courts below have dismissed all the suits on the ground that no decrees could be passed against His Highness on the ground that the consent of Government had not been obtained to the institution of the suits against him. In other words, the Courts below applied the provisions of section 86 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

We have now before us three second appeals in which the plaintiff challenges the correctness of the decision of the Courts below. The case for the appellant (the appellant is the same in all three cases) is that, the Courts below were wrong in holding that, so far as these suits were concerned, the Maharaja was not liable to be sued without the previous consent of Government being obtained.

There can be no doubt whatever that His Highness is a Ruling Chief. We have before us the Treaty or Instrument of Transfer which was executed when the dignity of a Ruling Chief was conferred upon His Highness by the British Government.

The first clause of this Instrument declares that His Highness shall be the Ruling Chief of Benares from the first day of April 1911.

There can be no doubt that, so far as suits under section 165 of the Agra Tenancy Act are concerned, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure apply, as laid down in Chapter 13 of the Agra Tenancy Act (U. P. Act II of 1901), and a reference to the Chapter will show that the provisions of Chapter 28 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, Act XIV of 1882, were applicable in their full force to all suits and other proceedings under the Agra Tenancy Act. It follows, therefore, that the provisions of sections 83 to 87 of the present Code of Civil Procedure apply to suits under the Tenancy Act.

It, therefore, cannot be doubted that it was competent to His Highness the Maharaja in these suits to plead that he was not liable to be sued without the previous consent of the Governor-General in Council or of any other authority to whom the power of granting such consent has been delegated under section 86.

The matter would be perfectly clear except for one provision which is to be found in the Instrument of Transfer by which His Highness was constituted a Ruling Chief. Clause 26 of this Instrument provides in the first instance, that the right to repeal or amend in any way and at any time Bengal Regulation VII of 1828 or any other Regulation or Law in virtue of which the Raja of Benares enjoys any special privileges within the Pergana of Kaswar Raja which heretofore was included in the family domains but is excluded from the State of Benares constituted by this Instrument, is hereby expressly reserved to the Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh. So far as this part of clause 26 is concerned, it clearly reserves a right to the Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces to withdraw from the Maharaja any special privileges which he had hitherto enjoyed in the Pergana of Kaswar Raja. Attached to this clause 26 there is a declaration which runs as follows:—

“Within the other estates now in possession of His Highness which are outside the State of Benares, he shall continue to have the status and responsibilities of a landholder under the ordinary law and within the Pergana of Kaswar Raja he shall assume that status and those responsibilities.”

We may observe here that by U. P. Act No. VI of 1915 Regulation 7 of 1828 was repealed and the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act and the United Provinces Land Revenue Act were made applicable in their entirety to all the property of the Maharaja situated in Pergana Kaswar Raja.

Mr. Narain Prasad who appears for the appellant here argues that, on the language of this concluding portion of clause 26, the Maharaja in these suits is not entitled to raise the plea that he has the status of a Ruling Chief and is, therefore, only liable to be sued in case the sanction of the Government has been obtained.

It is contended that this language properly interpreted means that, with respect to all lands situated outside the State of Benares, the Maharaja has waived his right to plead his status as a Ruling Chief and is subject to all the responsibilities and liabilities of a land-holder under the ordinary law.

It is difficult to ascertain what is the correct meaning of this provision and it was in view of this difficulty of interpretation that the learned Judge of this Court before whom this case came in the first instance referred it for consideration by a Bench.

We are not, however, disposed to accept the plea of the appellant that the language of the concluding portion of clause 26 indicates that His Highness the Maharaja intended to waive any right to plead his status as a Ruling Chief in the case of suits which were brought against him in respect of property held by him in British India.

We think that, with respect to his liability to be sued in British India, it would be difficult to invest His Highness with a dual personality (1) that of a Ruling Chief, and (2) that of an ordinary citizen.

Clearly, section 86 of the Code of Civil Procedure contemplates the case of a Ruling Chief being sued with respect to interests which he has outside his own territory and within the limits of British India, and it seems to us that the fact that a Ruling Chief may own immoveable property within the limits of British India and outside his own State territories does not entitle the Courts to treat him with respect to the latter property as an ordinary private citizen. That meaning certainly could not be attached to the language of section 86 of the Act. If we look at sub-section (3) of section 86 we find that no Ruling Chief is liable to arrest under the Code, and, further, except with the consent of the Governor-General in Council, certified as aforesaid, no decree can be executed against the property of a Ruling Chief.

If we were to accept this argument and treat His Highness as having two personalities in the eye of the law, we should be obliged to hold that in his capacity as a private citizen he would be liable to arrest under the terms of sub-section (3) of section 86. We can hardly think that the language of section 86 contemplates a contingency of this kind and we are, therefore, of opinion that His Highness being undoubtedly a Ruling Chief was entitled in these suits to claim the benefit of section 86. We do not think we ought to hold that clause

26 of the Instrument of Transfer operates in the manner contended for by the learned Counsel for the appellant in these cases.

Admittedly, the suits with which we are now concerned do not fall within the purview of sub-section (5) of section 86. In the class of suits indicated in this sub-section no consent of course is necessary, but these suits were not suits brought by a tenant of immoveable property against His Highness the Maharaja as land-holder. They were, as we have stated, suits, brought by one co-sharer as against His Highness in his capacity as a co-sharer.

We hold, therefore, that His Highness was entitled to take the benefit of section 86 and to plead in bar of the suits the want of consent of the Governor-General in Council. In our opinion the appeals were rightly decided. We dismiss these appeals accordingly with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

FAIZ MUHAMMAD v. LATIF

Second Appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rohtak, dated the 27th June 1923

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this second appeal has arisen are simple enough, and the only question for determination is, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to the use of a certain staircase by which a certain shop owned by them in the town of Rohtak is bounded on the North. The shop originally belonged to the defendant and was admittedly transferred to the plaintiffs by a registered deed of sale, dated the 4th of July 1922. The plaintiff's case is that when the shop was transferred the right of user in the staircase was also transferred, and that the defendant has no right to restrain them from making use of the same. The defendant, on the other hand, denies having parted with any rights in the staircase, and contends that the plaintiffs have no right to maintain this suit. The trial Court found in favour of the plaintiff but the learned Senior Sub-Judge came to a contrary conclusion and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff has now come up in second appeal to this Court, and it has been urged on his behalf that the learned Senior Sub-Judge has taken an entirely erroneous view of the matter, and that the sale-deed executed by the defendant in their favour has been wholly misconstrued. After hearing the learned Counsel on both sides, I am of opinion that this contention is well founded and must prevail. The staircase has, all along, been used as a means of access to the upper storey of the shop and unless the right of its user was expressly reserved by the sale-deed, it must be presumed that there was an implied grant of the same when the shop to which that right was appurtenant was transferred in his favour. It is well settled that where a person grants a portion of his land, reserving a portion to himself, he grants with it all the easements and quasi easements, which had been formerly used, over the part reserved, by the part granted, and which were necessary thereto.

In Attar Singh v. Jowahir Lal (1), it has been laid down that on the grant, by an owner of a tenement, of part of that tenement, as it is then used and enjoyed, the grantee of the part will acquire all those easements which are necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the tenement granted. The doctrine of implied grant of easements upon severance of tenements is in accord with justice, equity, and good conscience, and there can be no doubt that it would be most inequitable to hold that, though the shop and the upper storey were transferred to the plaintiff, the means of access to the upper storey was withheld and not transferred.

Apart from the question of an implied grant, however, I am of opinion that the right of user in the staircase was expressly transferred to the plaintiff by the deed of sale executed by the defendant in his favour. The deed recites that the shop had been transferred to the plaintiff with all its appurtenant rights. The important words are:—dukān maskura bala komai jumla haq haquq dakhli wa kharji wa haq amad-o-raft wa asaish wa mori wa parnala wa jumla haqhaquq balai manzil wa malba har kisan manzil zerin wa manzil balai wa farokht kardiya. These words, in my opinion, clearly indicate that the right of user in the staircase, which was necessary for a reasonable enjoyment of the building transferred had also been transferred. In my opinion, the learned Judge of the Court below has not properly construed the deed of sale, and the appeal must, therefore, succeed.

I accept the appeal and decree the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Cawnpore, dated the 2nd May 1922.

Dr. K. N. Katju and Mr. H. K. Kaul, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. W. Dillon, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration in this case is, whether the defendant was entitled to construct his wall in such a manner as to block a window in the verandah of the plaintiff which opened towards the land of the defendant. The window had been in existence for more than twenty years. The Court of first instance refused to direct the demolition of the wall by which the window was blocked, holding that the construction had not had the effect of materially interfering with the access of light and air to the verandah of the plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court, however, thought that as the effect of the construction of the wall was to block the window entirely, the plaintiff was entitled to have the obstruction removed in order that the access of light and air through the window might remain unaffected. In doing so, it disregarded the conditions of the locality, inasmuch as the verandah of the plaintiff had sufficient access of light and air from the other sides and the blocking up of the window had made no difference whatsoever to the light and air which was obtainable to the verandah of the plaintiff otherwise.

Section 28 of the Indian Easements Act lays down that the extent of an easement, other than an easement of necessity, and the mode of its enjoyment must be fixed with reference to the purpose for which the right was acquired. The verandah in question has got a street in front, from which any amount of light and air can be obtained. It has got three or four doors behind and a window on the north, which would help the passage of air from one end of the verandah to another. The window in dispute was on the south and its obstruction cannot possibly involve a material interference with the access of light and air, so as to entitle the plaintiff to claim that it should be restored to its original condition.

The lower Appellate Court refers to the decision in Khunni Lal v. Kundan Bibi (1), but it is possible that the circumstances of that case may have justified an order for the removal of the obstruction. Section 35 of the Indian Easements Act lays down that, subject to the provisions of the Specific Relief Act of 1877, an injunction may be granted to restrain the disturbance of an easement, if an easement is actually disturbed, when compensation for such disturbance might be recovered; and section 33 of the same Act declares that the owner or occupier of a dominant heritage can institute a suit for compensation for the disturbance of the easement where the disturbance has actually caused a substantial damage to the plaintiff. Where the easement disturbed is a right to the free passage of light, passing to the openings in a house, no damage is considered substantial within the meaning of sections 33 and 35, unless it materially diminishes the value of the dominant heritage and interferes materially with the physical comfort of the plaintiff or prevents him from carrying on his accustomed business in the dominant heritage as beneficially as he might have done previous to the disturbance.

In Peter Charles Ernest Paul v. William Robinson (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council, referring to the case of Colls v. The Home and Colonial Stores Limited (3), pointed out that the legal test in such an action was whether the obstruction complained of was a nuisance or whether the owner of the dominant tenement was getting the uninterrupted access through his ancient windows of a quantity of light, the measure of which was what was required for the ordinary purposes of inhabitation or business of the tenement according to the ordinary notions of mankind.

In Gajadhar v. Kishori Lal (4), it was similarly held that the owner of a dominant tenement was entitled to an injunction except in such cases where he would be entitled to recover damages; or, in other words, where the disturbance in equity caused substantial damages to the plaintiff of the kind referred to in the explanation appended to section 33 of the Indian Easement Act.

The plaintiff has, therefore, no absolute right to protect his window against obstruction. He has a right to the access of sufficient light and air through his window, but if there is already a sufficient access of light and air to his house through the other openings therein and the obstruction caused to the window does not materially or in any measure interfere with the sufficiency of the access of such light and air, the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief.

The lower Appellate Court has omitted to find whether the obstruction of the window had the effect of materially interfering with the access of light and air to the verandah of the plaintiff or not, but the learned Munsif who inspected the locality points out that the verandah of the plaintiff is quite open in front, that is on the western side, where there is an open space forming the ground of the Pokhrayan market, that there is another window on the northern side and that there are some doors on the eastern side opening into the sitting-room of the plaintiff which bring in an abundant supply of light and air to the verandah. In fact, according to the map attached to the plaint, there is a street in front of the verandah and the plaintiff does not really suffer any injury by the blocking up of the window. Each case of an alleged disturbance of an easement of light and air must be decided on its own facts. On the facts disclosed in the present case the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief, as he has suffered no real injury. The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiff for the demolition of the wall, blocking up the window in question, is dismissed with costs here and hitherto.

Messrs. C. V. Ananthu Krishna Aiyar and C. V. Mahadeva Iyer, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—It has been held in Chandu v. Kambi(1), Unni v. Kunchi Amma(2), and followed in Chappan v. Paru (3), that the members of a tarwad need not sue to set aside an alienation by the Karnavan but can sue to recover possession on the strength of title. In the latter case, one ground for the decision was that the alienation though not binding on the tarwad might be binding on the Karnavan. In this view Article 91 of the Indian Limitation Act would not be applicable to the present case, but it is argued that, inasmuch as the Karnavan purported to execute the document not only as Karnavathi, but also as guardian of the minor plaintiffs, consequently the members are parties to the document, and as such are bound to set it aside before recovering the property. But can it be said that minors are parties in that sense? It has been held in the case of Hindu Mitakshara families that sons when minors are represented in a document through their guardian, they need not set it aside. (Kovvuri Thirupathi Raju v. Kovvuri Venkataraju (4) and Ganesa Iyer v. Amirthasami Odayar (5)). The principle that underlies the construction put forward by Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar is that parties are bound by their own acts until they are set aside or cancelled but minors cannot act and, therefore, the mere addition of their names in the document cannot make the document their act which must be set aside. In this connection, we may refer to Chingacham Vittil Sankaran Nair v. Chingacham Vittil Gopala Memon (6). Article 41 does not apply here as the alienation does not purport to be one by a guardian alone, but also by a Karnavathi, who, under certain circumstances, has authority to alienate a part altogether from her guardianship of minors. As neither Article 91 nor Article 44 is applicable. Article 144 must be applied and the suit is within time. The suit will, therefore, be remanded to the lower Court for disposal, after allowing plaintiffs time to amend the plaint and pay additional Court-fee if necessary. Costs will abide the result. The Court-fee in appeal will be refunded.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the appellants to enforce payment by sale of the mortgaged properties of the sum of money owing on a mortgage-bond, dated the 11th November 1912, executed by the defendant in favour of plaintiff No. 1 in the farzi name of plaintiff No. 2. By this mortgage-bond, the principal sum secured was Rs. 7,500 with the rate of interest at Re. 1-4-0 per cent. per month with yearly rests. The learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the mortgage-bond was not read and explained to the defendant who is a parda nashin lady of rank and position and that the transaction was induced by undue influence within the meaning of section 16 of the Contract Act. He also held that the mortgage-deed was not attested in the manner required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. He found, however, that full consideration was paid by the plaintiffs to the defendant ; and, in that view, while refusing to give the plaintiffs a mortgage-decree, he has given them a decree for the principal sum advanced with interest at as. 12 per cent. per month. The main appeal in this Court is on behalf of the plaintiffs who contend that the learned Subordinate Judge should have given them a mortgage-decree in accordance with the mortgage-bond of the 11th November 1912. The defendant has presented a cross-appeal and the point raised in the cross-appeal is that the learned Subordinate Judge erred in holding that consideration passed in respect of the transaction. The cross-appeal has, however, not been pressed before us and we are only concerned with the main appeal filed on behalf of the plaintiffs.

I will first consider the question whether the mortgage-bond was attested in the manner required by section 59 of Transfer of Property Act. That section lays down that, where the principal money secured is Rs. 100 or upwards, a mortgage can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses. The learned Subordinate Judge has taken the view that as the defendant is a parda-nashin lady of rich Muhammadan family, it is improbable that the witnesses examined on behalf of the plaintiffs could have actually seen her executing the document. The plaintiffs have examined three witnesses on the point ; Chhedi Ram, their Gomasta, Ram Lal, who has their gomasta but who is now an independent trader, and Sudama Ram. Their evidence is to the effect that they knew the defendant as they had had occasion to sell cloth to her. It ought to be pointed out that the plaintiffs are cloth dealers and had occasion to sell cloth to the defendant, and that part of the claim in this suit arises out of transactions in cloth between the parties. The evidence of Chhedi Ram is as follows :—“ I know defendant for the last 15 or 20 years. She is not parda nashin woman to me. Since my childhood I went to sell cloth to her from Chainsukh's shop on her requisition and she always took cloth from me and spoke to me and appeared before me.” It seems to me that this evidence is inherently probable. It is not disputed before us that Chainsukh Mall, the father of plaintiff No. 1, had a cloth business and that he did send cloth to the defendant for sale and that the defendant did purchase cloth from Chainsukh's shop from time to time. His evidence is perfectly clear that he was present when defendant put her seal on the document. He says that Baratu, the son of the defendant, signed her name in the mortgage-bond at her request and that the defendant herself put her seal to the mortgage-deed and he adds that these were done in his presence and in the presence of the other attesting witnesses. Ram Lal says that he was a Munib (gomasta) of the plaintiff's firm and that the defendant used to appear before him from behind a parda and that she could be seen behind the parda and that he knew her by sight. His evidence is that Baratu signed the name of the defendant at her request and that the defendant put her thumb-mark in his presence with her own hand. The evidence of Sudama Ram is to the same effect.

It seems to me that the learned Subordinate Judge has rejected the evidence of these witnesses on grounds which appear to me to be speculative. Upon the finding that the consideration-money was actually paid to the defendant, there is no reason to assume that the plaintiffs who are men of business should not take care to have the mortgage-bond attested in accordance with law, and it seems to me that there is no reason to reject the testimony of these witnesses. The learned Subordinate Judge thinks that there are some contradictions in the evidence given by these witnesses. The mortgage-bond was executed so far back as 1912 and the case was heard in 1920. Such contradictions as there are in the evidence of these witnesses are only to be expected; but they do not, in my opinion, throw any doubt upon the question which is at issue between the parties, namely, whether the mortgage-bond was attested in accordance with law. I hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed on this point.

The next question is, whether the mortgage-bond was procured by undue influence exerted by the plaintiffs on the defendant. In order to determine this question, it is necessary to deal with certain antecedent events. It appears that on the 7th November 1906 the defendant borrowed Rs. 2,760 from Chainsukh Mal, the father of plaintiff No. 1, and executed a serpehsgi lease in his favour. Rs. 2,500 out of the total sum advanced carried interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per month; the balance did not carry any interest. The term was from 1315 to 1323. The evidence shows that upon the death of Chainsukh Mal the plaintiffs found it difficult to manage the properties of which they were in possession under the ticca patta of the 7th November 1906. The defendant wanted a further loan, first, in order to satisfy a decree which had been obtained against her by one Gendan Singh; and, secondly, for other purposes. The plaintiffs were willing to advance the further sum required provided the defendant agreed to take into her possession the properties covered by the ticca patta of 1903 and paid interest on the sum that was already due to the plaintiffs and the further sum to be advanced at the rate of Rs. 1-8-0 to 2 per cent. per month. After certain negotiations it was settled that the properties which were the subject-matter of the ticca patta should be surrendered to the defendant and that she should pay interest to the defendants at the rate of $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per month. The consideration-money in respect of the mortgage-bond is made up as follows:—

Rs. 2,478-15-0 already due to the plaintiffs in respect of the advance of 1906.

Rs. 2,374 paid to Gendan Singh in satisfaction of a decree obtained by him against the defendant.

Rs. 2,647-1-0 paid to the defendant at the time of the registration of the mortgage-bond.

The defendant raised a wholly false defence in so far as she denied that she ever received any money either from Chainsukh Mal or from the plaintiffs; but the learned Subordinate Judge has found that the full consideration-money was in fact paid to the defendant.

The question of undue influence arises in this way; it is suggested that the defendant was in need of money. There was a decree against her for the sum of Rs. 2,374 and she wanted money for other purposes, and it is contended that, taking advantage of her position, the plaintiffs induced her to execute a bond in their favour agreeing to pay interest at the rate of Re. 1-4 0 per cent. per month. The main objection is as to the rate of interest and compound interest provided by the mortgage-bond; but it must be remembered that Chainsukh Mal charged a very low rate of interest because he was to have possession of certain valuable properties. No doubt, after the death of Chainsukh Mal, plaintiff No. 1 who is a minor and plaintiff No. 2 who is a parda-nashin woman found it impossible to manage the properties and it suited them to deliver up possession of those properties to the defendant. The matter was one of bargain between the parties and the question of undue influence must, in my opinion, be decided on the terms of section 16 of the Indian Contract Act. The first paragraph of the section lays down the principle in general terms and runs as follows:—"A contract is said to be induced by 'undue influence' where the relations subsisting between the parties are such that one of the parties is in a position to dominate the will of the other and uses that position to obtain an unfair advantage over the other." The second and the third paragraphs of the section define the presumptions by which the Court is enabled to apply the principle. The second paragraph runs as follows:—

In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing principle, a person is deemed to be in a position to dominate the will of another,

- "(a) where he holds a real or apparent authority over the other, or where he stands in a fiduciary relation to the other; or
- "(b) where he makes a contract with a person whose mental capacity is temporarily or permanently affected by reason of age, illness, or mental or bodily distress."

The third paragraph runs as follows:—"Where a person who is in a position to dominate the will of another, enters into a contract with him, and the transaction appears, on the face of it, or on the evidence adduced, to be unconscionable, the burden of proving that such contract was not induced by undue influence shall lie upon the person in a position to dominate the will of the other." It has been held by the Judicial Committee that urgent need of money on the part of the borrower does not of itself place the lender in a position to dominate his will within the meaning of section 16 of the Contract Act. See Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (1). It has also been held that the mere fact that the rate of interest is exorbitant, (which it is not in this case) is no ground for relief unless it be shown that the lender was in a position to dominate the will of the borrower. It is unnecessary to discuss the various cases which have been decided under section 16 of the Indian Contract Act. It is sufficient to point out that the borrower will not be entitled to any relief unless he proves, first, that the lender was in a position to dominate his will, and, secondly, that the bargain was unconscionable within the meaning of clause (3) of section 16 and, as has been pointed out, that it is only the concurrence of these two elements that can justify the Court in granting relief to the borrower.

Now, were the plaintiffs in a position to dominate the will of the defendant? As I have pointed out, urgent need of money on the part of the borrower does not of itself place the lender in a position to dominate his will within the meaning of section 16 of the Contract Act. On what circumstances are we to hold in this case that the plaintiffs were in a position to dominate the will of the defendant? Obviously, there is no fiduciary relationship between them. It is not a case where they held a real or apparent authority over the defendant. It is not suggested that the mental capacity of the defendant was temporarily or permanently affected by reason of age, illness or mental or bodily distress. The only ground suggested is that the defendant was already indebted to the plaintiffs and that she wanted to borrow a further sum of money, and it is contended that, upon these facts, it ought to be held that the plaintiffs were in a position to dominate the will of the defendants. Illustration (c) upon which reliance is placed is as follows:—"A, being in debt to B, the money-lender of his village, contracts a fresh loan on terms which appear to be unconscionable. It lies on B to prove that the contract was not induced by undue influence". In order to make out a case under the illustration, it must be proved that the loan was contracted on terms which appear to be unconscionable. Now, in what way can it be said that the terms of the mortgage-bond are unconscionable? It is suggested that in respect of three matters the terms appear to be unconscionable; first, in that the defendant allowed the plaintiffs to surrender the lease of 1906; secondly, in that the interest was raised from 9 per cent. simple to 15 per cent. compound; and, thirdly, in that the plaintiffs got free use of water from the defendant's estate to their estate. So far as the first point is concerned, it seems to me that the transaction is this; the defendant was in pressing need of money and she wanted a further loan from the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs, of whom one is a minor and the other a parda nashin lady, represented to the defendant that they were perfectly willing to make the advance if the loan of 1906 was paid off as it was impossible for them, after the death of Chainsukh Mal, to properly manage the properties which were in their possession as a security for the loan of 1906. It was for the defendant to accept these terms or to reject them. The question was between a minor and a parda nashin woman on the one hand and a parda nashin woman on the other. The ticca patta must have been a source of some advantage to Chainsukh Mal, apart from the interest which he received from the advance made by him to the defendant, but Chainsukh was dead leaving a widow and a minor son. It was impossible for them to manage the properties with any advantage to them. It is true that the term had yet to run for another three years and they could not compel the defendant to take a surrender of the lease; but the defendant wanted a further loan and it was, in my opinion, open to the plaintiffs to say that they were ready and willing to make a further advance on terms that the original loan was paid off. It appears to me that there is nothing unconscionable in the bargain made by the plaintiffs. They were at a disadvantage under the arrangement of 1906. They were bound to suffer that disadvantage unless defendant relieved them from it. The defendant herself was in need of a further sum of money. It was open to them, in these circumstances, to come to an arrangement on terms which were perfectly fair on both sides. The next point is that the interest was raised from 9 per cent. simple to 15 per cent. compound. It is quite true that, under the original ticca patta, the interest was at 9 per cent. per annum but then, as I have pointed out, possession of the properties was a source of considerable profit to Chainsukh Mal. It is quite true that after the death of Chainsukh Mal this advantage was no longer open to the plaintiffs; but if the defendant wanted a further loan, it was, in my opinion, open to the plaintiffs to say that since the advantage which was open to Chainsukh Mal was not open to them, they would not make any advance to the defendant except on condition that she agreed to pay interest at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum with yearly rests. The interest charged upon the bond is not by itself unconscionable. It is the usual rate of interest charged on this class of transactions. It is urged that it is unconscionable because the loan which was satisfied by the transaction which is the subject-matter of the suit carried interest at the rate of 9 per cent per annum. In my opinion, when all the facts are properly understood, there would seem to be nothing unconscionable about the interest. The only other point is that the plaintiffs got free use of water from the estate of the defendant to their estate. This conclusion has been reached by the learned Subordinate Judge on the evidence of Fulchand, who says:—"I further wanted irrigation water for Jaipur;" but the mortgage-bond does not provide for any concession to the plaintiffs in this respect and if there was an independent agreement between the parties on this point, that has nothing whatever to do with the mortgage-bond. In my opinion, it has not been proved that the mortgage-bond was procured by undue influence exerted by the plaintiffs over the defendant.

ORDER.

Fawcett, J.C.—As Gehimal died before the appeal was presented, the case does not fall under O. XXII, Civil Procedure Code, which applies only to the death of a party to a suit or an appeal. A dead man was made a respondent, and the principle applies that the Court has no jurisdiction to allow the names of his legal representatives to be substituted: Veerappa Chetty v. Tindal Ponnien (1). His name must be struck out: O. I, r. 10 and section 107 (2), Civil Procedure Code.

O. XLI, r. 20, Civil Procedure Code cannot properly be applied to the present case.

But we think that, in the circumstances, the appellant should be allowed to amend the memo. of appeal so as to make respondent Tharumal a party not only in his own right, but also as a legal representative of Gehimal. He has already been joined and an addition is merely made to his description so no prejudice to Tharumal arises under section 22, Limitation Act: cf. Peary Mohan v. Norendra Nath (2), Kasturchand Bahirandas v. Sagarmal Shriram (3) and Muhammad Yusuf v. Himalaya Bank, Limited (4) and the objection taken in Mallikarjuna v. Pullayya (5) does not, therefore, operate. The amendment is a just and proper one under O. VI, r. 17, Civil Procedure Code and should be made accordingly.

The absence from the record of Gehimal's two other brothers is not necessarily a fatal defect: cf. Benga Srinivasachari v. Gnana-prakasa Mudaliar (6) and Prasanna Venkatachella v. Collector of Trichinopoly (7). But we leave the question of the effect of their absence on the appeal an open one and this order is also without prejudice to any application that may be made to join them, subject to section 22, Limitation Act, if it applies. We note, however, that the fact that Gehimal's death was reported by bailiffs over a year ago would make it difficult to excuse the delay under section 5 of the Act.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioner.

Lala Sardha Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the recovery of five months' rent in respect of a one-half share of a certain shop in Bazar Khari Baoli, in the City of Delhi alleged to have been occupied by the defendants as tenants of the plaintiff. The shop originally belonged to two sisters, Must. Lado and Must. Gaindo, in equal shares, but it appears that the half share owned by Must. Gaindo was sold in execution of a decree against her and purchased by the present plaintiff. It is alleged that the defendants executed a lease in favour of the plaintiff in respect of this half share after the same had been purchased by him in the execution proceedings, but the lease has not been placed on the record and its execution is denied by the defendants. On the 7th June 1922, the defendants gave a notice to the plaintiff and to Must. Lado, the other co-sharer in the property, that they had vacated the demised premises and that the owners should take possession of the same. It was further stated in that notice that they would not be liable to pay rent any longer if the owners did not take possession. It appears that after the receipt of the notice Must. Lado took possession of the whole of the property and gave it on rent to a third person to the exclusion of the plaintiff.

On the 24th October 1922 the plaintiff brought this suit for the recovery of five months rent ending the 21st October 1922, alleging that the defendants having failed to deliver possession were still tenants in the eye of the law and that they were liable to pay rent to the plaintiff till such time as the latter was not able to recover possession of the demised premises. The learned Judge of the Court below was of opinion that the suit for rent was not competent inasmuch as a valid notice of relinquishment had been given by the defendants but that the latter were liable for damages. The suit having been decreed in full the defendants have now come up in revision to this Court and the first question to be determined is, whether the notice was or was not a sufficient notice of relinquishment. On this question the finding of the trial Judge, as already observed, is in favour of the appellants and this finding has not been challenged in arguments by the learned Vakil for the respondent. There can be no doubt that the notice was an absolute and an unqualified notice in terms and was, therefore, a good notice of relinquishment in law.

The next question to be considered is, whether possession of the demised premises had been surrendered to the plaintiff. So far as the law upon this question is concerned, there can be no doubt that the tenant giving up the demised lands to his landlord is bound to give him vacant possession. It has been held in the well-known case of Henderson v. Squire (1) that where there is no express stipulation to that effect made at the time of the letting of the land it will be implied as one of the terms of such letting. In the present case the contention of the petitioners is that, so far as they are concerned, they left the premises at the unqualified disposal of the landlords and that if one of them allowed the other to take possession of the whole, they, the defendants, cannot in law be held responsible for his neglect. It is pointed out that the shop which is the subject-matter of dispute in the present case was really a single shop having two doors and that as partition had not been effected among the co-sharers it was impossible for the defendants to deliver separate possession. The learned Judge of the Court below has appreciated the difficulty under which the defendants were labouring in this respect, but has held that the difficulty was not insurmountable inasmuch as joint possession could have been delivered and the co-sharers could have been required to attend at a specified hour on an appointed day to take over such possession from the defendants. I do not see how this course could have been adopted. If, instead of two co-sharers, there were a hundred or more co-sharers living in different parts of the world it would be impossible for a tenant to relinquish possession of the demised premises until all the co-sharers had received notice to the effect that they were required to attend at a specified hour to take over joint possession. This course, in my opinion, would be most unreasonable and would result in subjecting the tenant to an altogether unnecessary hardship. The law only requires that vacant possession should be surrendered to the landlord. If there are more than one landlords and a partition has not been effected between them possession on the part of one landlord would be tantamount to possession of all. It is not denied that Must. Lado is in possession of the whole of the property, nor is it denied that the plaintiff is a co-sharer. In fact, a suit for partition of the property has already been lodged by the plaintiff against Must. Lado and is now pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Delhi. There can be no doubt that if Must. Lado has taken possession and is realizing the rent in respect of the whole of the property, the character of her possession is that of a co-sharer and she would be liable to the extent of one-half to the plaintiff. In my opinion vacant possession of the demised premises having been delivered to one of the joint landlords and the notice being a sufficient notice of relinquishment the tenancy came to an end and the plaintiff had no cause of action to maintain a suit either for rent or for damages against the defendants.

I accept the revision and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Income-Tax Act (VII of 1918), s. 12 (1)—Exemption, Scope of—Losses incurred by assessee as member of company or firm, whether must be taken into account in fixing total income—Interpretation of Statutes—Fiscal Statute.

All that is exempted by section 12 (1) of the Income Tax Act of 1918 is income which has already paid the tax as the income of a Company or firm which happens in cases where the income of the Company or firm exceeds Rs. 2,000. But if the income of a Company or firm does not exceed Rs. 2,000, a share in that income is not exempted from tax either by section 12 (1) of the Act or by the Income-Tax authorities, who add that share to the other income of the assessee as a part of his total taxable income, and not merely for the purpose of ascertaining the rate which he is liable to pay on the remainder.

Any losses incurred by an assessee as a member of a company or firm must, therefore, be taken into consideration in fixing the amount of his total income.

Technicalities in a fiscal statute should be strained, if at all, in favour of the subject and not against him.

for the Applicant.

Mr. Kelre, Assistant Commissioner of Income Tax—for the Non-applicant.

Order.—In our order of the 18th June 1923, in Civil Reference No. 28 of 1923, we stated an opinion that under the Income Tax Act, 1918, any losses incurred by an assessee as a member of a company or firm are not to be taken into consideration in fixing the amount of his total income. The assessee has applied for a review of that order, and, having examined it again, we are of opinion that it was wrong. It was based on the mistaken idea that under section 12 (1) of the Act, no income derived from membership of a company or firm forms part of the taxable income of an assessee, though it is added to his taxable income for the purpose of determining the rate at which the whole is to be taxed. All that is exempted by that section is income which has already paid the tax as the income of a company or firm, which happens in cases where the income of the company or firm exceeds Rs. 2,000. But if the income of a company or firm does not exceed Rs. 2,000 a share in that income is not exempted from taxation either by section 12 (1) of the Act or by the Income Tax authorities who add that share to the other income of the assessee as a part of his total taxable income, and not merely for the purpose of ascertaining the rate which he is liable to pay on the remainder.

The basis of our previous opinion was thus stated: "When the Company of which the assessee is a member is liable to the tax a separate tax is leviable on the income of the Company, and when the income of the Company is below the taxable limit, no such tax is leviable. In neither case are the profits or losses of the Company to be taken into consideration in fixing the taxable income of the assessee." This, as has been said, was a mistaken view of the facts, and the profits made by an assessee in one of several Companies or firms of which he is a member are taken as forming a part of his total taxable income of that Company or firm does not reach the taxable minimum. It seems to us hardly necessary to say that if the profits are added to the total taxable income, the losses, if there are any, must be deducted from it. That is nearly axiomatic.

The position taken up by the Income-Tax authorities in this matter is not even technically tenable and there is no support to be found for it in any part of Act VII of 1918; anyhow, technicalities in a fiscal statute must be strained in favour of the subject, if they are to be strained at all, and not against him. But even if the contention were technically possible, it is patently contrary to the most ordinary ideas of justice and equity. It is equivalent to saying that a man's income was what he made out of one profitable branch of his business, although he had incurred heavy losses in another branch of the same business, or to saying that his income was Rs. 5,000 if he made that amount on one contract, though he had lost Rs. 10,000 on another of exactly the same kind at the same time. Our previous statement of opinion on this reference is withdrawn and this is substituted.

Hindu Law—Breach of promise of marriage—Damages whether can be recovered—Costs—Exaggerated claim.

Under the Mitakshara Law, a Hindu father is justified in breaking off a contract of marriage for his daughter if a more suitable suitor is found; but in that event he is bound to pay damages to the other party to the contract who will be entitled to recover money actually thrown away as also damages to his credit and reputation by reason of the refusal.

Where a Court finds that the plaintiff's claim is to a large extent exaggerated and false and decrees only a portion of it, it ought not to award to the plaintiff the amount of full Court fees paid by him on the plaint. The amount awarded should be proportionate to the success of the plaintiff.

Appeal against the order of the City Civil Court, Madras dated the 24th August 1922.

Mr. P. G. Krishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Viswanatha Sastri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the City Civil Court in an action for breach of promise of marriage. The action is not by either of the parties proposed for the marriage, but mainly by the brother of the proposed bridegroom against the father of the proposed bride. The contract was proved under which the first defendant agreed to give his daughter in marriage to the 2nd plaintiff who is 1st plaintiff's brother. It is well established that on breach of such a contract an action for damages lies. The Mitakshara itself provides that, if a more suitable suitor is found, a man will be justified in breaking off a marriage contract: but I think that it is quite clear that, when that course is pursued, it is also provided that some form of damages can be provided against the father who so changes his mind. This is stated to be the law in Umed Kika v. Nagindas Narotamdas (1). There is a passage to the contrary in a decision of Beaman, J., in Kimji Vasonji v. Narsi Dhanji (2) which, I think, is inaccurate and is based, as pointed out in Mayne's Hindu Law at p. 118, on a misconception of Mitakshara. Umed Kika v. Nagindas Narotamdas (1) is authority for the proposition that, in such cases, the plaintiff is entitled to recover money actually thrown away and also damages to his credit and reputation by reason of the refusal. I should have myself felt a little doubtful as regards the second head of damages though this kind of damages is allowed in the well-known English form of action for breach of promise of marriage and allowed to the plaintiff concerned who is actually a party to the marriage contract but not the parents; but I see no reason for saying that the decision (1) to which that learned Chief Justice Westropp was a party is wrong. Under the circumstances, the learned Judge awarded in this case Rs. 50 as damages under that head and also Rs. 200 for damages actually sustained. The claim had been preferred for a very much larger amount. The learned Judge discounted the claim and disallowed a large part of the damages claimed on the ground that the plaintiffs had intentionally aggravated the damages by spending money, though they knew that the marriage would not take place; and he reduced, I think, the amount to what he considered to be the actual minimum amount expended by the plaintiffs without knowing of the other marriage. I must say that I am not certain that he has not, from that point of view, given a little too much, but to some extent it had to be a guess work, and I think he has given, if anything, a little too little on the other head. I think that it will not be right to interfere with the amount of damages he has awarded in this case. But I do not think he was right in awarding the full costs that he awarded. The claim was for Rs. 2,000 and a stamp had been paid on the plaint of Rs. 125 based on that valuation and the learned Judge found that the case for the plaintiffs was grossly exaggerated and intentionally exaggerated. I do not think that it is right, when a Judge adopts that view of the case, to award costs on a scale which includes the amount paid as tax to Government passed on the larger amount which had been falsely put forward. I do not think that the amount allowed as Vakil's fees was at all excessive in view of the case but I think that the amount recoverable for stamp must be reduced to its proper amount, namely, Rs. 18-12-0. This appeal has substantially failed and has succeeded on this minor point. I think the result must be that there will be no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, the dated, 30th June 1921.

Messrs. B. N. Srivastava and Bishambar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Prag Narain and Radha Krishan, holding the brief of Pandit G. N. Mitra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is the defendants' appeal in a suit brought by the plaintiffs-respondents for partition of joint Hindu family property. The decree passed by the lower Court is accepted by both the parties except in respect of certain matters to be stated hereafter. The appeal challenges the propriety of the decree for partition in respect of four items of property. They are Nos. 5, 9, 16 and 19 of schedule No. 1 attached to the decree prepared in the Court below. The second point urged in appeal is the extent of the shares to which the plaintiffs-respondents are entitled on partition of the family property. The respondents have filed cross-objections in respect of the findings of the Court below on issue No. 3 and they further urge that in the allotments following the partition, compact mahals and pattis be allotted to the parties to the suit and any disproportion in value should be made good by compensation either in money or in land.

The suit relates to the property of Misri Lal, who died on the 29th May 1919. Misri Lal was married three times. His first wife was Mt. Lachmin, who was defendant No. 4 in the present suit. She died during the pendency of the appeal in this Court. His second wife was Mt. Sheoraja. She had died before the institution of the suit. Her son, Gaya Prasad, is the chief defendant in the present litigation. Gaya Prasad's son, Bal Krishna, is defendant No. 2. Misri Lal's third wife is Mt. Sheoraja Kunwar, who is defendant No. 3, Girja Shankar, Sheo Kumar Lal and Iqbal Shankar are his three sons born of Mt. Sheoraja Kunwar and are the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3, respectively. They are all minors. Their next friend is Pandit Prag Narain. We will first deal with the second question involved in the appeal.

The argument under that head is that the lower Court should not have granted a separate share to the mother of the plaintiffs out of the joint estate but that her share should come out of the aggregate of the shares allotted to her three sons, the plaintiffs.

We were much impressed by the a priori reasoning underlying the argument which was borrowed from the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Hemangini Dasi v. Kedarnath Kundu (1). Indeed, that case was cited by the learned Advocate for the appellants as an authority in support of his argument. The respondents, however, point out that the case just now mentioned was a decision on the Dayabhag Law obtaining in Bengal. That it was a case under the Dayabhaga is true but the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council, to be quoted shortly after, appear to us to be of general application, and if there were no precedent in favour of the respondents' contention that the rule is different under the Mitakshara Law we would have unhesitatingly accepted the argument of the appellants' learned Advocate. In the case mentioned above their Lordships said: "The right of a widow to maintenance is founded on relationship and differs from debts. On the death of the husband, his heirs take the whole estate and if a mother on partition among her sons takes a share, it is taken in lieu of maintenance. Where there are groups of sons the maintenance of their mothers must, so long as the estate remains joint, be a charge upon the whole estate; but when a partition is made, the law appears to be that their maintenance is distributed in accordance to relationship, the sons of each mother being bound to maintain her. The step-sons are not under the same obligation." The position taken up by the respondents consistently with the opinion of the Court below is, however, supported by a decision of the High Court at Allahabad in the case of Har Narain v. Bishambhar Nath (2). This case has a direct bearing on the point under consideration. The learned Judges in the Allahabad case distinguished the decision of the Privy Council mentioned above on the ground that that was a case under the Dayabhaga while the rule under the Mitakshara school of law is that a step-mother is entitled upon partition of a joint family property to get a share equal to that of a son. We are content to follow the opinion expressed in the Allahabad case. The argument, therefore, fails.

It is next contended that Mt. Lachmin, defendant No. 4, having died during the pendency of the appeal the share which the Court below had allotted to her, should devolve exclusively in equal proportions upon the sons of Misri Lal, and that Mt. Sheoraja Kunwar, the plaintiffs' mother, should get no increment to her share out of the portion allotted to Mt. Lachmin. We are of opinion that the contention is sound and must be accepted. In the presence of the son of Misri Lal his widows are not his heirs. His entire estate devolves upon his heirs alone who are his sons, the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 1. Mt. Sheoraja Kunwar is not entitled to any share in the character of an heir on the partition of the joint estates. Whatever she gets she gets in lieu of maintenance and it is settled law in this part of the country that she holds it for her life-time only. On her death the share, which she gets in lieu of maintenance, will devolve on the entire body of heirs of Misri Lal. Similarly, the share which was allotted to Mt. Lachmin, was merely a provision for her maintenance, the need for which came to an end on her death. That share must go only to the heirs of Misri Lal, that is, the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 1. Mt. Sheoraja Kunwar can have no claim to any portion of that share.

Now we come to the question of the four properties, to which objection has been taken by the appellants in respect of their liability to be partitioned.

Item No. 5. The case of the appellants with regard to this property is, that Misri Lal made a gift of it to the defendant No. 1 on the occasion of the 12th day ceremony of his birth. The defendant No. 1 was born on the 4th March 1897. The direct evidence in support of this gift is oral and consists of the statements of the defendants' witness Debi Nandan. The learned Subordinate Judge has refused to place any reliance on the statement of Debi Nandan in respect of the matter of the gift. In support of his opinion the learned Judge has given cogent reasons and anything said in argument to the contrary has not induced us to disagree with the Judge of the trial Court. Apart from the oral evidence, reliance is placed upon certain documents supporting the case of the alleged gift.

It appears that in March 1900, proceedings were taken in the Court of Revenue for mutation of names in respect of this property with the result that Misri Lal's name was expunged and Gaya Prasad's name was entered in the revenue papers. On the 7th March 1900, Misri Lal made a statement in relation to those proceedings. He stated that he had made a gift of the property in question to Gaya Prasad on the 20th February 1900 and that Gaya Prasad had been put in possession of the same under Misri Lal's guardianship (Ex. A19). On the 21st March 1900, the village Patwari gave his statement in support of Misri Lal's allegations (Ex. A20). On the 23rd March 1900, the Court of Revenue ordered mutation of names to be made as desired by Misri Lal (Ex. A21). The khewat (Ex. A22) shows that the entries were made in accordance with the order mentioned above. Exhibits A23 to A31 are receipts of the payment of the Government revenue in the name of Gaya Prasad. These documents clearly do not support the alleged gift on the 12th day of Gaya Prasad's birth. On the contrary, Exhibit A19 mentions the date of the gift to be the 20th February 1900. It is said that Misri Lal deliberately gave a wrong date of the gift with the object of evading the payment of penalty to which he would have been liable if he had stated the true date of it. We are not impressed with this explanation. If Misri Lal had really made the gift, as the defendant's case is that he had, we find no sufficient reason as to why he should have delayed the mutation of names for so long a period as three years. We are of opinion that the proceeding relating to the mutation of names was merely a paper transaction and that Misri Lal, had never intended to nor, as a matter of fact, did he, make a real transfer of property in question in favour of Gaya Prasad.

It appears that in the year 1904 there was a litigation between Mt. Lachmin and her husband, Misri Lal. This ended in a compromise under which Mt. Lachmin secured a maintenance allowance of Rs. 21 per mensem. In connection with this litigation, Debi Nandan acting as an agent of Misri Lal, filed certain lists of properties held by Misri Lal and Gaya Prasad. One of such lists is Exhibit A 14 in which the property under consideration is shown to be in the ownership and possession of Gaya Prasad. This was in consonance with the khewat in which Gaya Prasad's name was entered in pursuance of the mutation proceedings of the year 1900 and proves nothing more than the apparent character of the title.

Item No. 9. Misri Lal sold this property to one Chabnath some time in 1906-1907. One Sadhan Lal brought a suit for pre-emption in respect of the same, obtained a decree and subsequently made a gift of it to Gaya Prasad. On these facts the defendant No. 1 claims it as his exclusive property. The account-books produced by the plaintiffs show that Misri Lal had financed Sadhan Lal's claim for pre-emption. Indeed, in the arguments before us this was not disputed. The learned Subordinate Judge is of opinion, that the gift to Gaya Prasad was made in consideration of the pecuniary advances made by Misri Lal out of joint funds and, consequently, this property must be treated as joint family property. Against this opinion, the only argument urged on behalf of the appellants is that Misri Lal committed a fraud on the Court and the vendee Chabnath by helping the plaintiff in the pre-emption suit with money and that the fraud succeeded inasmuch as Sadhan Lal obtained a decree. The plaintiffs representing Misri Lal cannot be permitted to recover this property from the hands of the defendant No. 1, who stands in the shoes of Sadhan Lal. We are unable to uphold this argument. In our opinion there is no question of fraud at all. Sadhan Lal had admittedly a right to pre-empt the sale made by Misri Lal and he, after recovering it from the hands of the vendee, made a gift of it to Gaya Prasad. The fact that Sadhan Lal received monetary help from Misri Lal in prosecuting his claim for pre-emption creates no estoppel against the present plaintiffs, who do not claim through Misri Lal. They claim a share in the joint family property in their own right. In the circumstances stated above, the gift was in consideration of the money derived from the joint family fund and, consequently, this property must bear the character of the source of its acquisition.

Item No. 16. These plots of land were conveyed under a sale-deed, dated the 13th June 1907, by one Kirpa Ram in favour of Gaya Prasad for a sum of Rs. 800 (Ex. 87). On the same date Kirpa Ram conveyed by another sale-deed some other property situate in the same village in which the plots in question lie. This sale-deed is in the name of Misri Lal alone (Ex. 96). The defendant No. 1 claims these plots as his exclusive property. The learned Subordinate Judge has rejected this claim. The entries in the account-books clearly establish that the money utilized for the purpose of the plots in question came from the joint family funds. We, therefore, agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that item No. 16 is joint family property.

Item No. 19. Mauza Rampur Balaqidas, the subject-matter of the item under consideration, was acquired under the sale-deed, dated the 8th June 1903, for a sum of Rs. 5,500, and the deed stands in the names of both Misri Lal and Gaya Prasad (Ex. 109). The defendant No. 1 claims a 3/4th share as his exclusive property in this village. In the proceeding relating to mutation of names following the sale mentioned above, Misri Lal stated that the vendors had sold the entire 16-annas to him and to his son, Gaya Prasad, and that the names of the vendors should be entered in this way, that the four annas should stand in the Khewat 'in my name' and 12-annas in that of Gaya Prasad, minor (Ex. A 40). In the litigation between Mt. Lachmin and Misri Lal, to which reference has already been made, one of the lists filed by Debi Nandan, agent of Misri Lal, was Ex. A14 already noted. In this list, Gaya Prasad's share in the property in question was stated to be 8-annas. The learned Subordinate Judge has, in a carefully written judgment, come to the conclusion that this item is also joint family property. For the reasons stated by him, we are of opinion that his finding is correct.

The general conclusion, that the four disputed items of property belong to the joint family and are not exclusive property of the defendant No. 1, is supported almost conclusively by entries in the account-books (Exs. XI, X 4 and X 5). Particular reference in this connection may be made to the entries in exhibit XI specially to pages 80 et seq. of the printed record. The income from properties, which admittedly belong to the joint family, and the income from the properties claimed by the defendant No. 1 as exclusively belonging to him are blended together and from these blended funds flow expenditure common to the whole family. We have also before us a memorandum partly written by Misri Lal himself and partly by his agent, Debi Nandan (Ex. 112). The entries in this memorandum point to the same conclusion at which we have arrived. Certain private jamabandis kept by Misri Lal and produced by the plaintiffs are exhibited on behalf of the appellants. In these jamabandis, we find entries in respect of the properties in question in the name of Gaya Prasad. As observed by the learned Subordinate Judge, these jamabandis must have been maintained for the purpose of production in rent suits, showing the realizations and arrears of rent and would, consequently, be consistent with the entries in the khewat. There are also here and there in the account-books entries showing sums of money under the heading of income in the name of Gaya Prasad alone. These entries do not, in our opinion, outweigh the effect of the rest of the evidence on which, we, in agreement with the trial Judge, have founded our conclusions.

On the basis of certain oral evidence, it was contended on behalf of the appellants that Gaya Prasad's mother was possessed of separate funds of her own and it was with the help of these funds that acquisitions were made by Misri Lal in the name of Gaya Prasad, from time to time for the benefit of Gaya Prasad. The evidence relied upon is wholly flimsy and has been discredited by the learned Subordinate Judge. We are unable to disagree with him in this behalf. Certain entries in the account-books were shown to us by the learned Advocate for the appellants, as indicating that the women of the family had certain money of their own. Small sums of money are shown as entered in the name of a woman of the house without mentioning her name or giving any description of her. Such entries are of no or little evidential value. That the family has been joint throughout before the present suit was instituted is common ground. It is further admitted on both sides that the family was possessed of large ancestral property. The onus, therefore, was on the appellants to show that the property in question was not purchased with the ancestral funds. We are of opinion, in agreement with the trial Judge, that they have failed to discharge that onus and that, on the contrary, the evidence fairly reasonably leads to the conclusion that the last three properties were purchased with the assistance of the joint funds and were consequently joint properties liable to be divided amongst the members of the family: Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaia Lal (3).

We now come to the consideration of the cross-objections filed by the respondents. The first objection is that the plaintiffs are entitled to a provision being made in the decree of the present suit for the marriages of the plaintiffs and Janeo of the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 in anticipation. We are unable to accede to this contention. There seems to be a conflict of opinion on this point in the High Court of Madras. The case of Srinivasa Iyengar v. Thiruvengadathaiyengar (4) is in favour of the respondents' contention while the case of Narayana Annavi v. Ramalinga Annavi (5) is against it. Again, the case of Karuturi Gopalan v. Karuturi Venkataraghavulu (6) is in support of it. The foundation for the opinion expressed in the last mentioned case is the practice prevailing in that Presidency. We are not aware of any such practice in this part of the country. Be that as it may, the recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ramalinga Annavi v. Narayana Annavi (7) seems to us to conclusively settle the question against the respondents. We, therefore, overrule this objection.

The second objection is, that this Court should insert a direction in its decree to the effect, that in carrying out the actual partition, entire mahals should be allotted to the parties so far as possible. We are unable to accede this prayer. The zemindari property in dispute consists of Government revenue paying mahals or portions of a mahal. It is the exclusive function of the Courts of Revenue to determine the mode of partition. This objection is also rejected.

The result is, that we allow the appeal in so far as we have indicated in this judgment on the question relating to the extent of shares, and direct that the decree of the Court below will be modified in that respect. In other respects, the appeal is dismissed. We also dismiss the cross-objections. The parties will receive and pay costs in both the Courts in proportion to their success and failure.

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the Additional District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 2nd February 1923.

Lala Amar Nath Chopra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 22nd of March 1920, plaintiff-respondent sued defendants appellants for one marla of land out of khasra No. 2493 upon which, he said they had encroached. The suit was referred to arbitration and was eventually dismissed on the ground that the property sued for had been misdescribed. The plaintiff was actually in possession of khasra No. 2493, and what he really intended to claim was a part of khasra No. 2494. He was brought the present suit for a plot of land $26\frac{1}{2}' \times 13\frac{1}{2}'$ out of khasra No. 2494 on the ground that the defendants have encroached upon it. The first Court held that the present suit was barred by the rule of res judicata. The lower Appellate Court held that it was not so barred and has remanded the case for trial on the merits. From this order the defendants have appealed to this Court.

The lower Appellate Court relied upon the case reported as Janakdular Saran Misser v. Ambica Prasad Singh, (1) where a Division Bench of the Patna High Court held that, "the dismissal of a suit on the ground of misdescription of property in suit is not a bar to a subsequent suit on the same cause of action." That ruling is directly in point in the present case. What was held in the previous case was that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree to any portion of khasra No. 2493. The property now claimed is a part of khasra No. 2494 and I fail to see how it can be said that this claim was heard and finally adjudicated upon in the previous suit.

Next, it is contended by Counsel for the appellants that if the property sued for is not the same as in the previous suit, the suit is barred by O. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. In my opinion there is no force in this argument. The plaintiff did not in the previous case split up his claim and sue for only a part of the relief to which he was entitled. On the contrary, he sued for something to which he was not entitled. Counsel for the respondent has cited Gula's Shah v. Haveli Shah (2), where it was held when the dismissal of a suit takes place for defect in the form of the suit, O. II, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not preclude a plaintiff, whose suit has been thus dismissed from bringing a second suit'. The previous suit failed because the property sued for was misdescribed and it was found that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for any of the property as described in the plaint. The suit really failed because there was a defect in the form of the suit. In the previous suit the plaintiff stated his cause of action to be an encroachment on khasra No. 2493. It was found that he had no such cause of action. The cause of action in the present case was stated to be an encroachment on a part of khasra No. 2494 and it was, therefore, different from the cause of action in the former suit, and O. II, r. 2 does not in terms apply.

(1) 89 Ind. Cas. 126

BANDAPPA v. SHANKAR RAO

The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1909) s. 14—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. XXI, r. 100—Execution of Decree—Dispossession, objection to—Collector, whether Court—Limitation, extension of.

A Collector in the Central Provinces is not invested with power to dispose of objections to dispossession in execution of a decree under O. XXI r. 100 of the Civil Procedure Code. He is not, therefore, a Court for that purpose within the meaning of section 14 of the Limitation Act, and the time occupied in proceedings taken before him under O. XXI r. 100 of the Civil Procedure Code, cannot be used to extend limitation under that section. [p 581, col. 2; p. 582, col. 1.]

Case-law discussed.

Application for revision of the order of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 9th April 1923 in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 35 of 1923.

Mr. G. R. Deo, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Non-applicants.

ORDER:—The point in both these cases is whether the Collector in executing the decree of a Civil Court is a Court within the meaning of Section 14 of the Limitation Act, so that the time spent in proceedings before him would be excluded from limitation. The applicants in both cases were dispossessed in the course of proceedings in execution, which were transferred to the Collector. Applications were made under O. XXI, r. 100, Civil Procedure Code, to the Collector who held he had no jurisdiction to entertain them. On applying to the Civil Court it was held that the applications were barred by limitation, as the Collector could not be considered to be a Court within the meaning of section 14 of the Limitation Act under the ruling in Tipangavda Sundawangavda v. Ramangavda Venkangavda Gavdar. (1) Against this order these applications are preferred.

The Bombay case was decided on the rules framed in Bombay for the execution of decrees by Collectors and that this is so appears from the remarks on page 54 of the case, where it is stated that the Revenue Officer under the rules passed under section 320 of the old Code, which was still in force, has no power to consider an application to set aside a sale under O. XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code. But under the rules in this Province, to be found in C. P. Revenue Manual, Vol. 2, page 149, the Collector was expressly invested with all the powers which the Court might exercise in the execution of such decrees, including powers under rr. 72 and 92 of O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code, the latter of which refers to setting aside or confirming a sale. The powers under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil Procedure Code, are, however, expressly withheld. It has been held by this Court in Hardeo v. Narbadi (2), that no close analogy can be drawn from the views propounded in other Provinces, because an essential factor governing the application of the law lies in the extent to which the Local Government has directed a transfer of the execution powers of the Civil Court to the Collector by orders and rules made under section 320 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882 (now sections 68-71 of Act V of 1908), and these vary in each Province. It has been held by the Bombay High Court in Laxman Ganesh Rajendra v. Keshav Govind Deshpande, (3) that it is necessary in each case to examine the precise nature of the proceeding and the constitution of the authority before whom such proceeding is taken, in order to decide whether it should properly be termed a civil proceeding in a Court. I am of opinion that if the proceeding in question was one which the Collector was competent to determine, he should be regarded as a Court within the meaning of section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act, otherwise not. It is necessary, therefore, to see whether, under the powers conferred on the Collector in execution of decrees by the Local Government, he was empowered to dispose of applications under O. XXI, r. 100, which provides for dispossession of third parties by the decree-holder. It was held in Ragho Chandrarao Kadam v. Hanmati Chandrarao Kadam, (4) that when a person has been dispossessed under the Collector's order, to whom the execution proceedings are transferred, he should apply to the Collector and not to the Court. This rule has no application when execution has been transferred to the Collector. That ruling is based on the rules in force in Bombay. As regards this Province, the Deputy Commissioner (Collector) is not invested with power to dispose of objections under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil Procedure Code, and hence if he is not empowered to dispose of claims or objections, it would appear that he has no power under O. XXI, r. 100, which is of the same nature as O. XXI, r. 58, the difference being that O. XXI, r. 58, refers to objections to attachment, while O. XXI, r. 100, refers to objections to dispossession.

BANDAPPA v. SHANKAR RAO

Although the rules do not refer expressly to this point, I am supported in my opinion by certain remarks in the case quoted above, Hardeo v. Narbadi (2) in which it is stated that the Collector in this Province steps into the place and exclusively absorbs and exercises all the powers of the executing Civil Court to the extent of the transfer made to him, including correction of orders in execution proceedings by way of review, appeal or revision, but "where a separate suit can be maintained, e.g., a suit by a person injured by an order passed in execution proceedings with which he had no sort of connection, we call in a civil jurisdiction, entirely outside the execution jurisdiction under which the order in question was made. . . ."

In Harlal v. Narayan (5), it is pointed out that the Collector under the rules is invested with all the powers which the Court might exercise in the execution of the decree but these do not include the power to investigate claims made on objections preferred under r. 58 because such an investigation would not be in the execution of the decree.

In these circumstances, although there is no direct ruling on the point, I am of opinion that the Collector was not empowered to decide the objection as to dispossession under O. XXI, r. 100, Civil Procedure Code, and he has declined to do so on the ground that he has no jurisdiction. The applicants are strangers to the decree and as such not parties to the execution and are persons injured by an order passed in the execution proceedings with which they had no sort of connection and thus are covered by the remarks in Hardeo v. Narbadi (2) quoted above. This being so, the Collector having no jurisdiction to deal with the objections, he cannot be considered as a Court in this connection.

It has been held in a number of cases that the time occupied during the pendency of an application to the Collector to set aside the execution of sale effected by him where the Collector is not empowered to set aside the sale, cannot be excluded under section 14 of the Limitation Act: cf. Narayan v. Kasulkhan (6), where it was held that when the Collector had no jurisdiction, there was no bona fide mistake of jurisdiction such as would justify the Court in excluding the time occupied in applying to the Collector from the period of limitation; and the same is the ratio decidendi in Tipangavda Sundawangavda v. Ramangavda Venkangavda Gavda (7).

In these circumstances, the Collector had no jurisdiction and cannot be considered a Court, and, therefore, the time occupied in prosecuting proceedings before him cannot be excluded under section 14 of the Limitation Act. In cases of this character it is not possible to lay down any general rule, as each case varies according to the question of whether the Collector had or had not jurisdiction. I am prepared to admit that, in certain cases, in which he had jurisdiction under the powers conferred on him by the rules, the time occupied in the proceedings taken before him might be used to extend the limitation under section 14 of the Limitation Act, but the present case is not one of that character, and the finding of the lower Court is correct.

Both applications are accordingly dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against the Subordinate Judge, Bulandshahr, dated the 2nd August 1922.

Messrs. M. A. Aziz and G. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are these. The plaintiff, who is the respondent in this Court, with his brother Shib Sahai, obtained a usufructuary mortgage from the ancestors of the appellants on 29th August 1905. On the same date, the mortgagors executed a rent-note, by which they agreed to pay to the mortgagees Rs. 7-12-0 per month as rent of the house mortgaged. Some time later, the mortgagees obtained a simple money decree against the mortgagors. In execution of that decree they attached the interest of the judgment-debtors in the house, viz., a right to redeem. The judgment-debtors objected and said that it was wrong to describe them as mortgagors and that they were the full owners of the house. They added that, they apprehended that if they were described as mere mortgagors, the property might fetch a small value. Notice was given to the decree-holders but they were not present when the application was disposed of. The execution Court held, by decision dated 29th April 1920, that the words "mortgagor's interest" should be expunged. The house, however, was never brought to sale. I am told by the parties that some other property of the appellants was sold and that sale satisfied the simple money decree.

After all these had happened, the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, was instituted by the respondent for recovery of the rent on foot of the registered rent-note. The suit was decreed by the lower Appellate Court and two points have been urged in appeal.

The fourth point in the grounds of appeal is that the lower Court was not justified in coming to the conclusion that the mortgage-deed of 1905 and the rent-note were not mere colourable transactions but were substantial ones. Mr. Aziz, however, conceded that the plea could not be urged as it went counter to the finding of the lower Appellate Court.

Mr. Aziz has, however, urged that the finding of the execution Court, dated 29th April 1920, operates as res judicata in the present suit and he cites the case of Damhar Singh v. Kalyan Singh (1).

Mr. Aziz has conceded that there is nothing on the record to show that the respondent mentioned the mortgage of 1905 as the mortgage by virtue of which his judgment-debtors were in the position of the mortgagors and the property was being sought to be sold subject to the mortgage of 1905. To start with, therefore, there is no decision that the mortgage of 1905 and the rent note of that date were fictitious transactions.

Assuming that all the necessary facts were found in favour of the appellants, it is clear to me that, the plea of res judicata cannot be sustained. The proceedings in which the objection was raised were under O. XXI, r. 66 of the Civil Procedure Code. They were ministerial proceedings. More correctly speaking, they were non-judicial or quasi judicial proceedings. The Court had to determine what were the properties to be sold and what were the incumbrances on the same. Any decision come to on those proceedings cannot operate as res judicata on the very point raised in a regular suit later on. In the case quoted, the question that subsequently arose, arose in the very execution proceedings in which the former finding had been arrived at.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs which will include fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Under r. 23 of the Rules of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind, it is open to a judgment-debtor to raise the plea of his being an agriculturist in execution proceedings, though no such plea was raised by him at any earlier stage of the proceedings; but, such a plea can be successfully raised only for the purpose of having the decree transferred to the Collector for execution.

In that event, the executing Court is bound to inquire into the status of the judgment-debtor and in the event of finding him to be an agriculturist transfer the decree for the sale of property specifically mortgaged to the Collector for execution.

In interpreting a rule of Court which has the force of law, the office of the Court is jus discernere and not jus dare and it has to abide by the words of the rule without attempting to re-form it according to the supposed intentions of the Legislature or attempting to exclude cases which fall within the express meaning of the rule in order to make the law reasonable [p. 585, Col. 2.]

The definition of an "Agriculturist" in section 2 of the Decreean Agriculturist's Relief Act is not limited to a judgment-debtor being an agriculturist at the date of the suit or of the decree. It is comprehensive enough to include an agriculturist at any stage of the proceedings. [p. 585, Col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Rupchand, A. J. C.—Two questions have been referred to us for our decision by a Division Bench of this Court, viz., (1) Whether under rule 28 of the Rules of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind, it is open to a judgment-debtor to raise a plea of his being an agriculturist in execution proceedings, no such plea having been raised at any earlier stage of the proceedings ;

(2) Whether, in that event, the executing Court is bound to inquire into the status of the judgment-debtor and, if found an agriculturist, transfer the decree for the sale of property specifically mortgaged to the Collector for execution.

Rule 28 declares that the execution of decrees ordering the attachment or sale of immoveable property shall be transferred to the Collector of the district in cases where "such property belongs to a person who is an agriculturist within the meaning of the Deccan Agriculturist's Relief Act of 1879, and has been specifically mortgaged for the re-payment of the debt to which the decree relates and the security still subsists."

The appellants-judgment-debtors had executed a mortgage-deed in favour of the respondents-judgment-creditors for Rs. 9,000 mortgaging both their agricultural and non-agricultural lands to secure a loan of Rs. 9,000 borrowed by them for trade purposes. A consent decree was passed against them in 1910 in terms of an award which was filed in Court under the provisions of clause 20 of the second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code. They were described as traders in the application to file this award and shown as such in the decree passed against them. The judgment-creditors had made several prior applications for execution of the decree by sale of the mortgaged property and on one such application sale proclamation was ordered to issue, but the property was not sold, all prior applications having been struck off either for default of the judgment-creditors or on their applications stating that they had agreed to allow the judgment-debtors time to pay.

Though the judgment-debtors were served with notices of the execution applications, they did not claim that the decree be transferred to the Collector for execution on the ground that they were agriculturists. In the execution proceedings which have led to this reference they pleaded an adjustment of the decree after the period allowed for proving such adjustments under O. XXI, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, and contended that they were agriculturists within the meaning of the Deccan Agriculturist's Relief Act, and as such entitled to prove the adjustment under section 71 of Deccan Agriculturist's Relief Act. The learned trying Judge being of opinion that the alleged adjustment could not be proved for want of sanction of the Court on behalf of the minor judgment-creditors ordered the sale to proceed. The judgment-debtors, however, urge that the lower Court has erred in not determining their status in order to see if the decree should not be transferred to the Collector under r. 28 of the Rules of this Court.

It is contended on behalf the judgment-creditors that a person must be an agriculturist at the date of the suit or, under any circumstances, at the date of the decree which is sought to be executed, so as to enable him to take advantage of this rule, and that if he has failed to plead and prove his status as an agriculturist before the decree was passed against him, it is not open to him to re-agitate the same question in execution proceedings for the purpose of getting the execution proceedings transferred to the Collector.

I can find nothing in the rule itself or in the definition of an agriculturist as given in section 2 of the Deccan Agriculturist's Relief Act to limit the operation of this rule to a person who is held to be an agriculturist in the decree which is sought to be executed.

Reliance has been placed on the rulings in Balchand Chaturchand v. Chunilal Jagjivandas (1) where a judgment-debtor who was not an agriculturist at the date of the decree passed against him, but who had acquired the status of an agriculturist subsequent to the decree, was held not entitled to claim instalments under section 20 of the Deccan Agriculturist's Relief Act, Devu Jetiram Gujar v. Ravapa Satappa Shintre (2), where, similarly, a judgment-debtor was held not entitled to claim instalments under section 15, clause (b) of the Act. Mulji Purshotam Thakkar v. Govardhandas Tribhuvandas (3), where the judgment-debtor was further held to be barred by the principles underlying the rule of res judicata to plead that he was an agriculturist in execution proceedings and to claim instalments under section 20 of the Act.

The rulings above referred to were based on the provisions contained in section 15 (B) and section 27 of the Act, and do not in any way control the definition of an agriculturist as given in section 2 of the Act which is comprehensive enough to include a person who is an agriculturist at any stage of the proceedings, and is contained in Chapter I of the Act. The Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act affords different kinds of reliefs to agriculturists in different proceedings. Chapter II of the Act relates to trial by Subordinate Judges of certain kinds of suits and necessarily implies that the person who claims to be an agriculturist should have acquired that status at the time of the institution of the suit. Chapter II of the Act expressly refers to suits and also other proceedings, while Chapter IV refers to insolvency proceedings. In Maruti Babaji Totare v. Martand Narayan Kulkarni (4) a Bench consisting of McLeod, C. J., who was a party to the decision in Devu Jetiram Gujar v. Revappa Satappa Shintre held that the heir of an agriculturist judgment-debtor, cannot prevent the sale of the property inherited by him under section 22 of the Act, unless he himself is an agriculturist at the date of the attachment of such property. This ruling also supports the view that the definition of agriculturist in section 2 of the Act is not limited to the judgment-debtor being an agriculturist at the date of the suit or of the decree.

The present rule 23 of the Court rules was made in 1907 under section 320 of the old Civil Procedure Code of 1883, corresponding to section 68 of the present Code. A somewhat similar rule, though more extensive in its operation, was published in Government Notification No. 5181 of 1893 and was in force prior to the extension of certain provisions of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act to Sind. Under that rule the Court had to inquire into the status of the judgment-debtor at the time of the attachment of his property there being no occasion for the Court to make such inquiry at any earlier stage.

There is nothing either in the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act or in the Civil Procedure Code or the rules framed thereunder for the Court to hold that the Legislature intended to prevent an agriculturist from applying that a decree passed against him be transferred for execution to the Collector provided the decree is of the description falling within this rule.

It is no doubt true that the object of the Legislature in enacting the provisions of section 68 to the Civil Procedure Code was to prevent, as far as possible, the transfer of the landed estates from the old families to modern speculators, as per Garth, C. J., in Haroprosad Roy v. Kali Prosad Roy (5), and not to afford relief to unsuccessful traders. The rule as framed does not in any way restrict the transfer of decrees obtained against old families of landed proprietors or deprive the unsuccessful traders or speculators who have acquired the status of agriculturists subsequent to the passing of the decree from taking advantage of it. The result is unfortunate, but our office is Jus dicere and not jus dare. The Court has to abide by the words of the rule which has the force of Law without attempting to reform it according to the supposed intentions of the legislature or attempting to exclude cases which fall within the express meaning of the rule, in order to make the law reasonable. A. G. v. Lockwood (6), Rodrigues v. Melhuish (7), Coe v. Lawrence (8), Rex v. Farde (9). If the rule is not in conformity with the declared intentions of the Legislature it is for the Legislature to amend or alter the rule. The object of the judgment-debtors who are banias and appear to be unsuccessful traders is not bona fide. Though it may cause a hardship to the judgment creditors who have not been able to recover the full amount due to them for over twelve years, the rule must, in my opinion, receive its ordinary and natural meaning. It entitles the judgment-debtors to plead that Pre-emption—Custom—Wajib-ul-arz containing recital of pre-emption—Subsequent partition of village—New Wajib-ul-arz maintaining right intact—Custom whether still exists.

Plaintiffs sued for possession by pre-emption of certain land alleging that a custom of pre-emption applied to the mahal and that they were co-sharers in it. The existence of a custom applicable to the village as originally constituted and carrying the incidents as recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of that period was not disputed, but it was contended that on a subsequent partition of the village into two mahals the custom was abrogated in its entirety. It appeared, however, that the wajib-ul-arz of the mahal in suit prepared at the time of partition maintained intact the rights of certain specified persons:

Held, that what was recorded in the wajib-ul-arz at the time of partition could not be regarded as a contract, but as a continuation of the application of the custom to the altered state of affairs, and that, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to sue for pre-emption.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Cawnpore, dated 23rd of January 1922.

Dr. K. N. Katju and Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The property in dispute comprises a one-anna share in mahal Rukmin Kunwar of the village Azampur Garhua and was sold by the defendant Manni Lal, to the other defendant, Sheo Din, for a consideration of Rs. 4,000 out of which Rs. 2,500 were credited towards a mortgage held by the vendee, Rs. 652 were paid at the time of registration, and the balance was left with the vendee for payment to one Ram Sahai.

The plaintiffs claimed to be the co-sharers of the vendor in mahal Rukmin Kunwar. The defendant-vendee was a stranger to the village. The allegation of the plaintiffs was that there was a custom of pre-emption applicable to mahal Rukmin Kunwar. The Courts below found that there was a custom of pre-emption applicable to the village Azampur Garhua; but it had been abrogated by the partition of the village in 1906 and that what was recorded in the wajib-ul-arz prepared at the time of partition was a mere contract, which terminated with the expiry of the term of the Settlement. They further found that in any case the custom could not survive the partition, because there was a single proprietor left of the entire mahal, in which the property now in dispute was situated.

The existence of a custom of pre-emption applicable to the village Azampur Garhua, as originally constituted, and carrying the incidents recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of 1876 is not now disputed. It allowed a right of pre-emption in the first instance to such co-sharers of the vendor as were his kinsmen and on their refusal to the other co-sharers of the village. In 1906 the village was divided into two mahals, one of which was called mahal Rukmin Kunwar. It was the sole property of Mst. Rukmin Kunwar. The wajib-ul-arz of mahal Rukmin Kunwar prepared at that time provided that the right of pre-emption shall belong to the Hissedar ekjaddi and after him to the other co-sharers of any mahal of the village.

The effect of the latter wajib-ul-arz was that the custom, as originally recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of 1876, was maintained intact in spite of the partition between the co-sharers of different mahals. Mahal Rukmin Kunwar had for the time being become the property of a single individual; but later on the mahal became the property of several co-sharers, one of whom sold the share in dispute to a stranger. It was open to the co-sharers of the new mahals at the time of partition to submit to a continuance of the custom as it stood prior to the partition or to abrogate it. In the present instance they agreed to submit to the continuance of the custom, and the plaintiff, who is one of the co-sharers of mahal Rukmin Kunwar, is entitled to claim pre-emption in respect of the share sold out of that mahal.

It is contended on behalf of the defendant vendee that the fact that the mahal Rukmin Kunwar had become the property of a single co-sharer, had the effect of abrogating that custom in its entirety; but what was done at the time of partition was to continue the application of the custom to the altered state of things by declaring that the right of pre-emption shall be enforceable as between the co-shares of the different mahals in the same manner as if no partition had taken place. What was recorded in the wajib-ul-arz prepared at the time of partition cannot, therefore, be regarded as a contract and the plaintiffs are entitled to sue for pre-emption. In Parbhu Dayal v. Jamul Ahmad (1), it was held, in somewhat similar circumstances, that the effect of the partition was not to abrogate or extinguish the old custom but to maintain it.

In the Court of first instance one of the pleas raised by the defendant-vendee was that the entire consideration mentioned in the sale-deed was genuine. Out of the three items mentioned in the sale-deed two were allowed by the Court of first instance, namely, the sum of Rs. 2,500 which was credited towards the prior mortgage held by the vendee, and that of Rs. 652 paid in cash before the Sub-Registrar. As regards the third item the Court of first instance held that it was doubtful whether that money was really due to Ram Sahai inasmuch as Ram Sahai was related to the vendee, but without recording a definite finding on that point, it proceeded to declare that if the amount was really due to Ram Sahai, the matter could be determined in a suit between the person liable to pay the money and the person who claimed it. The defendant-vendee admitted that he had not paid the money left with him for payment to Ram Sahai; and, in those circumstances, on further finding is called for.

This appeal is therefore allowed and the suit of the plaintiff decreed for pre-emption subject to the payment of Rs. 3,152, to the defendant-vendee within two months from this date. In case of non-payment the suit of the plaintiff will stand dismissed. As regards the sum of Rs. 848 left with the defendant-vendee for payment to one Ram Sahai the plaintiff will have to take their chance to pay this money if Ram Sahai succeeds in establishing his right to it. In case of payment of the amount first mentioned, the plaintiffs will get their costs here and hitherto from the defendant-vendee, who will bear his own costs throughout. In case of non-payment the defendant-vendee will get his costs from the plaintiff-appellant in all these Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Although a wajib-ul-ars raises a prima facie presumption of the existence of the custom it recites, nevertheless, if it contains certain other matters relating to that right which cannot possibly form the subject of a custom, there would be no justification for presuming that the entry is one of custom.

Balwant Singh v. Mare Singh, 74 Ind. Cas. 822; 21 A.L.J. 542; (1924) A. I. R. (A) 52, followed.

It is impossible to conceive of a custom of pre-emption which makes distinctions between persons who have inherited by collateral succession and persons who have inherited by direct descent. All such persons become co-sharers in the village, and have equal status and rights in the eye of the law.

An entry in a wajib-ul-ars which sets forth a custom of pre-emption but winds up by saying that the right is denied to a person who becomes a co-sharer by collateral inheritance cannot be regarded as a record of custom of pre-emption.

First appeal from the order of the District Judge of Budaun, dated the 27th March 1923

Mr. M. A. Aziz, for the Appellants.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT:—This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption. The plaintiff relied mainly on an entry in the wajib-ul-ars of 1272 Fasli. The defendants denied the existence of any such custom.

The Court of first instance came to the conclusion that, although the wajib-ul-ars raised a prima facie presumption of the existence of custom, nevertheless there was internal evidence in the clause relating to pre-emption which negated it. It held that no custom had been established and accordingly dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned District Judge came to a different conclusion. He held that the custom is established and remanded the case for trial of the other issues raised.

The entry relied on by the plaintiff, first of all, contains a recital setting forth the right of pre-emption and the way in which the price is to be settled in case of dispute. The clause winds up by saying that if a stranger has inherited property from an issueless co-sharer he would not be entitled to the right of pre-emption. There is no dispute as to the correct interpretation of this portion of the clause. It undoubtedly means that the right of pre-emption is denied to a person who has become a co-sharer by collateral inheritance. This portion of the clause cannot be detached from the other portions of it and in fact it is part of the whole entry regarding the existence of the right of pre-emption. In the case of Balwant Singh v. Mare Singh we expressed the view that, although a wajib-ul-ars raises a prima facie presumption of the existence of the custom it recites, nevertheless if it contains certain other matters relating to that right which cannot possibly form the subject of a custom, there would be no justification for presuming that the entry is one of custom. We are of opinion that this part of the clause is of that nature. It is impossible to conceive of a custom which makes distinctions between persons who have inherited by collateral succession and persons who have inherited by direct descent. All such persons become co-sharers in the village and have equal status and rights in the eye of the law. This being the view, we are inclined to agree with the first Court that the entry in the wajib-ul-ars was a record of contract which had ceased to be of any effect after the expiry of the Settlement. This being the sole evidence in the case, the plaintiff has failed to establish the custom alleged by him.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the decree of the Court of first instance restored with costs in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—This was a suit to enforce a mortgage-bond executed by certain persons represented by defendants 1st party on the 18th April 1909. The defendants, other than defendants 1st party, are interested in the mortgage-security either as prior mortgagees and purchasers or as subsequent mortgagees and purchasers. The suit was not seriously contested by the defendants 1st party; defendant 13, who is both a prior and a subsequent purchaser in respect of some of the mortgaged properties, raised various issues, all of which have succeeded in the Court below.

The history of the transaction between plaintiffs and the defendants 1st party is as follows:—On the 10th January 1901 they borrowed Rs. 200 from the plaintiffs and executed a simple bond in their favour. It is stated that the money was borrowed to enable them to pay the Government revenue and to meet other necessary expenses. On the 4th September 1902 there was a sum of Rs. 288 due to the plaintiffs upon the bond of the 10th January 1901. They required a fresh advance of Rs. 462 on that day, Rs. 60 to pay off certain decrees which had been obtained against them and Rs. 402 for certain necessary purposes. On the 4th September 1902 the defendants 1st party accordingly executed a mortgage-bond in favour of the plaintiffs to secure an advance of Rs. 750. Out of the money borrowed they discharged the bond of the 10th January 1901 and took a present advance of Rs. 462. The bond in suit, dated the 18th April 1909, was executed in order to pay off the mortgage-bond of the 4th September 1902.

The learned Subordinate Judge took the view that the doctrine of antecedent debt had no application to the case and he thought that there was no legal necessity which entitled the defendants to incur the debt. He also came to the conclusion that the mortgage bond in suit was a farzi transaction intended to defeat or delay the claim of defendant No. 13.

In my opinion it is quite impossible to support the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge. The mortgage in suit was clearly to discharge an antecedent debt. Apart from that, the evidence is clear and convincing that the money was borrowed for purpose of necessity. In dealing with this question it must be remembered that the defendants 1st party have not seriously contested the claim of the plaintiffs. Defendants 1, 2, 4 and 6 to 12 filed a joint written statement and they expressly admitted the bond, although they raised a question as to the interest claimed. They also put forward a plea of payment of Rs. 875 which, however, has not been established in the Court below. It is worthy of note that they did not raise the question whether the debt was incurred for a necessary purpose. Defendant No. 3 took the point that his branch of the family was separate from the other members of the family cited as defendants 1st party in this action. This question has been investigated by the learned

KHARAG NARAIN v. DWARKA PRASAD SINGH

Judge in the Court below and it has been decided against defendant No. 3, and defendant No. 3 has not presented any appeal against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point. There is just a suggestion in his written statement that the debt was not incurred for a necessary purpose; but he adduced no evidence on this point in the Court below and has not appeared before us to contest the claim of the plaintiffs.

The learned Subordinate Judge has, however, investigated the question of legal necessity at the instance, not of the defendants 1st party, but of defendant No. 13. I have very grave doubt whether it was open to the learned Subordinate Judge to do so; but, assuming that defendant No. 13 could raise the question of legal necessity, I am of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge should have answered the question in favour of the plaintiffs. As I have already said, there was no fresh advance on the mortgage of the 18th April 1909. We have then to see whether the debt of the 4th September 1902 was incurred for a necessary purpose. The bond shows that out of the money raised on the mortgage of the 4th September 1902, Rs. 288 was paid to satisfy the earlier bond of the 10th January 1901, Rs. 60 was applied in satisfaction of certain decrees obtained against them and Rs. 402 was spent for necessary purposes. We have then to go to the earliest of these bonds to see whether the debt of Rs. 200 was incurred for a necessary purpose. The learned Subordinate Judge says that there is no evidence how much was raised for Government revenue and how much for other necessary expenses. Munshi Lal, examined on behalf of the plaintiffs, states that Rs. 200 was borrowed to pay Government revenue of kist January 1901 as also for feeding expenses of the family and for cloths." He added "Government revenue was paid out of the said money. Chalan and ledger of the same have been destroyed." In my opinion there is no reason to doubt the substantial accuracy of this witness especially when it is remembered that the defendants 1st party were in a chronic state of indebtedness.

The next question is as to the payment of Rs. 60 in satisfaction of certain decrees which had been obtained against the defendants 1st party. On this question Munshi Lal said as follows:—"Rs. 60 was required to pay the decree—Rs. 60 was deposited in Court in satisfaction of the decree. I tried to take copies of the petition under which the payments were made but could not get them as the records had been destroyed." The evidence, in my opinion, is sufficient to establish the debt as against the defendants 1st party. The other item is as to the sum of Rs. 402 which was a present advance on the bond of the 4th September 1902. Munshi Lal says that the money was borrowed to defray the necessary expenses of the family and he added that he made enquires about the necessities for the loan. In cross-examination he gives the names of the persons from whom he made the enquiries and as there is denial of the facts stated by him, there is no reason whatever to disbelieve his evidence. If the bond of the 4th September 1902 be established, the bond now sued upon is necessarily established, for, as I have said, there was no present advance on the bond of the 18th April 1909. I hold that the bond of the 18th April 1909 was executed for a necessary purpose and that it binds the defendants 1st party.

I should like to say that I take strong objection to that portion of the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge in which he says that he attaches no value to the plaintiffs books of accounts. His actual decision on the point is as follows:—"I do not attach any value to the plaintiffs' books of accounts which could be easily manipulated to support their case." The fact that they might be so manipulated does not establish that they were so manipulated. The plaintiffs are very respectable men of business and numerous transactions with numerous parties are entered in these books of accounts. The learned Subordinate Judge should have remembered that to pass a sweeping opinion of this nature was to discredit all their books of accounts and to imperil the various transactions into which the plaintiffs have entered. He has given no reasons whatever for holding that the books of accounts are not trustworthy except speculative reasons which should never have weighed with him.

The next question is, whether the bond in suit is a farsi document intended to defeat or delay the claim of defendant No. 13. In order to appreciate the point that has been argued before us, it is necessary to remember that the plaintiffs consist of two different parties, Babu Kharag Narain and his son being plaintiffs 1st party and Babu Kali Charan Singh and his family being plaintiffs second party. The case of the plaintiffs is that they are jointly interested in the transaction and are accordingly entitled to sue jointly. The learned Subordinate Judge has taken great pains to point out that Ritlal Singh, the father of plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4 of the second party, was a friend of Brij Bhukan Das, father of plaintiff No. 1, and that Ritlal Singh was also related to defendant No. 1. Having come to this conclusion the learned Subordinate Judge found no difficulty in holding that the transaction was a device to defeat the interest of Mr. O'Reiley and Chaman Singh. I have had some difficulty in following the arguments of the Subordinate Judge; but his view seems to be this: The mortgagers owed certain money to Chaman Singh, defendant No. 13. Chaman Singh was an unsecured creditor. On the 16th March 1907 a decree was obtained by O'Reiley against defendants, 1st party for Rs. 8,987-5-6. Chaman Singh also demanded the money which was due to him. Upon these facts the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the bond in suit was executed in order to defeat the claim of O'Reiley and Chaman Singh, but it is not disputed that there was no advance to the plaintiffs upon the bond of the 18th April 1909. That bond was executed in order to discharge the prior bond of the 4th September 1902 and it is not shown that on the 4th September 1902 there was any claim of O'Reiley or of Chaman Singh to defeat which the defendants executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs. This is the answer to a very speculative case made out for Chaman Singh by the learned Subordinate Judge. The other point to which the learned Subordinate Judge refers is that there was a substitution of certain properties in the mortgage bond of the 18th April 1909. It appears that four specific properties formed the subject-matter of the mortgage of the 4th September 1902. In the bond of the 18th April 1909, one for the properties was left out and many other properties were substituted. The learned Subordinate Judge thought that this was a suspicious matter, but he failed to give due weight to the fact that the property which was left out in the bond of the 18th April 1909 was a property which was sold in execution of a decree obtained against the defendants 1st party.

The learned Subordinate Judge says that although the property may have been sold, the security of the plaintiffs could not be impaired and there was no reason for substituting one security for another. This is true enough; but, at the same time, the plaintiffs as mortgagees may reasonably have wished to avoid trouble and expense if it was possible for them to do so, by taking other properties as security for the money advanced by them. The only other point in connection with this matter is that the learned Subordinate Judge thought that the value of the substituted securities was Rs. 50,000 to Rs. 60,000 and that there was no reason whatever why they should have been included when the money borrowed was only Rs. 3,191. The learned Subordinate Judge has referred to the evidence of Kharag Narain Singh in this connection. Kharag Narain, no doubt, says that the properties mortgaged are worth about Rs. 50,000 to Rs. 60,000 but Kharag Narain was giving the value of the properties, not the value of the security. The evidence is clear and convincing that all these properties were already subject to various mortgages and there is no reason to suppose that the value of the security is anything more than what is usual in a case of this nature. It is well established that an apparent transaction must be assumed to be the real transaction until the contrary is shown and that suspicion can never take the place of proof. In my opinion there is no proof that the transaction in question is benami transaction and I must overrule the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point.

The next question is whether defendant No. 13 has occupancy rights in 220 bighas, 9 cuttahas and 13½ dhurs of land comprised in the mortgage-security. The claim of defendant No. 13 arises in this way. One Holloway advanced Rs. 15,400 to the defendants 1st party on the 10th October 1897. As security for the money advanced, the defendants 1st party executed a mortgage-bond in his favour in respect of certain properties specified therein. They also executed a lease in respect of 220 bighas, 9 cuttahas and 13½ dh. of khudkasht land belonging to the defendants 1st party. Defendant No. 13 represents the interest of Holloway. The patta executed by the defendants 1st party in favour of Holloway makes it perfectly clear that the lease was executed as a security for the loan advanced. The lease was for 20 years from 1305--1324, for the purpose of cultivating indigo; but Ex. F, the patta, shows that this lease was granted as a security for the loan of Rs. 15,400 advanced by Holloway to the defendants' 1st party and that the object of the lease was not to create the relationship of landlord and tenant but to provide a security as between debtor and creditor. In my opinion Ex. D, the mortgage-deed, Ex. E, the ekrarnama and Ex. F, the lease, must be taken and read as one transaction: and, when so read, there is no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the transaction was a transaction between debtor and creditor, and not a transaction between lessor and lessee.

That being the governing intention between the parties to the contract, the question arises whether the lessee entered into possession in the capacity of mortgagee or in the capacity of raiyat. Mr. Sultan Ahmad on behalf of defendant No. 13 has contended before us that Holloway was already in possession as a jotedar. There is no evidence in support of this argument except the stray statements of Bhairo Dayal and Bansi Rai, two of the witnesses examined on behalf of defendant No. 13. There is, however, no documentary evidence in support of this evidence and I am not prepared to act upon it. Mr. Sultan Ahmad relied upon the case of Ramdhari Singh v. M. H. Mackenzie (1) in support of his argument that a raiyat by taking a sarpeshgi lease of land of which he was then put in possession does not divest himself of his right to acquire a right of occupancy. That decision has not been followed in the subsequent decisions of the Calcutta High Court and of this Court, and I am not prepared to follow it. It was laid down by Chapman and Atkinson, JJ., in Sheo Sahay Misir v. Bajo Singh that the "primary object of the sarpeshgi lease is not to create the relationship of landlord and tenant but to provide a security as between debtor and creditor. That being the governing intention between the parties to the contract it is clear that the sarpeshgidars entered into possession in the capacity of mortgagees and not as raiyaats; and, consequently, they are not entitled to claim occupancy rights although there was a letting of the land in the sense that they were required by the terms of the sarpeshgi lease to cultivate the lands and to pay merely a nominal annual rent." The leading case on the subject is that of Bengal Indigo Company v. Roghobur Das (3) which lays down that where the leases are not mere contract for the cultivation of the land but are intended to constitute and do constitute a real and valid security to the tenant for the principal sums which he had advanced and interest thereon, the tenants' possession under the documents is in part at least not that of cultivators only but that of creditors operating repayment of the debt due to them by means of their security. The question, to my mind, is to see whether the relationship between Holloway and the defendants 1st party was that of lessor and lessee or that of mortgagor and mortgagee. As soon as we find a debt and a security for the debt, the transaction is one of mortgage, by whatever name it may be called by the parties; and once you get a mortgage, there is no difficulty in working out the rights of the parties. As Lord Macnaghten pointed out in Noakes & Co., Ltd. v. Rice. (4) "Redemption is of the very nature and essence of a mortgage, as mortgages are regarded in equity. It is inherent in the thing itself. And it is, I think, as firmly settled now as it ever was in former times that equity will not permit any device or contrivance designed or calculated to prevent or impede redemption." Lord Macnaghten added that it followed as a necessary consequence that when the money secured by a mortgage of land was paid off, the land itself and the owner of the land in the use and enjoyment of it must be as free and unfettered to all intents and purposes as if the land had never been made the subject of the security. In my opinion it is impossible to hold that defendant No. 13 has acquired any rights of occupancy in these lands.

NAND LAL CHAUBE v. MAHARAJA KESHO PRASAD SINGH

The last question is as to interest. The interest in the bond is 24 per cent. per year with yearly rests. No evidence was adduced by the plaintiffs to prove that this was the market-rate of interest on a transaction of this nature. That being so, the interest must be calculated at the market-rate of interest. We think that the plaintiffs are entitled to interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum with yearly rests.

There are various defendants who have various rights in these properties which have not been determined by the learned Subordinate Judge. Before this case is finally disposed of, the rights of these parties must be determined.

We allow the appeal, set aside the judgment of the Court below and remand the case to the learned Subordinate Judge for disposal of those issues which have not been disposed of by him and to pass a decree in accordance with this judgment. The appellants are entitled to the costs of this appeal from defendant No. 13. So far as the costs in the Court below are concerned, they are entitled to them from defendants 1st party and are entitled to add them to their mortgage-security.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) s. 50 (2)—Presumption of fixity of rent, rebuttal of—Holdings, different—Burden of proof.

Where a landlord succeeds in showing that certain holdings as recorded in the Record of Rights, in respect of which the presumption laid down in section 590 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act is claimed, were not in existence in the condition in which they were recorded in the Record of Rights in certain years, the onus is shifted on the tenants to prove that their present holdings are made up of other holdings which have also borne a uniform rental. [p. 595, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, dated the 22nd June 1921, reversing a decision of the Munsif of Buxar, dated the 30th April, 1920.

Mr. B. B. Saran, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. N. Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—These 17 appeals arise out of as many suits brought by the plaintiff-respondent for enhancement of rent under section 30 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act on adjudication that the tenants defendants were occupancy raiyyats and not raiyyats at fixed rents as recorded in the Record of Rights. The defence of the defendants was that their holdings were not occupancy holdings but that they were Sharahmoatan tenants or tenants holding at fixed rates. They further raised certain pleas objecting to the enhancement under section 30 (b), even if it be held by Court that they were occupancy tenants.

There were altogether 25 suits brought by plaintiff, out of which four suits were dismissed on account of non-service of summons on the defendants. Four other suits were decreed by the Munsif on a finding that the tenants in those suits were occupancy tenants and that the plaintiff was entitled to enhancement of rent under section 30 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Those eight suits are not before us in these appeals and the present appeals relate to the remaining 17 suits in which the learned Munsif held that the tenant-defendants were raiyyats at fixed rates. On appeal by the plaintiff, the learned Subordinate Judge of Shahabad has reversed the decrees of the Munsif, and has found that the defendants were occupancy tenants and that their rents are liable to enhancement under section 30 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Against the decrees in these suits the tenant-defendants come in second appeal to this Court.

NAND LAL CHAUBE V. MAHARAJA KESHO PRASAD SINGH

The learned Munsif, in dealing with the issues as to whether the holdings in the suits are holdings at fixed rate or occupancy holdings, held that the Survey Records were in favour of the defendants. He found that, although the Jamabandis for the years 1246, 1248, 1267, 1268 and 1280 Fasli produced by the plaintiffs showed that the holdings of the defendants have not continued uniform either in area, or in the amount of rent payable by the defendants, yet from 1280 downwards there has been no change either in the area, or in the amount of rent, and he has drawn the presumption raised in favour of the defendants by clause (2) of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. As regards the Jamabandis produced by the plaintiff, the learned Munsif remarked that, in order to be of any evidential value, they require full corroboration from independent source, and that this circumstance was wanting in the present case; but, having regard to the fact that the Patwari examined by the plaintiff, gave genealogies of the defendants which were not challenged by the defendants, and to the fact that the defendants did not make any specific allegation that their lands in 1246 or 1248 were not as entered in the Jamabandis and the entries in those Jamabandis were not specifically challenged, he held that the Jamabandis could not be wholly discarded. He went in detail into the entries as regards each case, and he found that a large area of land went out of the tenants' possession after 1248 Fasli; that the lands in the Jamabandi of 1267 did not include any new lands which were not tenancy lands in 1246 or 1248. He thought that there might have been readjustment or redistribution of lands by purchase, etc., but no new land came in, which was not in the Jamabandi of 1248. He observed that it was not the plaintiff's suggestion, nor was there any evidence to show that the 1248 Jamabandi was incomplete, and he remarked that this fact had an important bearing in the present cases as the mere fact that the area of the tenants' lands in 1267, or in any other subsequent year, was higher than the lands in 1248 Jamabandi, does not establish the plaintiff's case. He was of opinion that the plaintiff had to prove, in addition, that the increased area are lands of new Settlement not acquired by purchase from other tenants, and he placed the onus on the plaintiff to prove that the excess area was a result of new Settlement as the Khatian was in the defendants' favour. Then, as regards the Bhaoli lands shown in the earlier Jamabandis against the names of some of the tenants, and the fact that while the Bhaoli area in 1248 was 60 bighas, in 1268 it was reduced to 18 bighas, he held that these facts did not warrant the conclusion that all the Bhaoli lands were commuted to Nagdi and the Bhaoli lands of 1246 or 1248 or any subsequent year was continued to be held by the self-same tenants in later years. The learned Munsif further held that mere alteration in area accompanied with alteration in land, as shown by Jamabandi, proved nothing. He was of opinion that the plaintiff must prove increase in rent or in rates of rents and also that the previous Bhaoli areas were, as a matter of fact, included in the later years' holdings and that the lands were of new Settlement. He then took up each case or each group of cases separately and he found that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the new lands were of new Settlement. He was of opinion that it was possible that they were acquired by purchase. He further held that the Jamabandis show constant alterations in areas and rents but it was not shown that the old rent was enhanced, or that new lands were settled. He further held that identity of the lands in dispute with those in the Jamabandis had not been established. He accordingly dismissed the 17 suits now in question.

On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the landlord had sufficiently rebutted the presumption raised by the entry in the Record of Rights and under section 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act by showing from his earlier Jamabandis of 1246, 1248, 1267 and 1268 that in most of the cases the present Nagdi holdings with the present Jamas were new creations and in some cases there were conversions or commutations from Bhaoli holdings. He was also of opinion that the learned Munsif placed the onus on the plaintiff about matters which would be entirely within the special knowledge of the defendants themselves, for instance, as regards purchase of old rai-yati lands, etc. He held that the Jamabandis of the earlier years, mentioned above, having rebutted the presumption arising in favour of the defendants, and the onus having having shifted upon the defendants to show that their present holdings were made up of other holdings acquired by them by purchase or other means, which were also held at uniform rent, the defendants had failed to discharge the onus, and that, therefore, it must be held that they were occupancy tenants and not tenants at fixed rents.

In second appeal it has been argued on behalf of the appellants that the learned Subordinate Judge had not considered each case separately, but has considered all the cases en bloc. Further, he has not considered the fact that the Jamabandis were held by the the Munsif not to have been proved according to law. Thirdly, that the presumption being in favour of the defendants, the learned Subordinate Judge has improperly thrown the onus upon them to prove new acquisitions by purchase or other means, or by commutation of Bhaoli rents into Nagdi rents. Now, although the learned Subordinate Judge was right in his view that once the plaintiff succeeded in showing that the holdings, as recorded in the Record of Rights, were not in existence in the condition in which they were so recorded, in the years 1246, or 1248, or 1267 or 1268, the onus shifted on the defendants to prove that their present holdings are made up of other holdings which also have borne uniform rental, yet it must be said that the learned Subordinate Judge has not properly considered the evidence adduced by the defendants. He merely observes that the onus was improperly thrown on the landlord about matters which would be only within the special knowledge of the tenant himself; but he does not consider whether the onus which was on the defendants has been discharged by them by the evidence produced. Moreover, the learned Munsif considered each case or group of cases separately and dealt with the evidence relating to those case or groups of cases. The learned Subordinate Judge has not dealt with each case or group of cases separately, and I am not sure whether his attention was directed to the evidence adduced by the defendants as regards each case. Moreover, the learned Munsif observed that the plaintiff had failed to prove the identity of the lands in dispute with the lands in the Jamabandis. The learned Subordinate Judge does not deal with this point. No doubt, he refers to the genea-logies deposed to by the plaintiff's Patwari, but I am not sure whether by this he meant that the identity of the lands had been established. Having regard to these circumstances, I am of opinion that the appeals have not been properly dealt with by the learned Subordinate Judge. I would, therefore, set aside his decrees and remand the appeals to the Subordinate Judge for fresh hearing and disposal according to law. Costs will abide the result.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Alienation by father—Necessity, absence of—Son, whether can sue to recover property—Antecedent debt.

The circumstances under which it is necessary for a Hindu son suing to recover family property to show that a debt incurred by the father was illegal or immoral are two; the first is, where property has passed out of the family under a conveyance executed by the father in consideration of an antecedent debt or in order to raise money to pay off such debt, and the second is, where property has been sold in execution of a decree for the father's debt. Where, however, an alienation of family property is effected by the father for a cash consideration for which there is no family necessity, a son can recover the property without proof of the fact that the debt was an immoral or illegal one.

JUDGMENT. —This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff sought to set aside a sale deed executed by his father in 1917 and to recover possession of the property on the ground that the sale was not for legal necessity. The case as put in the plaint was that the consideration never passed at all and that if paid it was paid for illegal purposes. However, the substantial issue in the Courts below was that of legal necessity. The sale consideration was Rs. 119. Rs. 41-4-0 has been found to be binding on the plaintiff and the plaintiff has submitted to this part of the decree. The remaining amount of Rs. 77-12-0 was paid in cash at the time of registration and as to this the Court below finds that there was no legal necessity. Against this portion of the decree the defendants appeal.

Only two pleas have been urged before me. The first is that the amount of Rs. 77-12-0 was taken for legal necessity. The arguments advanced in support of this plea are purely questions of fact. The items in question were stated in the sale-deed to have been borrowed for household expenses and for payment of petty debts. The defendants adduced evidence to show that they were borrowed for the purchase of bullocks and funeral expenses of the plaintiff's grandfather. The Courts below has given good reasons for disbelieving this evidence and the finding is one of fact. It is not open to attack in this appeal.

The second plea is that the plaintiff can only recover property which has once been sold by showing that the sale consideration was for illegal or immoral purposes. This plea is equally untenable. The circumstances in which it is necessary for the sons to show that the debt was illegal or immoral in order to recover the property were laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (1). There are two such circumstances and two only. The first is, where property has passed out of the family under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt in order to raise money to pay of such debt. The second is, where property has been sold in execution of a decree for the father's debt. Neither branch of the rule has any application to this case. This was not an execution-sale but a private conveyance, and, so far as this item of Rs. 77-12-0 is concerned, it was a private conveyance executed not in lieu of an antecedent debt but for an amount paid in cash at the time of the registration of the deed. The appeal, therefore, fails and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

ROOCHALDAS GIDOOMAL & COY. v. THE MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA

Mr. Srikishendas, H. Lulla, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Pamanmal Valabdas, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit filed by the plaintiffs for the recovery of Rs. 3,600 from the defendants, Rs. 3,500 being a sum telegraphically remitted to plaintiff on 8th February 1922 from Colombo through the defendant Bank and Rs. 100 being claimed by way of damages on account of the wrongful conduct of the defendants in withholding payment.

The defendants contend that they were entitled to retain this Rs. 3,500 as a set off against the sum of Rs. 3,317-6-3 the balance due under two dishonoured Bills drawn for valuable consideration by Messrs Berli & Co., Limited, (who were in liquidation in February 1922) in favour of the defendants and accepted by the plaintiffs and to retain the balance of Rs. 182-9-9 as a set off towards dishonoured Bills of the value of about £3,300 (Sterling) drawn for valuable consideration by Messrs. Shasha in favour of defendants upon plaintiffs and accepted by the plaintiffs. The defendants also claim that they had a Banker's lien over the sum of Rs. 3,500 and that they were entitled to amalgamate the various accounts of the plaintiffs with themselves as Bankers and set off a credit in one against a debit in another account.

Plaintiffs, on the other hand, contend that since the money was given to the Bank at Colombo for a specific purpose, viz., to be telegraphically transmitted to the plaintiffs in Karachi, the money was not subject to any lien and could not be retained by the Bank against sums alleged to be due under dishonoured Bills. Plaintiffs further contend that the Bills drawn by Messrs. Berli and Co. were not accepted by the plaintiffs but by another firm of the same name doing business in Sukkur.

With regard to the question of lien it was pointed out by their lordships of the Privy Council in London Chartered Bank of Australia v. White (1) that Bankers most undoubtedly have a general lien on all securities deposited with them as Bankers by a customer unless there be an express contract or circumstances that show an implied contract inconsistent with lien. A Banker is entitled to set off what is due to a customer on one account against what is due from him on another account, although the moneys due to him may in fact belong to other persons see Bank of New South Wales v. Goulburn Valley Butter Company (2). Bankers have a general lien on securities deposited with them as Bankers but they cannot successfully claim a lien on securities delivered to them for a special purpose inconsistent with the existence of the lien claimed, Brandao v. Barnett (3).

In the present case the Rs. 3,500, in my opinion, cannot, any more than in Brandao v. Barnett (3), be considered to have been deposited with the defendants as Bankers.

Verhomal, the plaintiffs' partner, requested the Mercantile Bank of India at Colombo to telegraph to their agent at Karachi at his own cost and risk the fact that they had sold to Roohal Das Gidoomal and Co. a telegraphic transfer on Karachi for Rs. 3,500 in favour of Roohaldas Gidoomal and Co.

The transaction, thus, was the sale of a telegraphic transfer entered into for the purpose of the speedy transmission of funds to Karachi. The plaintiff was not a depositor but a vendee and the defendant Bank as vendors were under an obligation to deliver what they had sold.

It is, of course, conceivable that Verhomal, instead of making the request which he made, could have requested the Mercantile Bank of India at Colombo to telegraphically transfer Rs. 3,500 to the credit of plaintiffs' account with the Mercantile Bank of India at Karachi. In this case whatever the motive with which the request was made, the defendants would, in my opinion, have had a Banker's lien on the sum thus transferred, for it would have been deposited in the account, just as much as if plaintiffs in Karachi had deposited it themselves.

Verhomal, however, requested the Bank at Colombo to wire to the defendants in Karachi the fact that they had sold a telegraphic transfer for Rs. 3,500-0-0.

The circumstances appear to me to show a contract between the parties inconsistent with lien.

With regard to the contention of the defendants that they were entitled to retain this Rs. 3,500 as a set off against the sum of Rs. 3,317-6-3 under two dishonoured Bills drawn by Berli & Co. and to retain the balance of Rs. 182 9-9 as a set off towards dishonoured Bills of the value of about £ 3,300 (sterling) drawn by Messrs. Shasha, it has been held that money paid for a specific purpose cannot be set off by a Banker, see Grant's Law of Banking, Sixth Edition, p. 696, and the cases there cited, viz., Hill v. Smith (4) Young v. Bank of Bengal (5) as explained in Alsogar v. Currie (6) In re Pallit (7), Re Mid-Kent Fruit Factory (8). The present case seems to me very similar to the hypothetical case put by Lord Chancellor during the course of the argument in Braduo v. Barnett (3), where Lord Brongham expressed the opinion that, unless the Banker on taking the notes for transmission into the country stated that he did so subject to his right of lien he waived it. In the present case the money was paid to the Mercantile Bank at Colombo for a specific purpose and it cannot, in my opinion, be set off. Provision has been made in Order VIII, rule 6 of the Civil Procedure Code for set off in certain cases but in order to entitle a defendant to set off, it is necessary that the parties should fill the same character as they fill in the plaintiffs' suit. In the matter of the claims sought to be set off debts were owing to the defendant Bank on account of dishonoured bills, but in the plaintiffs' suit the Rs. 3,500 had been telegraphically remitted through the Bank or, to be precise, the Mercantile Bank of India Limited at Colombo sold to Verhomal, a partner in the plaintiff's firm, a telegraphic transfer of Rs. 3,500 to Karachi and wired to their agent, the Mercantile Bank of India Limited at Karachi, at Verhomal's expense and risk, informing them of the fact.

In case I am wrong in my view that the Bank is not entitled to set off the debts due on the dishonoured bills on the grounds mentioned, it is necessary to consider the other contentions of the plaintiff.

Plaintiff has failed to prove the alleged damage of Rs 100. It seems to me established with regard to issue No. 1. that the plaintiffs were indebted to the defendants when the telegram was received by the defendants. Mr Laing's evidence shows that on two drafts of Berli & Co a sum of £ 258-19-0 at the rate of 1 3s 9|16d, viz., Rs. 3,883-7-0 was due and Rs. 11,675-12-6 on the Shasha drafts.

Plaintiff contends that the branches at Sukkur and Shikarpur had no connection with the Karachi firm of Rochaldas Gidoomal and Co., except that they were all called by the same name and that each had one common capitalist partner.

The evidence called in support of this consists of mere oral statements of interested witnesses and the contention appears to me inconsistent with Ex. 27, a Reference made at Karachi under the Indian Arbitration Act, which is not in force in Shikarpur, by the firm of Rochaldas Gindumal and Co. of Karachi, Shikarpur and elsewhere. The contention appears to me also inconsistent with Ex. 32, in which Rochaldas Gidumal & Co. of Karachi wrote calling on defendants to send them delivery orders for goods covered by drafts drawn on the Sukkur Office.

My finding on issue 1 is in the affirmative. On issue 2 in the negative.

I give judgment for plaintiff for Rs. 3,500 and costs and interest at 6 % from date of suit till payment.

RESPONDENTS.Co-sharer landlords—Occupancy holding, non-transferable, transfer of, to co-sharer landlord—Purchaser, position of—Ejectment—Injunction, mandatory, when to be granted.

When one co-sharer landlord takes a transfer of a non-transferable holding from a tenant, he may be treated by the other co-sharer landlords as a trespasser [p. 59], col. 2]

Dilbar Sardar v. Hosein Ali Bepari, I. L. R. 26 Cal. 559; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 955; Lakhi Kant Das Mahapatra v. Bolabhadra Prasad Das, 25 Ind. Cas. 546; 19 C. L. J. 400, followed.

Sreemutty Basanta Kumari Das v. Mohesh Chandra Saha, 21 Ind. Cas. 621; 18 C. W. N. 828, distinguished.

Where on a transfer of a non-transferable occupancy holding to a co-sharer landlord another co-sharer landlord sues to eject the transferee to the extent of his own share claiming joint possession with the transferee to the extent of his share, it is no equitable defence for the defendant to say that the plaintiff has been in possession of other lands purporting to hold an occupancy right therein. [p. 600, col. 1]

It requires a strong case for a Court to refuse an injunction restraining a further alteration of the character of the property; but a mandatory injunction directing the restoration of the property to its original condition is a most exceptional remedy and one never to be applied except with the greatest safeguards for the prevention of waste as well as injustice. Appeal against the decree of the Sub. Judge, 5th Court, Dacca, dated the 20th September 1921.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Dibendra Chandra Pal), for the Appellants.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babus Rupendra Coomar Mitter and Manindranath Banerjee), for the Respondents.

Rankin, J. :—This is an appeal from a decision of the 5th Subordinate Judge of Dacca whereby he modified a decision of the Munsif of Munshiganj. The plaintiff is a co-sharer in the miliki interest of a small piece of land in area about one-third of an acre and he has a 3-annas 4-gundas share. So far as this particular land now in question is concerned, it appears that it was the subject matter of a non-transferable occupancy right in defendant No. 11. The original raiyyat transferred it or purported so to do to the first defendant and the case has been argued on the footing that the first defendant is merely a benamidar transferee for a co-sharer of the plaintiff, by name Hari Binode. It appears that the transfer was in November 1918 and that, in May of 1919, Hari Binode settled the land with the present appellants, defendants Nos. 2 and 3. It appears, further, so far as we can gather, that in or about January of 1919 Hari Binode excavated a tank and dug certain ditches on the property and that, in May 1919, defendants 2 and 3 erected certain structures for use as jute godowns, the intention being to use this plot of land not for agricultural purposes but for the purposes in connection with the storage of jute. In these circumstances, about a month after defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had taken settlement the plaintiff brought this suit in June 1919 claiming to the extent of his share the right to eject the defendants from the land, that is to say claiming a decree for joint possession with the defendants to the extent of his share.

The first point urged by the appellants was successful before the trial Judge. That point is this:—that in respect of other lands wherein the plaintiff and Hari Binode were co-sharers, these two were settled in non-transferable right, and that of these the plaintiff has taken a transfer from the tenants and is now in possession. Accordingly, it is said that this gives rise in the present suit to an equitable defence on the part of the defendants No. 2 and 3; that is to say, that they are entitled to object that, in consideration that the plaintiff is in actual possession of more lands than are referable to his share, he cannot, as regards this land get a decree for joint possession but may be limited to his mere rights to bring a suit for partition of all the common properties. With regard to this matter, one has to observe that the principle that, when one co-sharer landlord takes a transfer of a non-transferable holding from a tenant, he may be treated by the other co sharer landlords as a trespasser, has been laid down in this Court more than once, and the principle itself is not disputed by the learned Vakil who appears for the appellants. The case of Dilbar Sardar v. Hosein Ali Bepari (1) and the case of Lakhi Kant Das Mahapatra v. Bolabhadra Prosad Das (2) are sufficient authorities. It has been contended, however, that the case of Sreemuty Basanta Kumari Dasya v. Mohesh Chandra Shaha (3) affords some authority, in certain circumstances, for an equitable defence such as that now put forward. But an examination of the case in 18 Calcutta Weekly Notes (3) shows that the aspect of the case which is the prominent aspect of this case, namely, that the defendants have taken transfer of a non-transferable right was not the basis of the decision and the case had not really been looked at from that particular point of view. In any case, it seems to me that the fact that the plaintiff has been for a long period in possession of other lands purporting to hold an occupancy right therein is no equitable defence when afterwards Hari Binode seeks to do the same thing as regards a different piece of land altogether and the plaintiff takes objection. Whether Hari Binode could have taken objection successfully to the plaintiff's occupation of other lands, what his motives were in not claiming ejectment in good time, whether he would now be barred from proceeding in ejectment—all these are matters which seem to me foreign to the present case. Under Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (4) it appears to me that the transfer out and out of a non-transferable occupancy jote gives to the landlord a right to re-enter. If the landlord does not re-enter but does not recognize, it may be that his right to re-enter continues for a substantial time. But, in this case, so far as the other lands are concerned, no co-sharer of the plaintiff has ever purported or attempted to re-enter and the plaintiff, as the matter stands, is standing, in fact, in the shoes of the previous tenant against whom his right is quite unimpeachable. Accordingly, there seems to be a fallacy in treating the plaintiff, as regards those lands, as a person who is merely exercising a right given to him by his maliki interest. For these reasons, I think that the equitable defence set up by the appellants fails and that the correct view on this point was taken by the Court of Appeal below.

We then come to a matter of considerable practical importance. There can be no doubt that, with regard to this land, defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have been engaged in changing its character from agricultural land to land suitable to some form of business connected with jute. As regards the future, the learned Judge has given an injunction restraining the defendants from further digging the land and from raising any other huts thereon. So long as that decree is corrected by confining it to the defendants 2 and 3, I can see no objection to that decree for an injunction standing. The learned Judge has, however, also granted against the defendants without distinction a mandatory injunction that they do fill up the ditches, remove the earth and the huts from the land within a fortnight at their own costs failing which the plaintiff may do that recovering costs from the defendants. Now, on that question, it may be desirable to be a little precise. Hari Binode, who is said to have done the excavation of the tank, is not a party to this suit. His excavation was not objected to at the time and the plaintiff, as regards that, seems to have taken no action until it was completed. I do not say that his delay had been such as would disentitle him to an ordinary injunction but that the delay disentitles him to a mandatory injunction may very easily be inferred in the present case. However that may be, Hari Binode is not a party to this suit and the plaintiff took no action until Hari Binode had parted with his possession of the land to the defendants Nos. 2 and 3. I fail to see, therefore, that there can be any possible question of granting in this suit a mandatory injunction to re-instate the tank or the ditches against any one. That being so, the next question is this: The plaintiff is not willing, and certainly cannot be asked now to express his willingness, to make any arrangement for restoring the land so as to make it suitable for such modest agricultural purposes as it would seem to be capable of. The buildings on the land, that is to say, the huts—whatever they be—we are informed that there is only now an office—are certainly things which the defendants may remove as the defendants put them up so very shortly before the suit; and I am inclined to think that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 may be ordered to remove them. At the same time, having regard to the condition of the land as it now is and the other circumstances of the case which rather point to a probability of this property being comprised within a suit for partition at the instance of some party or another, it would seem reasonable, if this mandatory injunction is granted at all to stay the operation of the order for a period of two months from this date with a view to see whether a partition suit is in fact instituted; and, in that event, to let the stay continue until such partition suit is determined or until further order of this Court. If in fact, Hari Binode has a strong claim in the partition suit, in the circumstances, to have this land allotted to him as part of his share; it would be mere useless injustice to require the defendants Nos 2 and 3, in the meantime, to take away the huts, though the tank and the ditches have to be left standing. It requires a strong case for a Court to refuse an injunction restraining a further alteration of the character of the property; but, in the case of mandatory injunction to restore to its original condition, I am of opinion that that is always a most exceptional remedy and one never to be applied except with the greatest safeguard for the prevention of waste as well as injustice.

In the present case, the order for removing the huts will be made but it is not to take effect until two months have elapsed from this date and, in the event of a partition suit being instituted and, of course, properly prosecuted, the intention is that the injunction shall not operate until the question of allotment in the partition suit has been decided.

As regards the costs of this appeal, I think there should be no order.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. XXI, r. 46 (8)—Attachment of debt—Debtor, whether can be ordered to deposit the amount in Court—Procedure—Scope of s. 151.

The Civil Procedure Code does not empower a Court attaching a debt to compel the garnishee to deposit the debt into Court if he denies it and informs the Court to that effect. [p. 603, col. 2.]

An executing Court is not bound to satisfy itself as to the existence of the debt but it can cause it to be sold or appoint a Receiver with powers to sue the garnishee to recover the debt from him. [p. 608, col. 2.]

Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be called to aid to justify an act, which instead of being necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court, not only causes or is likely to cause incalculable mischief but also perpetrates injustice to third persons who are neither parties to the suit nor bound by the decree passed therein. [p. 604, col. 1.]

Revision against the order of 2nd Additional District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, in execution case in Civil Suit No. 8 of 1908, decided on 9th September 1922.

Mr. D. W. Kathalay, for the Applicant.

Mr. J. K. R. Cama, K. B., for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—This petition of revision raises a question of jurisdiction of an executing Court to order a garnishee to deposit into Court a debt alleged by the decree-holder to be due to his judgment-debtor but not admitted to be due by the garnishee. In this case the decree-holder Bhagirathi Bai took out execution of her decree against the judgment-debtor Chinnappa. The decree was obtained on 16th January 1909 in the Court of Subordinate Judge, Poona, and a certificate of non-satisfaction was brought to the Court of Additional District Judge, Amraoti, for execution of the decree against the judgment-debtor's property within the jurisdiction of that Court. Executions were taken out from time to time and it appears Rs. 6,800 were already realised leaving a sum of Rs. 2,910 and odd to be realised by the present execution proceedings which were started on 5th January 1921. Efforts were made to execute the decree by attachment of other property but they were not successful.

On 17th November 1921 the decree-holder's pleader informed the Court that he recently learnt that Pannalal, the present applicant, had a sum of about Rs. 1,200 belonging to the judgment-debtor in deposit with him and prayed that the amount may be attached. The Court granted the prayer and directed a prohibitory order to issue under O. XXI, r. 46, Civil Procedure Code, to the said Pannalal and to the judgment-debtor. The first notice to Pannalal was returned unserved and a second notice issued for the hearing, dated 17th June 1922, was served on his agent Sundarsa on 11th May 1922. The applicant was thus prohibited from handing over the alleged deposit to Chinnappa. The agent appeared at the hearing before Mr. Vigney, Additional District Judge on 17th June 1922 and intimated to the Court that he held no money belonging to the judgment-debtor. The case was adjourned to 5th August 1922 on which date the said Judge recorded in the Order sheet that the debt was attached, and ordered sale notices under O. XX I, r. 66 to be issued, fixing 9th September 1922 as the date of the next hearing. Notice for settling the terms of the proclamation of sale was served on the present applicant on 2nd September 1922, but no notice appears to have been served on the judgment-debtor. The case was, however, dismissed for default of the decree-holder and judgment-debtor on 9th September 1922. On sufficient cause being shown, the Judge by an order, dated 28th September 1922, restored the case to file and ordered warrants to issue as prayed and fixed the case for 11th November 1922. A fresh prohibitory order was served on Pannalal through the same agent on 3rd November 1922. Mr. Vigney passed the following order :—

" 11th November 1922: D. H. by S. V. Gokhale and J. D. absent. Debt attached. For sale notices under O. XXI, r. 66 to issue for 16th January 1922."

In the meantime, there was a change in the incumbent and the file came before Mr. Jawahirlal who, on 16th December 1922, passed the following order :—

" D. H. by agent. Money in the hand of one Pannalal is attached. Now an order shall issue to him to deposit the money in Court by 3rd February 1923.

Jawahir Lal,
S. J."

The order was served on the applicant on 28th January 1923 but the latter neither appeared nor deposited the money at the hearing. The order sheet runs thus :—

" 3rd February 1923. D. H. by agent. Money not deposited. D. H. states that the amount in deposit with Pannalal is about Rs. 1,200. Let warrant of attachment of moveables to the extent of Rs. 1,200 issue against Pannalal. Case for 17th March 1923.

Jawahirlal,
2nd A. D. J."

Before the date of the hearing arrived, the garnishee Pannalal made a petition, dated 1st, March 1923, to the Court where he drew the attention of the Court to the order sheet dated 17th June 1922 and also repeated that he had no deposit of the judgment-debtor and prayed that the order dated 3rd February 1923 be set aside and, further, that the proceedings about the attachment of his property be stayed. The Judge ordered the petition to be put on 5th March 1923 but on that day in the presence of the applicant's pleader the hearing of the petition was fixed for 17th March 1923 along with the execution case; the Judge very wisely ordered that day that warrant of attachment "shall not issue" for the "present". On 17th March 1923 the decree-holder was present through his agent but the applicant Pannalal and his pleader being found absent the Court wrote "the application is filed. Warrant of attachment to issue. Case for 28th April 1923."

Feeling himself aggrieved by the Court's order, dated 16th December 1922 and 3rd February 1923 the applicant applied for copies thereof on 5th March 1923 and soon after, i.e., on 22nd March 1923, lodged this petition for revision in this Court contending that the orders were without jurisdiction and, therefore, liable to be set aside. Upon an ex parte motion this Court on 24th March 1923 ordered the stay of attachment proceedings pending the decision of this petition, and the executing Court, in obedience to the order of stay, has withheld its warrant. Mr. S. M. Parande who succeeded Mr. Jawahirlal passed an order granting liberty to the decree-holder to move the Court after the case before this Court would be decided or the order staying execution withdrawn. My object in giving this history of the proceedings before the executing Court was only to show the difference in the procedure respectively followed by Mr. Vighney and Mr. Jawahirlal in respect of the same matter. I dare say if the case had not changed hands the applicant would have been saved all the expense, trouble, inconvenience and indignities which he was required to suffer owing to the highly improper orders of Mr. Jawahirlal for which there is absolutely no authority in the Civil Procedure Code. A Judge of his standing was expected to act with greater caution than his proceedings disclose. His orders, dated 16th December 1922 and 3rd February 1923 bring to light a very deplorable condition of things and displays an utter disregard for the procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code. If the Judge had not the time and patience to open the copy of Mulla's Code of Civil Procedure, with which I presume his Court like every other Court is supplied, and look into the commentary under O. XXI, r. 46, Civil Procedure Code, he could at least have turned his eyes to the last page of the order sheet only to know what further action was necessary, and I dare say even a cursory glance at Mr. Vighney's carefully drawn up previous proceedings would have at once given him a flood of light. Unfortunately, the decree-holder's pleader was not present at the hearing. The Judge naturally fell into an error and passed an order which he had no jurisdiction to pass, namely, that the garnishee should deposit the money into the Court. He did not stop there. He still remained disillusioned on the point even at the next hearing, as shown above, because he perpetrated the mistake by committing another one of ordering attachment of the garnishee's own moveable property to the extent of Rs. 1,200 to recover the amount of the attached alleged debt. It appears that he did not care to read the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code in this behalf, even when he passed orders upon the application dated 1st March 1923 withholding the issue of the warrant for the "present". He ought to have paused to read the petition, dated 1st March 1923, and considered the situation carefully, at least on 17th March 1923, before repeating the mistake he committed on 3rd February 1923 by ordering attachment to issue. But for the prompt intervention of this Court, the applicant would surely have suffered still greater indignities and been put to serious loss.

Sub-rule 3 of r. 46 of O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code, clearly lays down that a debtor prohibited under clause (i) of sub-r. (1) may pay the amount of his debt into Court and such payment shall discharge him as effectually as payment to the party entitled to receive the same. The wording a debtor may pay is quite clear and unambiguous and leaves no manner of doubt as to the meaning of the Legislature. It does not clothe the executing Court with any power to compel the garnishee to deposit the debt into Court if he denies it and informs the Court to that effect. It is needless to point out that an executing Court is not bound to satisfy itself as to the existence of the debt. It can still cause it to be sold or appoint a Receiver with power to sue the garnishee to recover the debt from him. It was in view of the information given by the applicant's agent Sundersa on 17th January 1922 that Mr. Vighney elected to pass the right order on 5th August 1922 for sale of the debt and if the case had not been dismissed in default that careful Judge would certainly have caused the judgment-debtor's right to recover the alleged debt from the applicant to be put to auction and sold it for whatever it was worth. There is ample authority for this view as will be seen from the rulings in Maharaj Coomar Kishen Pertab Sahee v. Chowharinee Sree Bhowa Debya and others (1), Toolsa v. Antone (2) and Maharaja of Benares v. Patraj Kumar (3). There is no provision in our Civil Procedure Code analogous to that of r. 3 of O. XLV of the Rules of the Supreme Court (vide the Annual Practice, 1922) which would justify our Indian Courts to order execution to issue to levy the amount due from garnishee in the event of garnishee not disputing the debt due or claimed to be due from such debtor or if he does not appear upon summons. But even the English Law recognises the jurisdiction of Courts to relieve the garnishee from the pernicious effect of his acquiescence, where he remained inert and an order absolute was made and he became bound to pay the garnisher although no attachable debt existed at the time of the order: Randall v. Lithgow (4). For a case where this jurisdiction was exercised and the order absolute obtained under such circumstances was set aside, see O'Brien v. Killesu (5).

In the case before me there is no acquiescence on the part of the garnishee because he came at the earliest moment and apprized the Court of the alleged debt being non-existent at the date of the order. My attention has been drawn by the non-applicants' learned Counsel to the ruling in Harnath Chowdhury v. Haradas Acharjya Chowdhury (6), and it is contended that the order was justifiable. I am not prepared to accept the view for the simple reason that the words of our Indian Statute are plain and, consequently, there is no scope for the application of the doctrines of English Law in this behalf. It is next argued that section 151 Civil Procedure Code would justify the passing of the order. But I do not think that that section can be called to aid to justify an act, which, instead of being necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court, not only causes or likely to cause incalculable mischief but also is perpetrates injustice to third persons who are neither parties to the suit nor bound by the decree passed therein. For these reasons I am not prepared to uphold the orders sought to be revised. I, therefore, allow this petition and set aside the orders as being made without jurisdiction. I direct that the non-applicants shall pay all costs of these proceedings. I allow Rs. 30 as pleader's fee.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. VII, r. 11 (4), O. XXXIII, r. 7—Undervaluation of suit—Order directing amendment and payment of additional Court-fees—Order refusing leave to sue in forma pauperis—Order rejecting plaint—Appeal—Revision.

—A suit was found to have been undervalued and the Court called upon the plaintiff to amend the valuation and pay additional Court-fees. The plaintiff, thereupon, applied for leave to continue the suit in forma pauperis, which was refused. The plaint was then rejected on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to make the necessary amendment and to pay additional Court-fees. The plaintiff filed a revision against the order refusing to allow him to continue the suit in forma pauperis;

Held (1) that the order complained against had merged in the order rejecting the plaint;

(2) that the latter order was a decree and was appealable as such, and that, therefore, the application for revision was not maintainable.

KAMALUDDIN AHMAD V. RAMANAND SINGH

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the possession of certain immoveable properties at Lahore and Sheikhpura originally valued by the plaintiffs at Rs. 4,780. A Court-fee of Rs. 265 was affixed upon the plaint. Subsequently, on the objection of the defendants, it was found that the value of the property was more than Rs. 7,000 and the plaintiffs were required to make up the deficiency in Court-fees. The plaint was returned for amendment, and it was ordered that the amended plaint should be re-filed by the plaintiffs within a certain time. The plaintiffs, instead of complying with this order, filed an application to the effect that they should be allowed to continue the suit in forma pauperis. Reliance was placed in support of this prayer on the case of Thompson v. The Calcutta Tramway Company, Limited (1). The trial Court declined to accede to this prayer and rejected the plaint on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to make the necessary amendments and to pay the balance of the Court-fees as ordered.

Against this decision an application for revision has been preferred to this Court and it has been urged on behalf of the petitioners that the order of the Court below disallowing their prayer to continue the suit in forma pauperis is erroneous and should be set aside. A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondents that the order rejecting the plaint amounts to a decree and that if the plaintiffs were dissatisfied with that order, they ought to have preferred an appeal against that order and not a revision. Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din, on the other hand, contends that he does not challenge the validity of the order rejecting the plaint but only of the order by which his application to continue the suit in forma pauperis was disallowed, and that this latter order is capable of being revised by this Court. I am unable to agree to this contention, and am of opinion that the preliminary objection taken by the respondents must prevail. The order disallowing the plaintiffs' application to continue the suit in forma pauperis has now become merged in the order rejecting the plaint, and it is difficult to see how the two orders can be differentiated from each other. It is admitted that the plaintiffs could have filed an appeal in forma pauperis and that in that appeal they could have challenged the validity of the order disallowing their prayer to be allowed to continue the suit in forma pauperis. That being so, there is no reason why that course should not have been adopted in the present case. Remedy by way of revision is an exceptional remedy and is to be resorted to only when there is no other remedy available to the aggrieved party. In Sada Kaur v. Buter Singh, (2) a suit had been under-valued. The plaintiff was directed to pay additional Court-fee, and this order not having been complied with the plaint was rejected under O. VII, r. 11 (b) of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was held that the order was appealable as a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code, and that, consequently, no revision against that order could be entertained by the Chief Court. The principle laid down in that authority fully governs the present case, and I hold that the order is not capable of revision.

The application is dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

Dawson-Miller, C. J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted before the Munsif at Monghyr in July 1919 by the plaintiffs as landlords claiming, under section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, an enhancement of the rent of their tenants the defendants who held as tenures under them 20 bighas 7 cottahs 12 dhurs of land. The question for determination in the suit was whether the defendants held at a fixed rent or whether their rent was liable to enhancement. It was proved by evidence at the trial, and in fact it is admitted in the plaint, that the defendants had held for the last 20 years and more at the same rental, namely, Rs. 34-5-6 which included Rs. 1-0-6 as cess the actual rent being Rs. 33-5-0. Recently, the cess has been increased to Rs. 8 odd. In these circumstances, the defendants relied upon the presumption under section 50 clause (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act which provides that "if it is proved in any suit or other proceedings under this Act that either a tenure holder or raiyyat and his predecessors-in-interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the 20 years immediately before the institution of the suit or proceeding it shall be presumed, until the contrary is shown, that they have held at that rent or rate of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement." If that were all, then there can be no doubt upon the facts found in this case that the defendants were entitled to the benefit of the presumption under that section. By section 115 of the Act, however, it is provided that: "When particulars mentioned in section 102 clause (b), have been recorded under this Chapter in respect of any tenancy the presumption under section 50 shall not thereafter apply to that tenancy." The plaintiffs contended that, in the circumstances of this case, the particulars mentioned in section 102 had been recorded under Chapter X of which that section and section 115 formed part and, therefore, that the presumption arising under section 50 no longer applied. The question for determination really depends upon whether the particulars mentioned in section 102 have or have not been recorded as therein provided. Section 102 provides that: "When an order is made under section 101, the particulars to be recorded shall be specified in the order, and may include either without or in addition to other particulars, some or all of the following, namely:—

(a) the name of each tenant or occupant: —

(b) the class to which each tenant belongs, that is to say, whether he is a tenure holder, raiyyat holding at fixed rates, settled raiyyat, occupancy raiyyat non-occupancy raiyyat or under-raiyyat and if he is a tenure-holder whether he is a permanent tenure-holder or not, and whether his rent is liable to enhancement during the continuance of his tenure". It ought perhaps to be mentioned that section 101, referred to in the section just quoted, provides that the Local Government may, in any case, make an order directing that a Survey be made and Record of Rights prepared by a Revenue Officer in respect of the lands in any local area, estate or tenure or part thereof in certain cases and as a rule the order directing the Record of Rights to be prepared would contain the particulars which ought to be recorded and which are referred to in section 102. What happened in the present case was that when the Record of Rights was being prepared in the year 1903 there was a dispute under section 103A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that is, after the draft record was published but before final publication, and the result of that dispute was that the Assistant Settlement Officer directed that the defendants, the tenure holders, should be entered in the Record of Rights as tenure-holders and nothing more. They were so entered and no entry was made as provided in section 102 as to whether they were permanent tenure-holders or not or whether the rent was liable to enhancement during the continuance of the tenancy. The whole question was apparently left open. At all events, the particulars referred to in section 102 were not in fact entered in the Record of Rights. In the decision which was come to in that dispute under section 103A the Assistant Settlement Officer (Sic) that there was no evidence of the rent being fixed for ever and under the circumstances he merely ordered the defendants' name to be entered as tenure-holders. The learned Government Advocate who appears on behalf of the landlords-appellants in this case has asked us to say that the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer ought to be regarded as a substantive part of the Record of Rights and therefore the Record of Rights ought to read as if it stated that the defendants were not in fact tenure-holders at a fixed rate, and if that is so then the presumption attaching to the Record of Rights under section 103B ought to be applied equally to the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer as if it formed part of the record. I am unable to take this view. Under section 103B of the Act the presumption applies only to the actual entries in the Record of Rights as finally published and not to anything else. Therefore, it cannot be contended that there arises from the record itself any presumption beyond the fact that the defendants are tenure holders. In fact, the reason why no further particulars were given was that before the Assistant Settlement Officer no evidence was given which would enable him to come to a decision upon this question.

On behalf of the appellants it has been contended, however, that under section 115 the moment the Record of Rights has been prepared and any of the particulars mentioned in section 102 entered therein, then the presumption arising under section 50 ceases to apply. In my opinion, the presumption arising under section 50 only ceases to apply by reason of section 115 when the particulars required by the order of the Local Government directing the Survey and Record of Rights to be prepared have been in fact recorded. As a rule, as already stated, the order would require the particulars mentioned in section 102, as to whether the tenure is permanent or not and as to whether the rent of a tenure is liable to enhancement or not, to be recorded. In the present case they were not recorded and the appellants who rely upon section 115, coupled with section 102, have failed to satisfy the Court that the particulars required in the present case were in fact recorded. Indeed, the order made by the Local Government has not been produced but it seems to me that it is impossible for the appellants to prove that the particulars required to be recorded under that order have in fact been so recorded until that is proved and what the order contained and what the particulars required were. In this state of affairs, it seems to me, that the appellants' case upon this part of the appeal must fail and that the presumption arising under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has not, under the circumstances of this case, ceased to apply.

The next point which was urged on behalf of the appellants was that, where an entry is made in the Record of Rights that the defendants were tenure holders and nothing else it ought to be presumed that they are not either permanent tenure holders or tenure holders at fixed rates. In my opinion, it would not be right to presume that the entry in the Record of Rights meant to record anything more than was actually recorded, and where the question is left open as to whether they are permanent tenure holders or whether the rent is liable to enhancement or not it seems to me that there is nothing in the record itself from which these facts could be inferred, and certainly nothing which would create any presumption of their existence.

It was further contended that in the present case, although the rental may for the last twenty years have been the same there is some evidence to show that, shortly before that period, the rental was somewhat different and, therefore, that the presumption arising under section 50 had been rebutted. The facts in connection with this matter have been stated at length by the learned Munsif of the trial Court who found in favour of the defendants that they were tenure holders at a fixed rate and dismissed the suit.

The Subordinate Judge on appeal took the view that the presumption arising under section 50 did not apply and he granted a decree for enhancement of rent.

On second appeal to this Court the learned Judge who heard the appeal set aside the decision of the Subordinate Judge and restored that of the Munsif. From that decision the present appeal is brought under the Letters Patent.

The facts which were found by the Munsif were not dissented from by the Subordinate Judge and it has not been suggested to us in this appeal to-day that those facts are not accurate. They may, therefore, be taken as representing the true state of affairs. For the last 20 years and a little more it is clearly proved that the rent was Rs. 33-5-0. Rent suits have been brought; in some cases they included cess and in some they did not, the cess till recently was Rs. 1-0-6. Where that was included in the rent suits the rent recoverable was Rs. 34-5-6; where that was not included the amount recovered was Rs. 33-5-0 but in one case which was heard in the year 1893 the rent recovered was Rs. 33-4-17½ dams. For all practical purposes, it may be called Rs. 33-5-0. There is nothing to show whether that included cess at that time payable or whether it did not and, in these circumstances, I think it may well be assumed that this rent was exclusive of cess. If the cess is added then there is practically no difference between the rent claimed and recovered on that occasion and the rent as now recorded in the names of the defendants. The defendants, therefore, clearly established that not only for the last 20 years but for several years before that the rent they have paid has been the same rent as they are paying at the present moment. This point, therefore, raised by the appellants also fails. The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

The provisions of section 22 of the Civil Procedure Code are mandatory, and an application under that section must be made, in a case where issues are settled, at or before such settlement is made.

Gulab Chand v. Sher Singh, 35 Ind. Cas. 616; 11 P. R. 1917; 150 P. W. R. 1916; 16 P. L. R. 1917, followed.

An application under this section is not maintainable after all the issues arising out of the pleadings have been settled and an issue relating to the jurisdiction of the Court has been disposed of.

Petition under sections 22 and 23, Civil Procedure Code, for transfer of the case noted in the heading from Lahore to Calcutta.

Lala Jagannath, for the Petitioner.

Lala Mul Chand, R. S., for the Respondent.

ORDER.—This is an application under sections 22 and 23, Civil Procedure Code, in which I am asked to transfer a case pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Lahore to some Court in Calcutta on the ground that the case is triable in Calcutta and a trial there would be more beneficial and far more convenient to the petitioner. Mr. Mul Chand on behalf of the respondent objects to the transfer and points out that this application does not lie. He bases his contention on the fact that all the issues arising out of the pleadings had been settled and one issue, namely, as to the jurisdiction of the Lahore Court, had actually been disposed of before this application was made. My attention has been drawn to Gulab Chand v. Sher Singh (1), in which a similar matter came up before me. I there held that the provisions of section 22, Civil Procedure Code, were mandatory and that an application under this section must be made, in a case where issues are settled, at or before such settlement is made. On the other hand, Mr. Jagan Nath has referred me to a decision of Mr. Justice Raoof reported in Ramji Das v. Firm Brij Lal Jagan Nath, (2). A reference to that judgment does not, to my mind, show any conflict between the views expressed by Mr. Justice Raoof and those expressed by me in Gulab Chand v. Sher Singh (1). In any event, the facts are very different, for in the case before Mr. Justice Raoof it appeared that all the issues arising out of the pleadings had not been settled and that the only issue framed referred to jurisdiction and the application to this Court was made before the issue as to jurisdiction had been decided.

In the present case what appears to have happened is, that all the possible pleadings were filed by the petitioner. One of the pleas denied the jurisdiction of the Lahore Court. All the issues that arose out of the pleadings were settled and, not unnaturally, that relating to the jurisdiction of the Lahore Court was first decided. After this decision the petitioner's Counsel asked for an adjournment in order to lead evidence on one of the other issues. Time was granted and in this interval the present application was made after notice to the other side had been given. It seems to me that this application almost amounts to an attempt to get this Court to exercise its revisional powers and thus evade the decision of the question of jurisdiction that the Court below has arrived at against the petitioner.

In my opinion Mr. Mul Chand's objection must prevail and I, therefore, dismiss this application with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Jwala Prasad, J.—This is an appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya dated the 26th June 1922, refusing an application of the appellants to set aside an auction-sale under O. XXI, r. 90. The decree in execution of which the sale took place was a mortgage-decree. The preliminary decree was passed on 7th July 1922 and was confirmed on appeal on 4th May 1915. It was made final on 16th April 1917, and was amended on 13th May 1921. A petition for execution was filed on the 25th May 1921. The amount sought to be levied was over fifteen thousand rupees.

RAGHUNATH SAHAI v. DAROGA SAHU

The following properties were asked to be sold :—

(1) Three-annas pacca share equal to 8-annas katcha share by partition out of 16-annas proprietary interest in mouza Tenggara valued at Rs. 3,000.

(2) One-anna out of two-annas in the 11-annas takhta out of 16-annas proprietary interest in mouza Sokanar, etc., valued at Rs. 200.

(3) Three-annas out of 16-annas proprietary interest in mouza Pritampur valued at Rs. 500.

(4) Two-annas out of 8-annas from 16-annas permanent mukarrari interest in mouza Bhaus and Kharagpur, valued at Rs. 3,000.

(5) Two-annas out of 4-annas from 16-annas proprietary interest in mouza Rajhara Asli and Dakli together with Chak Chakukats, Nami and Benami Tappa Kot, valued at Rs. 4,000, and

(6) Two-annas out of 8-annas from 16-annas share in mouza Sikmi together with Chakukats Nami and Benami, valued at Rs. 500.

On 4th November 1921 notice under O. XXI, r. 66 was ordered to be issued for fixing valuation. The valuation of the decree-holder was accepted by the Court by order, dated the 17th December 1921, the objection of the judgment-debtors having been dismissed for default. The sale proclamation was ordered to be issued.

On the 6th March 1922, Saligram, one of the judgment-debtors, filed an objection under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code stating that the amount covered by the decree was not due, it having been paid off by the judgment-debtors Raghunath Sahai and others executing a sale-deed, dated the 29th July 1917, whereby the decree-holders purchased the following properties of the judgment-debtors :—

- (1) 1-anna 6-pies of mouza Rajhara ;
- (2) 2-annas of mouza Sikmi ;
- (3) 2-annas of mouza Nagar ;
- (4) 2-annas of mouza Bisram ;
- (5) 1-anna of mouza Bhaur ; and
- (6) 1-anna of mouza Kharagpur.

This petition was numbered Judicial Miscellaneous Case No. 19 of 1922. On the 17th March 1922, Dasrath Lal, judgment-debtor, also filed an objection under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code stating that he had purchased the entire 8-annas share of mouza Bhaur on the 4th November 1921 for Rs. 8,900 at an auction-sale held in execution of a mortgage-decree No. 147 of 1921 passed by the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Gaya, in which Saligram and others were decree-holders, and Raghunath Sahai and others were judgment-debtors (mortgagors in the present case) and, therefore, he prayed that mouza Bhaur be exempted from the sale. He also supported the petition of Saligram referred to above as to the decree having been satisfied by the registered sale-deed, dated the 29th July 1917. He further stated that both the villages Bhaur and Kharagpur were not covered by the decree. Both the aforesaid Miscellaneous Judicial Cases were disposed of on the 24th March 1922 by Order No. 35. The Court held that the satisfaction of the decree by means of the registered sale-deed of 1917 cannot be recognised and that both Bhaur and Kharagpur were clearly covered by the decree. On that very day Dasrath Lal, judgment-debtor, then put in a petition praying that 2-annas Mukarrari share of Bhaur be sold last of all, inasmuch as he had purchased 8-annas mukarrari share of that village in execution of a decree based upon a mortgage. Similarly, Saligram put in a petition praying that the properties Nos. 1 to 3 be sold last. The guardian ad litem of minor judgment-debtor applied that the properties be sold in the order as given in the sale proclamation. The Court passed the following order :—

" Let properties Nos. 1 to 3 be sold last and " village Bhaur be sold after other properties, " and the petition of the guardian of the " minors be rejected and let the bid sheet be " sent to Nazir for sale, and put up on 27th " March 1922 for orders".

The properties were then sold in the order indicated above. Property No. 1 was sold for Rs. 9,000 and purchased by Murlidhar ; property No. 2, two-annas of Kharagpur, was sold for Rs. 3,600 in the name of Dasrath Lal ; property No. 5 mouza Rajhara was sold for Rs. 4,250, and property No. 6 mouza Sikmi for Rs. 750. The decree was thus satisfied, and hence village Bhaur, property No. 4, and Pritampur, property No. 3, were not sold.

On 22nd April 1922, two applications were filed by judgment-debtors; Jagatdeo Prasad and others filed one objection and Rahunath Sahai, Ram Prasad Lal and Rameshwar Prasad filed another objection, for setting aside the sale under O. XXI, r. 90. These applications were numbered Miscellaneous Judicial Cases Nos. 37 and 38, respectively. They were heard together and disposed of by the order of the Court, dated the 26th June 1922.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the applications holding that there was no material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale and that the appellants failed to show that the properties were sold for inadequate price or that the applicants suffered any loss or injury from the sale. The decision of the Subordinate Judge is assailed in appeal. Nothing has been urged before us to show that the finding of the Court below that the appellants failed to prove that the prices fetched were inadequate is wrong. The onus to prove this was upon the appellants. The learned Subordinate Judge says that the village papers showing realizations from the villages sold were not produced and that this would tell against the case of the appellants. They also failed to show that the Road Cess Return (Exhibit 1) was acted upon.

As to the service of the processes, the Court below has accepted the evidence offered on behalf of the respondents that the processes were duly served. There was no evidence offered by the appellants of non-service of the processes. No irregularity has also been shown in the service of the processes or in publishing the said proclamations. The main contentions have been those set forth in grounds Nos. 5 and 9 in the memorandum of appeal to this Court. It is said that the Court below should not have changed the order of the properties to be sold "without there being any prayer on behalf of the decree-holders," nor should lot No. 4 have been split up into two lots.

The last objection was disposed of by the Subordinate Judge on the 24th of March 1922 in order No. 35, wherein he held that Bhaur and Kharagpur were two villages and were distinctly recited in the decree in question. There was no appeal from that order and it became final. Moreover, the order of the Subordinate Judge is supported by the decree. This contention, therefore, fails.

As to the other contention that the Subordinate Judge should not have changed the order of the properties mentioned in the sale proclamation, the learned Subordinate Judge says: "The sale of the properties in another order than given by the decree-holder appears to have been properly done, as it is admitted that these properties had previously been sold." It is conceded that there was no special direction given in the decree as to the order in which the mortgaged properties were to be sold. There was no such direction in the mortgage-bond. The properties were mentioned in the decree in the order in which they happened to be mentioned in the mortgage-bond. In the absence of any such special direction the decree-holder had a right to sell the properties in the order he thought best, in order to satisfy his decree. This is settled by authorities and is conceded in ground No. 5 of the memorandum of appeal wherein it is said that the Subordinate Judge should not have changed the order of the properties to be sold "without there being any prayer on behalf of the decree-holder." Mr. Hassan Imam refers to the petition for execution and the sale proclamations for his contention that the decree-holder prayed for the sale of the properties in the order mentioned therein and, consequently, the properties should have been sold in that order. To this Mr. Sultan Ahmed answers by referring to the proceedings which culminated in order 36 of the 24th March 1922. He says that the prayer of Saligram and Dasrath Lal for the sale of properties Nos. 1, 2, 3 and village Bhaur after the sale of the other properties was not objected to by the decree-holder, rather the decree-holder accepted the directions made by the Court, and in fact he sold the properties in the order prescribed by the Court. Therefore, the decree-holder exercised his right to sell the properties in the order in which he liked and the appellants, therefore, cannot urge that the properties were sold in that order contrary to the wishes of the decree-holder.

Mr. Hassan Imam then contends that, in determining the order in which the properties should be sold, the Court should have looked into the equities in favour of all the persons concerned in the case. Now, reference has been made to a decision of this Court reported in Jatadhari Singh v. Baldeo Lall.⁽¹⁾ That case seems to lay down that (1) the decree-holder has primarily the right to choose the order in which the properties should be sold, and (2) the Court ultimately has the right to determine the order of the properties to be sold according to the equities affecting the parties. Saligram was purchaser of properties Nos. 1 to 3 and Dasrath Lal was purchaser of Bhaur, one of the properties in lot No. 4, in execution of the decrees based on mortgages subsequent to that on the basis of which the present mortgage-decree was passed. They were parties to the present decree, being subsequent mortgagees being interested in the equity of redemption. The properties 1 to 3 and Bhaur purchased by them were liable to contribute rateably to the satisfaction of the present decree. The judgment-debtors have a right to call upon them to contribute their quota of the decree-debt in proportion to the value of those properties. It is conceded that the judgment-debtors have this right, but that they should enforce it by a separate suit. The judgment debtors would have been saved the trouble of a separate action for contribution against Saligram and Dasrath Lal if the Court had not directed the properties purchased by them to be sold last. The decree-holders in their application for execution and in the sale proclamations desired the properties to be sold in a particular order. When the properties were about to be sold Saligram and Dasrath Lal prayed for changing the order in which the properties were advertised for sale, urging that the properties in which they were interested should be sold last. The guardian ad litem of the minor judgment-debtor objected to it; the other judgment-debtors did not. The Court should have at this stage considered the equities in favour of the judgment-debtors who are now by reason of the order of the Court being driven to expensive litigation for contribution from the properties held by Saligram and Dasrath Lal. The decree-holder has not appeared before us; so (he being primarily in control of the execution sale) his intentions can be gauged only by his execution petition. In changing the order at a late stage the Court should have regard to the equities in favour of each particular party in-involved, especially when there were a number of judgment-debtors some, mortgagors, some transferees from the mortgagors, all holding properties equally liable as security for the mortgage-debt. It is said that the judgment-debtors other than the minor judgment-debtor did not object to the order of the 24th March 1922. There is nothing to indicate in the order sheet that this order was passed in their presence. There is no signature of theirs or their pleader's in the order sheet.

We, therefore, are of opinion that the order of the Subordinate Judge of the 24th March 1922 was irregular and inequitable, and the sale conducted under that order was, therefore, irregular. This irregularity in the conduct of the sale resulted in substantial injury to the judgment-debtors

The question now is what order would be equitable in the present case. We find that the properties Nos. 2 and 3 and Bhaur have not been sold, whereas they should have been sold before mouza Kharapur and properties Nos. 5 and 6 were sold. The sales of Kharapur and of properties Nos. 5 and 6 have, therefore, been irregular and have caused material injury to the judgment-debtors. These sales are, therefore, set aside. Properties Nos. 2 to 6 will now be advertised for sale after fresh sale proclamation and they will be sold in that order. The sale of property No. 1 need not be set aside. The proceeds of the sale of that property will be applied towards the claim under the decree.

The result is that the appeal is partially decreed. As the sales of all the villages, except that of No. 1, have been set aside, the appellants have largely succeeded and are entitled to the costs of this Court as well as of the lower Court.

It was proposed to appoint the fathers of certain minor defendants as their guardians ad litem and notice of this was given to the minors and their fathers. The latter did not consent to act as guardians and the Court without any further notice appointed a pleader as guardian ad litem to the minor defendants. As the pleader was unable to get any instructions from the minors the suit was decreed ex parte;

Held, that in the absence of prejudice to the minors it could not be held that the appointment of the pleader as guardian ad litem was invalid for want of notice to the minors.

Messrs. A. K. Roy and P. K. Muharji, for the Petitioners.

Mr. S. N. Bose, for S. Dayal, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—These are two applications for revision of an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Hazaribagh setting aside the ex parte decrees in two mortgage-suits brought by the plaintiffs-petitioners against the opposite party. It appears that two mortgages were executed by defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 of the suits. Defendant No. 1 had four sons defendants Nos. 5 to 8 and defendant No. 5 had two sons, defendants Nos. 13 and 14. Defendant No. 2 had a son defendant No. 9 and defendant No. 3 had three sons defendants Nos. 10 to 12. All these defendants, except defendants Nos. 1 to 5, were minors. They were sought to be represented in the first instance by their fathers. Summonses were served on all the defendants and notices of the intention to appoint the fathers as guardians were served on the minor sons and on the fathers themselves. As the fathers did not appear to consent to act as guardians of their minor sons the Court, without further notice to the minors, appointed a Pleader to represent them. As the Pleader was unable to get any answer to a registered letter sent to the minor defendants the suits were decreed ex parte, no defence having been entered. One of the major defendants having applied without success to get the ex parte decrees set aside the present applications were made on behalf of certain of the minor defendants through their mothers.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that, although the notices above-mentioned were proved to have been issued, yet because of the want of notice of the intention to appoint a Pleader as guardian the whole suit was bound to fail and the decree was liable to be set aside. The effect of irregularity in the appointment of a guardian to a suit has been considered by this Court in the case of Pande Satdeo Narain v. Ramayan Tewari (1), where it was laid down that "where a minor is properly a party to a suit, that is to say, if he is represented on the record by a guardian not disqualified from acting, the jurisdiction of the Court to try and determine the cause as against the minor is complete, and such jurisdiction will not be ousted on proof that the Court did not follow the appropriate procedure for the appointment of the guardian, for example, the provisions of O. XXXII, r. 3 (4) or r. 4 (3), Civil Procedure Code." In view of this authority it seems to me that the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in holding that the absence of this notice had the effect that the minors were not represented in the suit at all especially in the absence of any proof of prejudice to the minors. The consequence is that there is no good ground for setting aside the decrees whether under O. IX, r. 13 or under other powers of the Court.

I would, therefore, allow these applications and set aside the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and dismiss the petitions for setting aside the ex parte decrees. The applicants are entitled to their costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 24, 115—Transfer of case—Notice, whether necessary—Revision, whether lies.

An application for transfer is a particular branch of a case for which a special procedure is provided in the Civil Procedure Code, and an order on such an application amounts to a decision of a case within the meaning of section 115 of the Code and is, therefore, open to revision.

Section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code requires the Court to issue notice to the parties before it makes an order of transfer otherwise than of its own motion. An order of transfer made at the instance of one party without notice to the other is liable to be set aside in revision.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order of the District Judge of Jullundur transferring a suit from the Court of Mr. Lewis to the Court of Chaudhri Kanwar Singh. The order of transfer was passed on the plaintiff's application without notice to the defendants. Section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code requires the Court to issue notice to the parties before it makes an order for transfer otherwise than of its own motion. I cannot agree with the view taken in Farid Ahmed v. Dulari Bibi (1), on which Counsel for the respondent relies, that the lower Court's order is not open to revision. The application for transfer appears to me to be a particular branch of a case for which a special procedure is provided in the Civil Procedure Code, and the decision of such an application is, in accordance with the ruling of a Full Bench of the Chief Court in Pandit Rama Kant v. Pandit Ragdes (2), a decision of a "case." I hold that the revision lies, and that as the lower Court acted illegally in transferring the case without notice the order should be set aside.

I accordingly accept this application, set aside the order of the District Judge, and direct him to dispose afresh of the application for transfer according to law. No order as to costs in this Court.

Appeal from an order of the District Judge of Darbhanga, dated the 21st April 1923.

Messrs. P. K. Sen and A. B. Mukerjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. Siveshar Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff-decree-holder against the order of the District Judge of Darbhanga, dated the 21st April 1923, whereby he set aside the order of the Munsif dated the 24th February 1923 and directed him to allow the present respondent, who was the defendant third party in the suit, to redeem the plaintiff.

The undisputed facts of the case are shortly these :—

The predecessor-in-interest of the defendant No. 1 executed two mortgages, dated the 7th August 1907 and 9th December 1908 in favour of the defendant third party. On the 25th January 1912 he executed another mortgage of the same properties in favour of the plaintiff's husband. The defendant third party brought a suit upon his mortgages, obtained a decree, sold the mortgaged property and purchased it himself, and obtained delivery of possession of the same on the 9th of January 1918. In this suit, the present plaintiff or her husband who was a second mortgagee was not impleaded as a party. The plaintiff brought a suit to enforce her mortgage and in this suit the defendant No. 1 represented the original mortgagor, the defendant second party, held a mortgage of a date subsequent to the plaintiff's mortgage; and the defendant 3rd party, as I have already stated, was the prior mortgagee under the bonds of 1907 and 1908 and who was in possession of the mortgaged property by virtue of the delivery of possession of the 9th of January 1918. The defendant fourth party were subsequent lessees of the mortgaged property. The plaintiff in his suit prayed, first, that she may be entitled to redeem the defendant third party and, after such redemption, she prayed for sale of the mortgaged property for the sums found due to her upon her mortgage as well as the sum paid by her to the first mortgagee to redeem his first mortgage.

Various points were raised by the learned Munsif before whom the suit came on for trial; but, for the purpose of the present appeal, it is only necessary to mention that one of the questions raised between the plaintiff and the defendant third party was as to whether the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the defendant third party, and as to whether the plaintiff could bring the property to sale, if so, on what terms. The learned Munsif dealt with these points under issues Nos. 4 and 5 in his judgment. He held that the plaintiff, not being made a party in the first mortgagee's suit, the right of redemption, in so far as she was concerned, had not been extinguished and that she had still the right to redeem. Thereafter, the learned Munsif held that the plaintiff was entitled to add the sum paid by her in order to redeem the first mortgagee to the sum found due upon her own mortgage and the original mortgagor, namely, the defendant No. 1 or his representatives-in-interest would be entitled to redeem the plaintiff on payment to her of the sums found due upon her mortgage as well as the sum paid by the plaintiff to redeem the first mortgagee, and, in the event of the mortgagor or his representative or the subsequent mortgagee, namely, the defendant second party, failing to redeem the plaintiff, the latter would be entitled to bring the property to sale.

It appears that, in compliance with this decree, the plaintiff deposited in Court on the 28th of November 1922 the sum found due to the first mortgagee, namely, the defendant third party under the decree of the Munsif. Thereupon, on the 3rd of February 1923, the defendant third party applied to the Munsif for leave to deposit in Court the money due to the plaintiff on account of her own mortgage as well as the money deposited by the plaintiff to redeem the defendant third party. The learned Munsif by his order, dated the 24th February 1923 held that the defendant third party was not entitled to deposit the money, and he accordingly rejected his application for leave to deposit the money. Against this order the defendant third party went in appeal before the District Judge. Various points were raised by the respondent before the District Judge but they were all decided against her and in favour of the appellant before him. He held that the appellant before him, namely, the defendant third party, was entitled to deposit the money and he accordingly set aside the order of the Munsif and directed him to allow the appellant before him to redeem the plaintiff. Against this order the plaintiff comes in second appeal to this Court. She has also filed an application for revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code in the alternative in case it held that the order of the District Judge was not appealable.

The only point argued by the learned Counsel for the appellant is that the defendant third party, who is the first mortgagee, has no right to redeem the plaintiff who is the second mortgagee. His contention is that, having regard to the fact that the second mortgagee, namely, the plaintiff, was not made a party to the suit brought by the first mortgagee, the second mortgagee has the right to redeem, and once the second mortgagee exercises this right and redeems the first mortgagee, the latter is out of the field and he has no right in his turn to redeem the second mortgagee.

Now, the rights of the parties have been determined by the decree of the Munsif passed in the suit of the second mortgagee, namely, the present appellant. The learned Munsif, in dealing with issues Nos. 4 and 5 in the suit, observed as follows :—

“Now, the first mortgagee in this case happens to be a purchaser of the equity of redemption. Therefore, if the plaintiff pays the amount due on the first mortgage, then the plaintiff in his own turn may be redeemed by the first mortgagee.” The decree prepared by the Munsif in accordance with this judgment also directs that, in the event of the plaintiff redeeming the first mortgagee, the mortgagor or his representatives would be entitled to redeem the plaintiff on payment to her of the sum found due to her under her own mortgage as well as under the mortgage of the first mortgagee. The learned Counsel for the appellant relies upon the case of Durga Charan Mukhopadhyaya v. Chandra Nath Gupta Chowdhury (1) where the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court observed that, after a sale of the mortgaged property in execution of a decree obtained by the first mortgagee there is no right of redemption left in the mortgagor, his right to redeem went at the time of the first sale and he contends that in the Full Bench case of Debendra Nath Rai v. Ram Taran Bannerji (2), although the decision of the Division Bench in the case of Durga Charan Mukhopadhyaya v. Chandra Nath Gupta Chowdhury (1) was overruled on the question that the subsequent mortgagee had the right not only to redeem the first mortgagee but also to sell the mortgaged property subject to the encumbrance of the first mortgage, the decision of the Division Bench as regards the right of the mortgagor to redeem having been lost was not disturbed. To my mind, the case of Durga Charan Mukhopadhyaya v. Chandra Nath Gupta Chowdhury (1) does not lay it down as a proposition of law that in no case the mortgagor can be allowed to redeem after sale of the mortgaged property. The question as to whether the mortgagor would be entitled to redeem the second mortgagee who in his turn had redeemed the first mortgagor, even after the sale in execution of a decree obtained by the first mortgagee was not considered, and the learned Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court in the Full Bench case of Debendra Nath Rai v. Ram Taran Bennerji (2), observes that a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree obtained by a first mortgagee in a suit to which the puisne encumbrancer was not a party, does not displace the latter but stands only in the position of the first mortgagee and that under such sale the interest of the first mortgagee and of the mortgagor pass to the purchaser subject to the rights of the puisne encumbrancer. The Full Bench there held that the right of the purchaser in execution of a decree obtained by the first mortgagee was the same as that of the mortgagor; in other words, the purchaser was representative of the mortgagor and stood in his shoes and was, therefore, entitled to redeem the second mortgagee. The same view is expressed in Sir Rash Bihari Ghose's Law of Mortgage, where the learned author in dealing with the case of Gope Bandhu v. Kali Pado, (23 W. R. 338) observes that though the purchaser under the first decree was entitled to the outstanding interest in the mortgagor, as the puisne mortgagee was not a party to it the latter had a right to pay off the amount due under the first mortgage and that, upon such payment, he would be the "holder of the first charge" on the property with power to realise in the usual way, if the first mortgagee in his character of owner of equity of redemption did not choose to redeem (vide Ghose's Law of Mortgage, page 658, 5th edition). It is manifest that, in the present case, the defendant third party occupies the double capacity of a first mortgagee as well as the owner of the equity of redemption by virtue of his purchase and, in my opinion, he is entitled to redeem the plaintiff on payment to him of the sum found due upon his mortgage as well as the sum deposited by the plaintiff to redeem the defendant third party.

Apart from the legal position of the parties, their rights in the present case have been determined by the decree which is binding on both parties. That decree clearly entitled the defendant third party to redeem the plaintiff. Mr. P. K. Sen has referred to the wording of the decree of the Munsif drawn up in the vernacular wherein it is stated that the mortgagor and his warisan would be entitled to redeem the plaintiff, and he argues that the word "warisan" means not representatives but heirs and, therefore, the defendant third party who is not the heir of the mortgagor has no right to redeem. Mr. Shibeshwar Dayal on behalf of the respondent contends that the word "warisan" includes representatives as well as heirs. If there is any doubt as regards the interpretation to be put upon the decree we have to refer to the judgment, and, as I have already pointed out, the judgment clearly directs that the mortgagor and his representatives would be entitled to redeem. In fact, in the passage quoted by me above from the judgment of the learned Munsif, it is quite clear that the defendant third party was given the right to redeem the plaintiff.

Under these circumstances, the decision of the learned District Judge is correct and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

No question has been raised in this Court as regards the maintainability of the appeal and the revision case is also dismissed but without costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 19, 20—Mortgage—Redemption suit—Acknowledgment after expiry of period of limitation—Payment of malikana by mortgagees—Extension of limitation—Admission—Estoppel.

In a suit for redemption it is for the plaintiff to prove that he has a subsisting right of redemption at the date of suit, and he is not relieved of the burden by showing that the fact of the mortgage was admitted by the defendant at a date when more than sixty years after the mortgage was effected had expired. The admission does not operate as an estoppel and having been made after the expiry of the period of limitation for a suit for redemption cannot serve as a valid acknowledgment under section 19 of the Limitation Act.

An acknowledgment, in order to be operative under section 19 of the Limitation Act, must be signed by the party against whom any particular right is claimed.

Section 20 of the Limitation Act applies only to cases where the suit is for the recovery of a debt or legacy, and does not operate to enlarge the period allowed by law to a mortgagor to redeem his property.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated the 8th March 1923.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage alleged to have been effected by one Allah Dad, the predecessor in-interest of the plaintiffs, in favour of one Wasawa Mal who is now represented by the present defendant. In the plaint the date of the mortgage was not mentioned, but the learned District Judge has found as a fact that the mortgage in question had been effected on the 7th of November 1918. He has also found that the plaintiffs have failed to establish that their right to redeem was subsisting. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff-appellants that in 1904 the predecessors-in-title of the defendant brought a suit against the present

plaintiffs for possession of this land as mortgagees, and that it was admitted by them in their plaint that the mortgage was then subsisting. That suit was decreed in 1905 and the argument is that the existence of the mortgage having been admitted in that year the defendant is now estopped from denying its existence and from contending that the plaintiffs have no right to redeem. It is clear that the suit was instituted more than 60 years after the mortgage had been effected, and the admission made in the plaint cannot, therefore, serve as a valid acknowledgment under section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act. It is, however, argued that the allegation made in the plaint amounts to an admission of the plaintiffs' rights and that the defendant is not entitled now to set up an adverse title. This argument, however, entirely loses sight of the fact that the defendant is not in any way denying the plaintiffs' title. He still admits that he is the mortgagee and that the plaintiffs are the mortgagors. His contention simply is that the plaintiffs' right to redeem, though they are undoubtedly the mortgagors, is not subsisting. I do not think that the admission made by the defendant's predecessors-in-title in 1905 of the existence of the mortgage can in any way improve the position of the plaintiffs so far as their right to redeem the property is concerned. It was for the plaintiffs to prove that they had a subsisting right of redemption at the date of suit, and they are not relieved of the burden by showing that the fact of mortgage was admitted by the predecessors-in-title of the present defendant when more than 80 years after the mortgage was effected had expired. In my opinion, there is no force in this contention and I must overrule it.

It was next contended that the mortgage having been admitted in 1905 the defendant is now estopped from contending that it would not be redeemed. I do not see how the doctrine of estoppel can apply to the facts of the present case. The admission made by the defendant in 1905 has not made the plaintiffs change their position in any way, and I am clearly of opinion that the defendant is not estopped from challenging the plaintiffs' right to redeem.

The next contention was that the mortgagee has been paying a certain share of the crops to the mortgagors as a kind of malikana called lichh walwi up to 1905 and that this brings the suit within limitation under section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act. Section 20, however, applies only to cases where the suit is for the recovery of a debt or legacy, and does not operate to enlarge the period allowed by law to the mortgagor to redeem his property; see Anwar Husain v. Lalmir Khan (1) and Khalander Ram v. Jinola (2).

Lastly, a certain acknowledgment said to have been made at the time of the Settlement of 1872 by the predecessors-in-title of the present defendant was relied on, and it was contended that, under section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act, a fresh period of limitation arose from the date of that acknowledgment. The acknowledgment, in order to be operative, however, must be signed by the party against whom any particular right is claimed. In the present case there is no evidence to show that the alleged acknowledgment, even if it did amount to an acknowledgment under section 19, was ever signed by any of the predecessors-in-title of the present defendant. It appears from the Settlement Record of 1872 that Milkhai, son of Wasawa Mal, mortgagee, was alive at that time. He is, however, not a signatory to the statement alleged to have been made by the proprietors and the mortgagees on that occasion, and the alleged acknowledgment cannot, therefore, be held to be a valid acknowledgment in law so as to be binding upon the defendant.

There is no force in this appeal and I dismiss it with costs throughout.

The sons of a Hindu are bound to the extent of their interest in the joint family property by their father's action in alienating the same in order to pay off antecedent debts incurred by himself.

A member of a joint Hindu family is justified in alienating his share in the family property in order to pay off an antecedent debt incurred by his father, but he has no power to alienate the share of his minor brother for the same purpose.

Appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Gokul Prasad, dated the 22nd June 1922.

Mr. Ram Nama Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Kumudar Prasad and Gadadhar Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The essential facts to be considered may be stated thus: Two brothers, Sahdeo and Jagat, were members of a joint Hindu family. We must take this fact as established by the findings which have been recorded, although there has been some argument to the contrary before us. Jagat died first, leaving two sons, Ram Das and Ram Prasad, of whom Ram Das was very considerably the older. Sahdeo has died since, leaving one son of the name of Ram Rup, who is a major, and another son named Lalji who was still a minor on the date of the institution of this suit. We may take it that, after the death of Jagat, there was in existence a joint Hindu family consisting of Sahdeo, his two sons Ram Rup and Lalji, and his two nephews Ram Das and Ram Prasad. On the 30th of June 1910 two members of this joint family were majors and the rest were minors. The two major members of the family, Sahdeo and Ram Das, joined in executing a deed of sale by which they conveyed certain property to the defendants in this suit for a consideration of Rs. 699. Of this they took Rs. 39-12-0 in cash, and the balance went to pay off two mortgages previously contracted in the years 1900 and 1905. The former of these mortgages had been jointly contracted by the brothers Sahdeo and Jagat. The other mortgage was contracted by Sahdeo alone, though he purported to act for himself and his two nephews, who were then minors.

The present suit was brought in the year 1919 by Ram Rup and Lalji, sons of Sahdeo, and Ram Prasad, son of Jagat, to have this sale set aside. Ram Das refused to join in the suit and was impleaded as a defendant. Two Courts, after going into the facts at considerable length, dismissed the suit in its entirety.

A learned Judge of this Court came to the conclusion that, in view of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chander's case, the mortgages of 1900 and 1905 could in no event be relied upon as constituting antecedent debts, for the discharge of which Sahdeo and Ram Das, acting as the sole adult members of a joint Hindu family, could alienate property belonging jointly to themselves and to the minor members of the said family. He did not think it necessary to go further into the history of the transactions between members of this family and their creditors, and he seems to have overlooked the circumstance that he had before him a clear finding, whether right or wrong, that the sum of Rs. 39-12-0 taken in cash as part of the consideration for the sale was taken for family necessity. He has set aside the decrees of both Courts below and has decreed the claim of the plaintiffs for possession over the entire property specified at the foot of the plaint, including the share which Ram Das would have taken on a partition between himself and the other members of the joint family.

The case has been argued before us at some length; but it must be remembered that since the decision of the learned Judge of this Court was passed their Lordships of the Privy Council have reviewed this entire question in the case of Brij Narain Rai v. Mangala Pra- sad Rai (1). On the principles laid down in that ruling it seems to us beyond question that the sons of Sahdeo are bound, to the extent of their interest in the joint family property, by Sahdeo's action in alienating the same in order to pay of antecedent debts incurred by himself. We think that Ram Das had a perfect right to join in executing this deed in order to pay off an antecedent debt incurred by his own father Jagat, although we do not think that the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council goes the length of holding that Ram Das could for this purpose alienate the interest of his own brother in the joint family property. Their Lordships seem to us to draw a very clear distinction between cases in which the alienation is made by the father and is being contested by his sons, and cases in which alienations made by the managing co-parcener of a joint undivided estate are being contested by other co-parceners, not the sons of the person making the alienation. The conclusion we come to, therefore, is that this suit should have been decreed only to the extent of the $\frac{1}{4}$ th share which the plaintiff Ram Prasad would take in the joint family property on a partition. Setting aside the decree of the learned Judge of this Court, we give a decree in favour of the plaintiff Ram Prasad to the extent of a $\frac{1}{4}$ th share in the property specified at the foot of the plaint. The parties will pay and receive costs throughout in proportion to failure and success. The costs of both hearings in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Receiver, duty of, towards Court—Receiver appointed by one Court—Another Court, whether should appoint Receiver—Leave to sue Receiver, effect of—Possession, whether surrendered by Court granting leave.

A Receiver is merely an officer of Court through whom the Court takes possession of property, the subject-matter of a litigation, and it is not for the Receiver to take up any attitude except one of absolute loyalty and obedience to the Court appointing him. [p. 622, col. 1.]

It is of the utmost importance that, where concurrent proceedings for similar relief are taken in two different and independent Courts, no order should be passed which may lead to friction or conflict of jurisdiction. [p. 620, col. 1; p. 621, col. 2.]

Where a Receiver has already been appointed by a Court of competent jurisdiction and has taken over possession of the properties in respect of which he has been appointed, another Court should not appoint a Receiver in respect of any portion of those properties. It is not the object of appointing a Receiver to keep a third party out of possession who may be entitled to possession; and the Court will readily give leave to sue its Receiver if satisfied that there is a case to be tried, so that the claim of the third party may be tried in the presence of the Receiver. But by giving leave to sue the Receiver, the Court does not relinquish possession of the properties to the Court in which the claim of the third party may be asserted. It retains full control and dominion over the property, though it may give leave to a stranger to sue the Receiver.

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad, dated the 15th September 1923.

Messrs. Hasan Imam, S. A. Sami, S. K. Mitter, S. C. Mitter, and A. B. Mukharji, for the Respondents.

Das, J.—I am unable to assent to the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge. It is of the utmost importance that, where concurrent proceedings for similar relief are taken in two different and independent Courts, no order should be passed which may lead to friction or conflict of jurisdiction. It is because I think that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge will lead to conflict between two independent jurisdictions, the jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court and the jurisdiction of the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Dhanbad that I have come to the conclusion that it ought not to stand.

In a suit for dissolution of partnership and for partnership accounts instituted in the Calcutta High Court, by Sridhar Chowdhury, the appellant in this Court, against his brother Nilmoney Chowdhury and another, a consent order was passed on the 17th July 1923 appointing Mr. R. N. Mitter, an Advocate of the Calcutta High Court, Receiver of the partnership assets which included certain colliery properties, the subject-matter of the present suit. Now, the Calcutta High Court was without question a Court of competent jurisdiction, and it had undoubted power to direct the appointment of a Receiver to take possession of the partnership assets. This, then, was the position on the 17th July, 1923. On the 14th August, 1923 Mugniram Bangar and certain other persons instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad to enforce a mortgage executed by Nilmoney Chowdhury in their favour on the 22nd January 1920. They cited as defendants not only Nilmoney Chowdhury, the executant of the mortgage, but also Sridhar Chowdhury and the receiver. Their case in the plaint is that the suit in the Calcutta High Court is collusive with the intent and the purpose of defeating or delaying the creditors. They maintain that the colliery properties are the absolute properties of Nilmoney Chowdhury and that he was entitled to execute a mortgage of these properties as security for an advance made or to be made to him by them. I ought to mention that, before instituting their suit, the present plaintiffs obtained the leave of the Calcutta High Court to sue the Receiver.

This being the position disclosed in their plaint, the plaintiffs obtained an order from the learned Subordinate Judge on the 15th September 1923 appointing Mr. R. N. Mitter, Receiver of the mortgaged properties. The conclusion at which the learned Subordinate Judge arrived may be stated in his own words: "So, on such circumstances", says the learned Subordinate Judge, "I am of opinion that a good prima facie case has been made out that the properties in suit belong to Nilmoney; that with the object of defeating Kedar Nath and also with the present plaintiffs Nilmoney and Sridhar entered into an unholy conspiracy and acted in collusion and by their statements having little foundation and by suppressing facts which should have been disclosed, or, in other words, by practising fraud on the Hon'ble Court succeeded in no time in obtaining the appointment of a Receiver Mr. R. N. Mitter—and, in my opinion, such an appointment is hardly binding on this Court, and that this Court can appoint its own Receiver if there be good grounds." The learned Subordinate Judge then proceeded to discuss the question whether "good grounds existed for the appointment of a Receiver; and having come to the conclusion that they did exist, he appointed Mr. R. N. Mitter Receiver of the mortgaged properties; and gave him certain directions which are not reconcilable with the terms of the consent order passed by the Calcutta High Court. It is this order of the 15th September 1923 which is the subject matter of the appeal in this Court.

Now, in my opinion, the order of the learned Subordinate Judge is wholly without effect upon the mortgaged properties which are already in the custody of the Calcutta High Court by the order of the 17th July 1923. I am somewhat surprised that Mr. Mitter should have agreed to be Receiver of the mortgaged properties, for, by accepting the nomination, he has put himself in a position which is full of peril to himself. The Calcutta High Court is not a Court subordinate to the Court of the learned Subordinate Judge; nor is the Court of the Subordinate Judge in any sense subordinate to the Calcutta High Court. It is not to be expected that the Court of the learned Subordinate Judge will always accommodate itself to the orders that may be passed by the Calcutta High Court, and it is at least conceivable that conflicting orders may be passed by the two Courts, so that, by obeying the order of one Court, the Receiver may make himself liable to attachment for contempt by the other Court. I have a strong feeling that Mr. Mitter should not have compromised his position as an officer of the Calcutta High Court by accepting office at the hands of the Subordinate Judge. His conduct is open to the construction that he has surrendered the mortgaged properties to the Subordinate Judge, and this he could not have done without the permission of the Calcutta High Court, whose officer he is. A Receiver is merely the officer of the Court through whom the Court takes possession of property the subject of a litigation and it was not for Mr. Mitter to take up any attitude except one of absolute loyalty and obedience to the Calcutta High Court. And if Mr. Mitter had refused the nomination, the learned Subordinate Judge would have found himself in great difficulty, for it is not easy to understand how any officer appointed by him could have recovered possession of the properties from an officer appointed by the Calcutta High Court. But the case is free from complications, even though Mr. Mitter has accepted appointment as Receiver of the mortgaged properties. As I have said, the possession of the Receiver is the possession of the Court. The Calcutta High Court, according to the true interpretation of the consent order of the 17th July 1923, took possession of the partnership properties, including the mortgaged properties on that date. There is neither principle nor authority to support the view that any order which may be passed by the Subordinate Judge has or can have the slightest effect on the Calcutta High Court in relation to the properties of which it has assumed control. The refusal of the Calcutta High Court to surrender these properties to the Subordinate Judge will place him in a position of embarassment, and it is not in the interest of that perfect administration of justice, which it is the duty of every Court to aspire to, that the Subordinate Judge has invited this conflict between his Court and the Calcutta High Court.

The exact point was decided in Jopson v. James (1). On the 27th January, 1908, Hall issued a writ in the Supreme Court of Judicature in Nova Scotia against Antrobus, Jopson and James, claiming an account of the partnership dealings, a dissolution and winding up of the partnership and a sale of the property of the partnership. On 25th February 1908, Jopson issued a writ in the Palatine Court of Lancashire against James, Hall and Antrobus, claiming, first, a dissolution of the partnership relating to the mining properties in Nova Scotia; secondly, to have the affairs of the partnership wound up; thirdly, to have the said mining properties sold; and, fourthly, to have a Receiver and manager appointed. Hall gave notice of an application for the appointment of a Receiver and manager in the Nova Scotian action; but while that application was pending a motion by Jopson for the appointment of a Receiver and manager came before the Vice-Chancellor in the Palatine action, and on March, 16th the Vice-Chancellor made an order appointing James Blackey as Receiver and manager with liberty to him to appoint an agent in Nova Scotia. James Blackey by cable appointed James to act as his agent in Nova Scotia. It will be noticed that the application in the Palatine Court for the appointment of a Receiver was made after the application in the Nova Scotian Court, though the appointment was made first in the Palatine Court. On March 27th the Nova Scotian Court made an order appointing James as the Receiver of the partnership properties. Hall subsequently applied in the Palatine action for an order that all further proceedings in the Palatine Court might be stayed, and proper direction given for the discharge of the Receiver. The Vice-Chancellor refused the application; but on appeal the order of the Vice-Chancellor was set aside. In the course of his judgment, Farwell, L. J., pointed out that the existence of concurrent jurisdiction rendered very necessary the observance of a comity between those jurisdictions, the disregard of which would lead to most unfortunate friction. The learned Lord Justice proceeded to say as follows:—"Two points appear to me to be usual on considering whether the Court should have regard and defer to a jurisdiction with which it may come in conflict, or whether the Court can fairly expect that other jurisdiction to defer to it. One is the priority in time, and the other is the extent of the relief asked for or obtainable in the other jurisdiction." Mr. Hasan Imam has contended before us that there is no similarity whatever between the Calcutta action and the Dhanbad action. That is true enough; but in regard to the question of the appointment of a Receiver, the relief claimed is the same.

Mr. Hasan Imam, however, contended that provided he had established collusion between the parties in the Calcutta action, he was entitled to ask the learned Subordinate Judge to appoint his own Receiver ; and he relied upon Nothard v. Proctor (2). It is difficult for us to express any opinion on the question of collusion especially as it appears that the documents upon which Mr. Hasan Imam relied, were not admitted in evidence by the learned Subordinate Judge. There are sufficient materials in the record to raise a suspicion; and more than that I am not prepared to say on the materials before us. I will, however, assume that the Calcutta action is a collusive action ; but it is for the Calcutta High Court to say so and to recall the order made by it for the appointment of a Receiver. Nothard v. Proctor, (2) in my opinion, does not touch the point. It is important to remember the following dates in order to understand that case. On the 9th August 1875 Proctor filed a petition for liquidation of his debts by arrangement. No arrangement being arrived at, the plaintiff on the 31st August 1875 filed a petition for adjudication of Proctor. On 1st September, Mr. Edwards was appointed Receiver and manager by the Court of Bankruptcy. On the 7th September Proctor died, leaving a Will by which he gave all his property to his wife and appointed her sole executrix. The executrix at once turned the Receiver out of possession and possessed herself of the assets. On the 9th of October the plaintiff filed his bill in the Court of Chancery praying for the administration of the estate and for the appointment of a Receiver. The notice of motion for the appointment of a Receiver was served on the executrix on the 15th October. On the same 15th of October a suit was commenced in the Lord Mayor's Court by Blewitt, another creditor against the executrix, and, on the same day, a decree was made therein by consent for administration of the estate, and Milford was appointed Receiver. On the 19th October the motion for a Receiver was heard by Vice-Chancellor Bacon in the plaintiff's suit in Chancery, and the Vice-Chancellor, being of opinion that the circumstances showed collusion between Blewitt and Mrs. Proctor, made an order for the appointment of a Receiver and manager. This order was confirmed in appeal by the Court of Appeal.

Now, it will be noticed that no conflict of jurisdiction was possible between the Court of Chancery or, as I should say, the High Court of Justice and the Lord Mayor's Court. The Lord Mayor's Court is an inferior Court of Record, and is subordinate to the High Court of Justice. This aspect of the case was prominently referred to by Lord Justice James who, in the course of his judgment, pointed out that the Receiver when duly constituted could obtain from the Vice-Chancellor an order authorizing him to use the name of Mrs. Proctor in any proceedings before the Lord Mayor. It is a case, not of conflict of jurisdiction between two independent Courts, but of a superior Court taking the matter out of the hands of a Court subordinate to it. That, in my opinion, is the explanation of Northard v. Proctor.

It was then contended by Mr. Hasan Imam that the effect of the order of the Calcutta High Court giving leave to the plaintiffs in the Dhanbad action to sue the Receiver was that the Calcutta High Court surrendered the Receiver, to quote the exact words employed by Mr. Hasan Imam, "to the obedience of the Dhanbad Court" to be dealt with by the Subordinate Judge as his own officer. I am wholly unable to accept the contention. It is well settled that it is not the object of appointing a Receiver to keep a third party out of possession who may be entitled to possession ; and the Court will readily give leave to sue its Receiver if satisfied that there is a case to be tried, so that the claim of the third party may be tried in the presence of the Receiver. But, as Mr. P. K. Sen pointed out in the course of his very able and interesting argument, by giving leave to sue its officer the Court does not relinquish possession of the properties to the Court where the claim of the third party may be asserted ; and he relied upon Morris v. Baker (3) which seems to be in point. It was laid down in that case that, where a mortgagee of leaseholds has obtained the appointment of a Receiver, the lessor who, by leave of the Court, brings an action for recovery of the land against the lessee, and recovers judgment, cannot proceed to enforce the judgment as

It is a case, not of conflict of jurisdiction between two independent Courts, but of a superior Court taking the matter out of the hands of a Court subordinate to it. That, in my opinion, is the explanation of Northard v. Proctor.

It was then contended by Mr. Hasan Imam that the effect of the order of the Calcutta High Court giving leave to the plaintiffs in the Dhanbad action to sue the Receiver was that the Calcutta High Court surrendered the Receiver, to quote the exact words employed by Mr. Hasan Imam, "to the obedience of the Dhanbad Court" to be dealt with by the Subordinate Judge as his own officer. I am wholly unable to accept the contention. It is well settled that it is not the object of appointing a Receiver to keep a third party out of possession who may be entitled to possession ; and the Court will readily give leave to sue its Receiver if satisfied that there is a case to be tried, so that the claim of the third party may be tried in the presence of the Receiver. But, as Mr. P. K. Sen pointed out in the course of his very able and interesting argument, by giving leave to sue its officer the Court does not relinquish possession of the properties to the Court where the claim of the third party may be asserted ; and he relied upon Marris v. Baker (3) which seems to be in point. It was laid down in that case that, where a mortgagee of leaseholds has obtained the appointment of a Receiver, the lessor who, by leave of the Court, brings an action for recovery of the land against the lessee, and recovers judgment, cannot proceed to enforce the judgment as against the Receiver in possession without the leave of the Court. Now it might be said that, if the effect of the leave to sue the Receiver was that the Court relinquished possession of the property to be dealt with in the subsequent suit instituted by leave against the Receiver, no further leave was necessary to sue out execution if the plaintiff succeeded in the action against the Receiver. But the contrary was actually decided. Buckley, J., pointed out that the question was whether the leave extended beyond proceedings to judgment—whether it included the right to issue writs of possession, and he proceeded to say as follows: "In my opinion it did not. The leave given did not extend, I think, beyond proceedings for the determination of the question involved in the writ. The true way of looking at the matter seems to me to be this. Suppose that the Court, being in possession of land or chattels by its Receiver, is asked to allow proceedings to be taken between two persons to determine the title, and that leave is given. The party who succeeds ought to come again saying: 'This is my land' or 'These are my chattels, but the fruits of my victory are in your possession and I ask you to direct the Receiver to give me possession of them.' If there is nothing more in the case, the Court will give leave for possession but the party is not entitled as against the Receiver to get possession without leave—that is, without the consent of the Court in whose possession the property is." The principle that I deduce from this case is that the Court retains full control and dominion over the property, though it may give leave to a stranger to sue the Receiver. In my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge should have deferred to the jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court and declined to appoint a Receiver, especially as the order of the learned Subordinate Judge is without effect so far as the Calcutta High Court is concerned.

Apart from any other consideration, it seems to me that this is not a case in which a Receiver should have been appointed, especially after the undertaking given by the parties to keep down the interest and not to sell or dispose of the mortgaged properties. The plaintiffs' claim is for Rs. 8,00,000 for principal and Rs. 1,04,543 for interest. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the value of the mortgaged properties on the 21st March 1923 was Rs. 28,00,000. He has accepted the report of certain experts appointed in another suit to value the property. The experts valued the properties (except one which was not referred to them) at Rs. 36,00,000, and not at Rs. 28,00,000, as the learned Subordinate Judge has erroneously supposed. Besides the properties valued by the experts, there is another property which the defendants value at Rs. 5,00,000. It would appear, then, that the value of the mortgaged properties may be put down at Rs. 41,00,000. The parties gave an undertaking to bring the interest upon the principal sum regularly into Court and not to sell or dispose of the mortgaged properties. Mr. Hasan Imam expressed his inability to accept the proposal made by the defendants, as there was no undertaking to pay the interest already in arrears. But the appointment of a Receiver will not have any other effect than that of preserving the property and keeping down the interest, and I do not see how the plaintiffs could have secured an order for the payment of interest in arrears to them by the appointment of a Receiver. In my opinion there was no justification for the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge.

In the course of his argument, Mr. Hasan Imam pressed us to consider the position of his clients with reference to what he calls the collusive suit pending in the Calcutta High Court. I apprehend that the Calcutta High Court has complete power to determine any question as to collusion that may be urged before it. The arm of the Court is long enough to reach any deception that may be practised on it; but it is, in my opinion, intolerable that the learned Subordinate Judge should have been invited to hold on affidavits and in an interlocutory application that deception had been practised on the Calcutta High Court. It is well established that parties, whose rights are interfered with by having a Receiver put in their way, may, on making a proper application to the Court appointing the Receiver, obtain all that they may justly require. As Sir John Woodroffe points out in his valuable work on Receivers: "The Court has the power and will always take care to give a party who applies in a regular manner for the protection of his rights, the means of obtaining justice, and will even assist him in asserting that right and having the benefit of it."

I would allow the appeal, and set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge. The appellant is entitled to his costs both in this Court and in the Court below. The cross-appeal is dismissed. Let the hearing of the suit be expedited.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XL, rr. 1, 4—"Person," meaning of—Order refusing to remain—Receiver,—Appeal, whether competent.

An order refusing to remove a Receiver already appointed does not come either under r. 4 or r. 1 of O. XL and is not appealable. The "person" in cl. (b) of O. XL, r. 1 refers to a person other than a Receiver.

Appeal against and petition to revise the order of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of East Tanjore, at Mayavaram, dated 9th February 1923, in I. A. No. 52 of 1923 in O. S. No. 1 of 1922.

Mr. P. R. Ganapathi Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar and Rajagopala Iyengar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order Refusing to remove the 1st defendant from his position of receiver in a partition suit brought against him and another.

A preliminary objection is taken to the maintainability of this appeal on the ground that no appeal lies under O. XLIII, r. 1 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code. The clause gives a right of appeal only against orders passed under rr. 1 and 4 of O. XL. It is contended, first, by the appellant's Vakil that this is a case which would fall under O. XLI, r. 1 (a) itself on the ground that they wanted not only to get the present Receiver removed but another man appointed in his place and he, therefore, contends that this is a case where the Court has refused to appoint a Receiver. We are unable to accept this contention, for, till the present Receiver is removed, there will be no scope for appointing another Receiver in his place, and, therefore, the authority cited by him, Munilal v. Jagannath (1), which deals with a case of refusal to appoint a Receiver does not apply. Refusing to remove a Receiver already appointed is quite different from refusing to appoint a new Receiver.

It was then contended that this application should be treated as one falling under O. XL, r. 1 (b). That clause says, "Remove any person from the possession or custody of any property" and it is argued that when the present Receiver is removed, it would necessarily result in his being removed from the possession or custody of the property in suit. That argument also we are unable to support as we think that the word "person" in clause (b) refers to a person other than a "Receiver," for clause (c) clearly shows that the property removed from the possession or custody of the person referred to in clause (b) is to be committed to the possession custody or management of the "Receiver" by clause (c). We think that is impossible to bring this case under O. XL, r. 1 and, of course, it does not fall under O. XL, r. 4. Therefore, we must hold that no appeal lies. We are fortified in this view by the rulings of the Calcutta High Court in Eastern Mortgage Agency Co., Limited, v. Premananda Saha (2) and Sahebzada Faridun Shiko v. Fakir Muhammad (3). The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

It was then contended that we should interfere in revision with the order of the lower Court as the lower Court fell into a mistake in thinking that the 1st defendant was not appointed a Receiver but only a manager. There is no provision for appointing a manager under the Code. When a manager is appointed it is really another name for the appointment of a Receiver under O. XL, and in this case the appointment was actually made under O. XL, Civil Procedure Code. We do not think that the lower Court fell into any error in thinking that the 1st defendant was not in fact a Receiver appointed under the Code. There is no question of jurisdiction or any acting with material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction arising in this petition. This petition is therefore, is incompetent and was also be dismissed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Second Additional District Judge of Gorakhpur, dated the 20th of May, 1922.

Dr. S. N. Sen and Mr. K. Verma, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. A. Haider, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit in which the plaintiffs sought to recover possession of the property sold by their father Sham Lal, defendant No. 9, to Mst. Phul Kuwari in 1902 for a sum of Rs. 1,455. It is stated in the judgment of the trial Court that the vendee was the wife of Sham Lal's own cousin. The property was joint family property and the plaintiff's case was that the sale was executed without legal necessity. The sale was the subject of a pre-emption suit and the defendants are transferees from the successful pre-emptor. The pre-emption suit was decreed on payment of the full sale price. The sale in dispute was for cash paid in presence of the Sub-Registrar at the time of the execution of the deed to the extent of Rs. 1,301. The remainder of the consideration was left with the vendee for payment of three prior debts,—

	Rs.
1. A mortgage-debt due to Raghu-bar Dayal	... 20
2. Another mortgage	... 25
3. To pay off a pro-note due to Ganga Prasad	... 109

The trial Court found that legal necessity was established to the extent of Rs. 109 only and decreed the suit for possession subject to payment of this amount. The defendants 1 to 8 appealed and the plaintiffs filed cross-objections objecting to the order directing them to pay Rs. 109. The Court below dismissed the appeal and allowing the cross-objections gave the plaintiffs an unconditional decree for possession. The defendants 1 to 8 have filed a second appeal to this Court.

As regards the first two items of Rs. 20 and Rs. 25 the trial Court found that they were not due from Sham Lal but from his cousin. This finding was not assailed in appeal to the Court below and is final.

As to the item of Rs. 109 the finding of the Court below is that it is not proved that there was any such debt due to Ganga Prasad. The Subordinate Judge who tried the case had said in his judgment that the pro-note was not proved but added, without referring to any evidence on the point, "I take it that Sham Lal borrowed that money and the transfer of the property for that amount would be to pay up antecedent debt." The Court below holds that the Subordinate Judge was not justified in making any such presumption. It holds that the debt is not proved. This is a finding of fact which must be accepted in second appeal.

The appellants' case as to Rs. 1,301 paid in cash was that it was borrowed to pay off arrears of theka money due from Sham Lal to the Hathwa Raj. Both the Courts below have held that this is not proved. The trial Court held that it was at least possible that the whole transfer was collusive and made in order to save the property from liability to sale in case of the Hathwa Raj obtaining a decree. In the sale-deed it is said that this amount is borrowed to pay off lease money and for other necessities. There was a suit for arrears of lease-money pending which the transfer was made. The claim was for Rs. 2,049 but it was ultimately decreed for a sum of Rs. 484 only, apart from costs. The sum of Rs. 1,301 was certainly not applied in payment of lease-money. The amount due was not realised until 1904 and 1905 (between two or three years later) by attachment and sale of Sham Lal's property. The Additional Judge considers that this throws great doubt on the story put forward by the defendants. After detailing the circumstances the learned Judge says:—

"The inference is irresistible that the money borrowed, Rs. 1,301, was not borrowed for the purpose of paying off the arrears."

This, again, is a finding of fact which it is not open to the appellants to challenge in second appeal.

The learned Advocate for the appellants has pressed his case on two grounds,—

1. That the vendee advanced the money on the faith of a representation which she in good faith believed and was justified in believing, that the money was borrowed for this purpose and it is, therefore, immaterial whether it was really so applied or not.

2. That as the property has passed out of the family the sons cannot recover it except by showing that the consideration was obtained for an illegal or immoral purpose.

The first plea may be disposed of on the simple ground that no case based on a representation was set up in either of the Courts below. I am asked to arrive at a finding of fact that such representation was made though the question was never agitated before the Court of first appeal. If it were open to me to go into the question, the close relationship existing between the vendor and vendee might be a material point in deciding it. No plea as to representation was made in the written statement nor was any issue framed upon it. It is glanced at in one sentence in the trial Court's judgment where the learned Subordinate Judge, in dealing with the plea that the money was borrowed to pay up arrears of lease-money, says that the transferee should have satisfied herself that that suit was not a fictitious suit and that the money was actually due from Sham Lal. In the sequel, as I have already noted, he thought it possible that the whole transfer made by Sham Lal in favour of his cousin's wife was a collusive transaction. In the grounds of appeal to the Court below the only ground which can possibly be treated as bearing on this question is para. 5 which runs,—

"That the lower Court has regarded the fact that the consideration was really spent for legal necessity as not proved is irrelevant. The lower Court ought not to have relied on this fact."

This, however, is not a plea of representation. It asserts that the plaintiffs ought not to have relied on the omission to pay up the theka money as an argument against the money having been borrowed for this purpose.

GOBIND V. AMMAR

It does not assert that a representation of the existence of legal necessity was made to the vendee or that she advanced the money after due enquiry under an honest belief of the truth of that representation. It is clear from the detailed judgment of the learned Additional Judge that no such plea can have been argued before him.

The second plea is entirely untenable. It is only where property has passed out of the joint family under an alienation in lieu of antecedent debt or in execution of the creditors' remedies for such debt that it lies on the sons to prove that the debt was illegal or immoral. This was laid down in the leading case of Suraj Bansi Kozr (1) and was re-affirmed in Sahu Ram Chandra's case (2) and in the very recent case of Brij Narain Rai v. Mangala Prasad Rai (3). The distinction between an alienation incurred in lieu of prior debt and an alienation entered into for cash was the basis of the decision in Crandradeo Singh v. Mati Prasad (4), which was subsequently affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council. The principle has been explicitly re-affirmed by this Court in the case of Sahib Singh v. Girdhari Lal (5).

At the conclusion of his argument the learned Advocate, relying on a passage in the recent case of Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad Rai, suggested that if the alienation was otherwise invalid it could at least be enforced against the father's own share in the joint family property. This has never been the law in these Provinces and in my opinion their Lordships did not intend in the passage relied on to change what has long been settled law so far as these Provinces are concerned. The passage is, in my opinion, only applicable to those Provinces in which the right of a co-

The Civil Courts will not entertain a suit the object of which is to reverse a decision of a Revenue Court in a matter which is, under section 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act, within the Revenue Court's exclusive jurisdiction, and if this is the substantial object of the suit it is immaterial that the plaintiff may have framed his relief in a form in which it could not have been granted by the Revenue Court. Second Appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Farrukhabad, dated the 8th of May, 1922.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. U. S. Baspai, for the Respondents.

GOBIND v. AMMAR

JUDGMENT :—This is an appeal by the defendant in a case in which the plaintiffs asked for and have been given a declaration that they are joint tenants with him in a certain occupancy holding. The only plea pressed at the hearing of the appeal is that the suit is barred by section 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act. The facts are these :—The defendant, alleging that the plaintiffs were his sub-tenants, sued them in the Revenue Court for arrears of rent and obtained an ex parte decree against them. While this ex parte decree was in force the present suit for a declaration was filed. The defendant pleaded in his written statement that the suit had been instituted on account of the claim for arrears of rent which he had brought against the plaintiffs. It appears from the Munsif's judgment that when the present suit was decided in the trial Court an application for setting aside the ex parte decree had been preferred and was pending. That application was afterwards allowed and the learned District Judge states in his judgment that after the Munsif's decision in the present suit the Revenue Court dismissed the suit for arrears of rent.

It is now settled law that the Civil Courts will not entertain a suit the object of which is to reverse a decision of a Revenue Court in a matter which is, under section 167 of the Tenancy Act, within the Revenue Court's exclusive jurisdiction, and if this is the substantial object of the suit it is immaterial that the plaintiff may have framed his relief in a form in which it could not have been granted by the Revenue Court. The Courts will look to the substance of the matter and not to the form.

In Narain Singh v. Gobind Ram (1) the plaintiff had sought to eject the defendant as a sub-tenant in the Revenue Court but the Revenue Court had held that the defendant was a sharer in the occupancy holding. It was held that the plaintiff could not thereafter sue for the ejectment of the defendant as a trespasser in the Civil Court. In Kishore Singh v. Bahadur Singh (2) a suit for ejectment was brought against the respondents in the Revenue Court on the ground that they were sub-tenants. While that suit was pending they sued in the Civil Court for a declaration that they were co-tenants with the appellants in the occupancy holding. It was held that the suit was not entertainable. This is a very similar case to that now before me. The same principle is laid down in Baljit v. Mahepat (3) and has been recently re-affirmed in the case of Ram Das v. Dubri Koeri (4).

The present suit is barred by the principle laid down in these rulings. It was brought with the effect of setting aside a decree for ejectment which was then in force. It is irrelevant that the plaintiffs have since been able to get from the Revenue Court a pronouncement that they are not liable to ejectment as sub-tenants. To see whether the suit is maintainable we have to look to the date when it was instituted.

It may further be remarked that it is not entirely correct that the plaintiffs could not obtain from the Revenue Courts substantially the same relief which they seek in this suit. They could do so by means of a suit under section 95 of the Tenancy Act against the landholder for a declaration of their right as tenants. In such a suit the defendants could have been made parties as persons claiming through the landholder.

The suit being barred by the principle laid down in the rulings cited above the appeal must be and hereby is allowed and the suit dismissed. As on the merits the plaintiffs have been found to be in the right I make no order as to costs.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—These are four appeals against orders of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya. Appeal
No. 208 of 1922 is directed against the order of the 10th June 1922, and the other three appeals, namely, 199, 207, and 212 of 1922, are against the order of the 15th July, 1922. The appeal against the order of the 10th June relates to that portion of the order which requires the decree-holder to define the share of the sons in the properties in the sale proclamation. The other three appeals relate to the order disallowing certain objections by the judgment-debtors to the execution. In order to understand these objections it is necessary to state a few facts.

There was a decree in a suit on a mortgage which was brought against the mortgagor and his sons and two ijaradars. The suit was decreed ex parte against the father and on compromise against the sons and the ijaradars.
The defect in the proceedings was that the ex parte decree against the father was never made final ; but in the High Court the parties agreed that the name of defendant No. 1, that is, the father, should be removed from the names of the judgment-debtors against whom execution was taken out ; and, consequently, we are now concerned only with the judgment-debtors who are parties to the compromise, that is, the sons and the ijaradars.

Now, the objection to the order of the 10th
June 1922 is that as the sons are of a Mitak-shera joint family their shares are undefined and cannot be defined in the sale proclamation. It is to be observed, however, that in paragraph 6 of the petition of compromise which was entered into by the sons without joining with the father, it was expressly stipulated that on failure to pay the entire money due to the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs should be competent to bring the mortgaged properties to sale and realise the money. This implies an agreement on the part of the sons to put their shares at the disposal of the decree-holders and, therefore, amounts to a specification of their shares. The shares at that time were a three-fourths share. That has been advertised for sale and has now actually been sold. The order is, therefore, not open to attack in this part. The right of the mortgagee to put up the shares for sale is supported by the decisions of the Privy Council in Deen Dyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (1) and Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Prasad Singh (2).

CHIRAUNJI LAL v. GANGA SAHAI

The other objections are against the order of the 15th July 1922. The first contention is that the debt must be proportionately reduced because the father's share has been exempted. But the decree that is being executed is the decree on the compromise and in that compromise the parties thereto undertook to discharge the whole debt and are liable for it.

The next objection is, that one son has died since the mortgage-decree was passed and, consequently, the share ought to be reduced from three-fourths to two-thirds. But the share that is liable is determined by the mortgage and after that it cannot be subject to lapse or reduction on account of the death of one of the co-parceners.

Then, it is said that the Subordinate Judge has gone behind the decree in ordering the sale of the ijara interest. But the sale of the ijara interest follows as a matter of course because it was subsequent to the mortgage which is being satisfied.

The last objection was that the executing Court had no jurisdiction and that the execution ought to have been taken out in the Court of the Second Subordinate Judge and not in the Court of the Third Subordinate Judge, as was done in the previous execution. Whatever may have been done in the previous execution, there is no doubt that the present execution has been brought in the proper Court because it relates to a pargana which is within the jurisdiction of the Third Subordinate Judge. And the previous execution case was transferred to the Court of the Third Subordinate Judge by the order of the District Judge to whom this pargana had been assigned and therefore the present execution case was properly brought in that Court.

These were all the objections that were raised and they must all be overruled. The appeals are dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1903) Sch. I, Art. 182 (5)—Execution of decree—Affidavit as to incumbrances, whether application to take step in aid of execution.

An affidavit filed by the decree-holder to the effect that there are no incumbrances on the property sought to be sold in execution does not amount to an application to take a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Article 182 (5) of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, so as to extend limitation for the execution of the decree.

Gulsari Lal v. Ram Bhajan, 52 Ind. Cas. 116; 22 O. C. 75, distinguished.

Execution Second Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Meerut, dated the 18th January 1923.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. N. Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal in an execution case. The appellant is the decree holder. A petition to execute the decree was filed by him on the 1st of June 1918. That was an application asking the Court to transfer the decree to the Collector as the property was ancestral property. The last application was filed on the 12th August 1921 and it was objected to on the ground that it was, on the face of it, clearly barred by limitation. It is sought by the decree-holder to bring it within limitation on two grounds: (1) It is said that on the 24th September 1918 the decree-holder filed an affidavit in the Court of the Collector to the effect that there were no incumbrances on the property; (2) The next circumstance is that on the 13th November 1918 the Court after considering the Tahsildar's report and perhaps the affidavit, directed that the property should be sold in one lot. It appears from the order-sheet of the Collector's Court that on the 9th August 1918 the decree-holder was directed to file an affidavit to show whether there were any incumbrances or not on the property and the Tahsildar was asked to report if persons were willing to take the property on lease. It is argued that, on the 24th September 1918, when the affidavit was filed, there must have been an application made by the decree-holder to have the property sold. There was no written application; that is admitted; but we are asked to infer that there must have been an oral application to this effect. We find in the order-sheet that the 24th September was the date fixed for disposing of the matter and that on that date it was recorded that the decree-holder was not present. On the back of the affidavit, however, there is an endorsement of the Court directing that it should be filed. This is dated the 24th September 1918. It, therefore, seems clear that after the order had been written in the order-sheet this document was filed some time later on that date. It seems to us impossible to hold that there must have been an oral application made when that affidavit was filed asking for the sale. The affidavit did nothing more than state that there was no incumbrance on the property and it was in answer to the usual direction of the Court before the final sale of the property whether it was possible to dispose of it otherwise. Stress has been laid on the case of Gulzari Lal v. Ram Bhajan (1) but the facts there are different. In that case there was an entry in the order-sheet showing that the decree-holder requested that the sale might proceed and it was held that this was evidence of an oral application. In this case there is no such entry and we are unable to hold that any application was made on behalf of the decree-holder. The result is that we dismiss this appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Application for amendment of decree in second Appeal No. 110-B of 1922 dated 20th April 1923, decided by Mr. Kotval, A. J. C.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. R. Dixit, for the non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The only point to be considered in this petition is whether the decree fixing the price of redemption at Rs. 5,777-11-0 and payable on 20th October 1923 is drawn up in accordance with the judgment of this Court. The operative part of the judgment which was passed by Mr. Kotval, A. J. C., on 20th April 1923, is as follows :—

"The decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed and plaintiffs' claim decreed with costs throughout. The usual decree for preliminary decree for foreclosure in respect of Rs. 2,800 for principal and interest will be drawn up. I fix the 20th October 1923 as the date on or before which the payment should be made."

(1) 52 Ind. Cas. 116; 22 O. C. 75.

DURGA KUNWAR v. CHUNNA KUNWAR

I have worked out the details of the aforesaid price of redemption. They are as follows :—

Rs. 2,800, the amount of principal and interest due up to date of suit (6th July 1920) after giving up Rs. 182-5-0 by which the interest exceeded the principal sum according to the rule of Damdapat.

Rs. 2,212, simple interest on Rs. 2,800 at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem from date of suit to the due date fixed.

Rs. 274, plaintiffs' costs of first Court.

Rs. 240-11-0, Do of first appeal.

Rs. 251,, Do of second appeal.

Total. Rs. 5,777-11-0.

The suit was dismissed by the first two Courts, but it was decreed in second appeal. In paragraph 7 of the plaint the plaintiffs had asked for a decree for Rs. 2,800 and interest thereon at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem from date of suit to date of payment to be fixed by Court. It is argued on behalf of the defendants-applicants that as there is no express direction in the judgment for calculating interest from date of suit to the due date fixed, and, further, as no rate of interest is also specified, Mr. Kotval, A. J. C., must be deemed to have refused to award any interest pendente lite. Reliance is placed in support of this contention upon the rule of Damdapat which restricts the interest claimable by plaintiffs to a sum equal to the principal sum only. It is contended, further, that on the same principle the amount of the price of redemption must not be in excess of what is claimed subject to the rule of Damdapat as applied at the date of suit. On the other hand, the plaintiffs contend that the expressions "the plaintiffs' claim decreed with costs" clearly import a conscious decision to grant to plaintiffs a decree for their entire claim including interest pendente lite.

The defendants draw my attention to the following clause in the judgment: "the usual preliminary decree for foreclosure in respect of Rs. 2,800 for principal and interest will be drawn up." Their learned Advocate interprets this clause to mean that the intention was to fix the price of redemption at Rs. 2,800 only, besides costs. The decree as drawn up exactly fits in with the expression "the plaintiffs' claim decreed with costs throughout" and is in conflict with the other clause "the usual preliminary decree, etc., will be drawn up." If the word "interest" in the latter clause stands for "interest before and after suit" then the two clauses also are reconcilable. In view of the discretion vested in a Court by section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code in the matter of awarding interest after suit even in cases to which the rule of Damdapat applies at the date of suit, I am not prepared to hold that Mr. Kotval, A. J. C., did not intend to award any interest from date of suit to the due date fixed for redemption at the simple rate of interest at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem. That such interest is allowable and allowed is clear from his own ruling in Narayan v. Nathmal (1). Viewing the decree in this light, I do not see any variance between it and the judgment.

The application for amendment, therefore, stands dismissed with costs. I allow Rs. 30 as Counsel's fee.

By an arrangement entered into between a Hindu widow and the next reversioner of her husband it was agreed that the latter should remain in possession of certain property as trustee for the widow during his lifetime, without power of alienation and that the widow should receive a certain sum as maintenance. It was further provided that, after the reversioner's death, the property should go to his sons, if any should survive, and in default of sons it should go to the widow. The reversioner made an alienation during his lifetime, and after his death the widow brought a suit for possession of the property against the transferees of the reversioner's transferee describing the reversioner as a trustee and stating that the cause of action had accrued to her on the death of the reversioner. The trial Court dismissed the suit as time-barred. In appeal the widow urged that the reversioner was only a life-tenant and as the widow was not entitled to possession till his death, limitation began to run only from his death :

Held, (1) that the arrangement entered into between the widow and the reversioner was perfectly legal and did not offend against any of the provisions of Chapter II of the 'Transfer of Property Act' ;

(2) that the reversioner being merely a life-tenant, the widow's right to claim possession accrued on his death and limitation began to run from the date of his death ;

(3) that the widow was entitled to put forward an alternative view of her case before the Appellate Court as it was based on the allegations which were contained in the plaint.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Appellant. .

Messrs. K. N. Katju and A. P. Dube, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in the Court of first instance is the appellant here. She brought this suit for recovery of certain property on the following allegations. Raj Bahadur and Kunwar Bahadur were two first paternal cousins. Raj Bahadur was the sole owner of the property in dispute. In the life time of Raj Bahadur there was a litigation between him and Kunwar Bahadur in which Kunwar Bahadur lost. On the death of Raj Bahadur, however, Kunwar Bahadur again laid claim to his property. The dispute was referred to three arbitrators on the 15th of August 1895 and they made an award the next day. (This is a registered document and a copy of which is on the record). By this document Kunwar Bahadur was to remain in possession of the property as a trustee for the plaintiff and was to pay her a certain amount of maintenance. On the death of Kunwar Bahadur the plaintiff became entitled to the possession of the property. But in his life-time, Kunwar Bahadur made a transfer and his transferees made further transfers. The widow of Kunwar Bahadur and the present holders of the property are the defendants in the suit.

Both the Courts below dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation. The learned Munsif decided certain other points raised by the defendants but the learned District Judge did not enter into those matters. The lower Appellate Court held that either Kunwar Bahadur was a full owner or was a trustee as is stated by the plaintiff herself. In either view, the alienation having taken place so far back as in 1897, the suit could not be treated as being within time.

In this Court it has been urged that, under the terms of the award, the right to recover actual possession accrued to Musammatt Durga Kunwar, the appellant, only after the death of Kunwar Bahadur and that the suit was not barred by time. It is common ground that Kunwar Bahadur died on the 31st of May 1916.

The learned Counsel appearing for some of the respondents has urged that to allow the appellant to argue this point would be to allow her to set up a new case altogether. He has cited several cases but I do not propose to notice all of them, for the simple reason that each of these cases was decided on its own facts. In the case of Ilahi Khan v. Sher Ali Khan (1), two sets of plaintiffs brought a suit for recovery of their respective shares in a house by means of partition. It was found that one of the defendants and one set of the plaintiffs had been out of possession. The set of plaintiffs who were found to be in possession asked that their share should be augmented by reason of the fact that the other parties to the suit had lost their share by adverse possession on the part of the co-owners. It was held that this was a new case and it could not be urged. The Full Bench case of Balmakund v. Dalu (2), was distinguished. The Privy Council case of Syedani Mahomeda Khatun Chowdhurani v. Mahomud Elahabad Khan Pani (3), is also distinguishable. In that case a lady claimed the setting aside of a deed of gift and asked for an account in respect of the profits of the entire property covered by the gift. It appears that she was going on a pilgrimage and, before doing so, she transferred the entire property to her nephew by way of a gift and the nephew executed an agreement that, in case she came back alive, he would give her one-quarter of the income from the property. The plaintiff's suit for the setting aside of the gift failed. Then she said that she ought to get at least one-quarter of the income from the property. Their Lordships of the Privy Council said that the general issue as to whether the defendant was liable to render an account of the entire property did not cover the case for rendition of account in respect of the quarter share. This case also is quite distinguishable.

(1) 26 A. 831.

For the appellant the case of Radha Mohan Mundul v. Jadoomonee Dossee (4), decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council, has been cited. In that case a lady sued for possession of certain property as an heir to her late husband. It was found that the property was an endowed one but her husband was one of the Shebaites. It was found that even if she could not succeed as an heiress she could certainly succeed as a Shebait, on succession to that title on the death of her husband. She was allowed to succeed on the latter title. In the Full Bench case of Balmakund v. Dalu, the plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of property on the ground that he had leased it out to the defendant. The lease was not proved, then the plaintiff asked to be allowed to succeed on the ground of his title to it. It was held that he was entitled to succeed. It will thus be seen that each case must be decided on its own facts. In the case before me, the plaintiff set up specifically her title and her right to possession under the award. The only point on which she differs from her allegations made in the plaint is this. In the plaint she said that the position of Kunwar Bahadur was that of a trustee for herself.

Now her learned Counsel urges that Kunwar Bahadur had only a life interest in the property and no more. Can we then say that the plaintiff is really so changing her case that it would be a just and proper act to estop her from urging what were the positions of the respective parties under the award. Construction of a document is not an easy matter. Eminent Judges have taken different views of the same document. Examples need not be quoted. The plaintiff is a woman who probably does not even know the characters in which the award is drawn up. She was acting only on legal advice in saying that the position of Kunwar Bahadur was that of a trustee. Under the advice of other Counsel she is now saying that under the same award Kunwar Bahadur's position was that of a life tenant only. She distinctly based her claim on the award and she distinctly stated that her cause of action arose on the death of Kunwar Bahadur. She is not altering or amending any of these allegations. In my opinion, the plaintiff is entitled to urge the new view and it is open to this Court to look into the award and to find for itself what were the legal positions of the parties to the award.

The award has been read out more than once and it has been commented upon. It appears that several cases were instituted by the appellant and Kunwar Bahadur against each other, on the death of Raj Bahadur, the husband of the appellant. The arbitrators decided that these cases should be withdrawn. They said that Durga Kunwar should have possession over the moveables; that her name should be recorded in the revenue papers, and that she should get a substantial amount of maintenance, namely, Rs. 800 and odd a year. The arbitrators decided that Kunwar Bahadur was to be in possession and to manage the property but must not have any power of alienation. This is very important. They further decided that on the death of Kunwar Bahadur if any son survived him that son should get the property, and in default of the son, the property should go to the two widows, namely, the appellant and the widow of Kunwar Bahadur in equal shares. Whether we regard the award as the handy work of the three arbitrators or as an agreement between the two claimants, there can be no two opinions about its binding character. If Durga Kunwar's statement in the plaint be true that there was a litigation between Raj Bahadur and Kunwar Bahadur in respect of this property and Kunwar Bahadur lost, the property in suit was the absolute property of Raj Bahadur and Durga Kunwar was the only heir. Kunwar Bahadur would be the reversioner. The reversioner and the life owner Durga Kunwar could certainly agree between themselves as to how the property was to be enjoyed. The only limitations to their agreement were those that are imposed by the provisions of Chapter II of the Transfer of Property Act. I have carefully examined the award and I do not find that any of the provisions of Chapter II of the Transfer of Property Act have been contravened. It was open to the parties or the arbitrators to decide that Kunwar Bahadur would have a life interest and that on this death the property would go to his son, if one survived him, and in default it would go to the persons living at the death of Kunwar Bahadur. This was perfectly a legal arrangement. It was distinctly stated in that award that, so long as Durga Kunwar got her maintenance, she had no right to have the arrangement set aside. The mere fact that Kunwar Bahadur sold the property could not give her any right to bring a suit for setting aside the award and recovery of possession. Even if she could bring such a suit, there was no bar to her suing now on the death of Kunwar Bahadur. The cause of action for the suit arose on the death of Kunwar Bahadur and not earlier. It will, however, be a matter to see whether Durga Kunwar is entitled to the entire property or to only half the property, the other half going to respondent No. 1, Chunna Kunwar, the widow of Kunwar Bahadur.

Such being my opinion the appeal succeeds. I set aside the decree of the Court below which was on the preliminary point of limitation. I remand the appeal under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, to the Court below with the direction that it will re-enter it on the register and dispose of it according to law. Costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

Case-law discussed.

Application for review of decree in Second Appeal No. 352 of 1919 dated 20th December 1922, decided by Additional Judicial Commissioner.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Appellants.

Sir Bipin Krishna Bose and Mr. Chitale, for the Respondents.

The facts of the case will appear from the following judgment of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner delivered in the appeal, namely :—

The appellant was the plaintiff and sued in the Court of the 2nd Munsif, Arvi, for joint possession of a third share of certain sir fields situated at mouza Khambit on the ground that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 leased an undivided one-third land to him in perpetuity. Both Courts have held, on the authority of Sumera v. Pemchand (1), that such a suit does not lie and dismissed the claim. In that case it was held that, under the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, there can be no tenancy in respect of a fractional share of a field or fields not defined by metes and bounds. I am referred to Nilkanth v. Bhagwant (2). That case does not seem to me to be applicable. The appellant has applied asking that if, in the opinion of this Court, the relief prayed by him cannot be granted, he prays that permission be granted to him for amending his plaint by adding a prayer that defendants be made to partition the fields in dispute and demarcate the one-third that is leased to him and to put him in possession of it. I see no reason to grant this prayer. The case had proceeded ex parte against the defendant and to allow this amendment would be to change the nature of the suit. There is no doubt that, under the authority quoted in Sumera v. Pemchand (1), the case has been rightly decided. This appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

ORDER.—I have had this case re-argued and am exactly of the same opinion as I was before. It is certain that the applicant is not suing as a proprietor or a part-proprietor. It is equally certain that his claim for joint possession of a one-third of the sir fields in suit is based on his position as a tenant. The conclusion come to in Sumera v. Pemchand (1) finds echo in other cases under the Bengal Tenancy Act, where the language in substance is the same with reference to a holding. In Baidya Nath De Sarkar v. Sheikh Ilum (3) it was held that the term "holding" as used in section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act means an entire holding and in Haribole Brohmo v. Tasinuddin Mondul (4) it was laid down that an undivided share of lands comprising a holding does not fall within the definition of a holding given in the Bengal Tenancy Act. Another case in point is Hari Charan Bose v. Runjit Singh (5). It cannot be said that what plaintiff claims in the present suit is a holding. It seems to me that the case of Sumera v. Pemchand (1), above referred to, does apply, and is an effective answer to the plaintiff's case laid.

I again see no reason for granting permission for amending the plaint by the addition of a prayer for partition of the field, and to demarcate the one-third said to have been leased to the plaintiff. The lease itself contains the extraordinary provision that the lessor reserved the occupancy rights in the sir. I see no reason to change or alter my judgment of the 20th December last.

I dismiss this application of review. The applicant will pay his own and the non-applicants' costs. I fix Rs. 50 as pleader's fees.

A plaintiff professing to appeal under O. XLI, r. 4 of the Civil Procedure Code, is not entitled to proceed with his appeal without making the other plaintiffs parties thereto as respondents.

It is only in the case of a son or other descendant that a person taking property by survivorship can be joined as a legal representative under section 53 of the Civil Procedure Code. The section does not apply to the case of a nephew succeeding by survivorship.

Second appeal from the decree of the Second Additional Judge of Gorakhpur, dated the 5th of May, 1922.

Messrs. Jang Bahadur Lal and Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. D. Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The relationship of the parties to this suit would appear from the following pedigree :—

BALKARAN LAL v. MALIK NAMDAR

Daljit Lal and Zalim Singh mortgaged the suit property in year 1898 to the defendant Malik Namdar. Malik Namdar subsequently brought a suit on his mortgage impleading the mortgagors and Daljit Lal's son Basdeo Lal. The suit was compromised and resulted in a decree for sale of the property. This decree was made absolute in the year 1912 in proceedings to which the principal appellant Kamla Prasad was also a party as was also the first appellant Balkaran Lal. The plaintiffs in the suit out of which this appeal arises were,—

- (a) Daljit Lal and his son Basdeo Lal,
- (b) Balkaran Lal and his three sons, and
- (c) Kamla Prasad.

Their claim is to recover the property on the ground that the decree absolute for sale obtained by Malik Namdar in 1912 is not binding on them, the property being joint family property which was mortgaged without legal necessity.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that there was legal necessity for the sale and dismissed the suit on this ground. Kamla Prasad alone appealed but stated in his memorandum of appeal that he was appealing on behalf of all the plaintiffs under O. XLI, r. 4. The learned Additional Judge has dismissed the appeal on two grounds; first, that Kamla Prasad was bound by the final decree of 1912 to which he was a party, and second, that he was not entitled to appeal on behalf of the other plaintiffs.

Before dealing with the other points I may note that the view was expressed by two Judges of this Court in Ambika Prasad v. Jhinak Singh (1) that a plaintiff professing to appeal under O. XLI, r. 4 is not entitled to proceed with his appeal without making the other plaintiffs parties thereto as respondents. The passage is on page 289. The learned Judges say,

"The objection is sufficiently met by another case, that of Balaram Pal v. Kanysha Majhi (2). This case seems to us to be absolutely in point. It was laid down there that where one of several plaintiffs prefers an appeal in which the other plaintiffs are also interested, r. 4 of O. XLI of the Code of Civil Procedure does not authorise him to proceed with the appeal without making the other plaintiffs parties thereto."

(1) 71 Ind. Cas. 821; 45 A. 286; 21 A. L. J. 915; (1923) A. I. R. (A) 211.

(2) 58 Ind. Cas. 548.

In this view it does not appear what locus standi the remaining plaintiffs have to appeal to this Court against a decree to which they were not parties. In his appeal to the Court below Kamla Prasad joined no one as a respondent except the defendants Malik Namdar and Daljit Lal.

In answer to the first finding of the learned Judge it is argued on behalf of Kamla Prasad that he must have been joined in the appeal in his capacity of a member of the joint family as legal representative of Zalim Singh. I have not been referred to any judgment to show how he came to be joined, but as Zalim Singh had died before the final decree was passed it may be taken as probable that this was correct. It is, therefore, urged that it was not open to him to urge any plea which Zalim Singh himself could not have urged, and Zalim Singh being one of the original mortgagors could not have pleaded that the mortgage was without legal necessity. It was, however, open to Kamla Prasad to plead that he was not the legal representative of Zalim Singh and that the decree was not binding on him as he claimed under an independent title. It is only in the case of a son or other descendant that a person taking property by survivorship can be joined as a legal representative under section 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure and it has recently been held by a Bench of this Court that the section does not apply to a nephew. [Jaganmath Singh v. Moti Lal (3)], Kamla Prasad was the nephew of one of the mortgagors and the brother of the other. It appears to me, therefore, that it was open to him to plead that he held under an independent title and could not be joined as a party in the proceedings for preparation of the final decree. Not having done so he must be held to be bound by the decree. If he was bound by the decree he was not entitled to appeal from it under O. XLI, r. 4 on behalf of plaintiffs who were not parties to the decree, e.g., Sant Bakhsh and Sahdeo, while those who were parties are equally bound by it. In this view, the decree of the Court below is correct and I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

An executing Court has only to interpret the decree under execution. It cannot go behind it or interpret it in a manner wholly repugnant to the tenor of the judgment on which it is based.

Plaintiff obtained a lease from a Hindu widow for a certain number of years. On the re marriage of the widow defendant, who was the next reversioner, got into possession of the land. In a suit by the plaintiff to recover possession it was held that the lease was not for necessity and was not binding on the defendant and that the latter was, therefore, entitled to possession of the land. It was, however, further directed that the defendant must pay to the plaintiff a certain sum of money which had been found to have been binding on the property:

Held, that under the decree defendant was entitled to continue in possession of the property and was also entitled to mesne profits, and plaintiff was not entitled to mesne profits of the land but was only entitled to the sum of money found by the Court to have been binding on the property.

Appeal against the decree of 1st Additional District Judge, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 540 of 1921, dated 3rd July 1922.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Narain was the last male holder of Survey No. 38, area 10 acres 30 gunthas, rent Rs. 22 of mouza Karla. He died in the rainy season of 1918 after sowing the crops: on 29th November 1918, which was soon after his death, the field was leased to plaintiffs by his widow Saru for 35 years in consideration of Rs. 1,500 out of which Rs. 1,053-8-6 were paid to Narain's creditors. The widow re-married in April or May 1919 and the defendant, who is Narain's sister, became entitled to immediate possession of the property as a reversionary heir to the estate of Narain. Bani accordingly entered into possession of the land in July 1919. The plaintiffs, therefore, sued to recover back possession of the land for the term of the lease. This suit was instituted on 12th September 1919. The defence was that Saru was not justified in alienating the property and that the transfer by lease could not enure beyond her lifetime, and that, she was willing to pay Rs. 819-1-6 to plaintiffs on account of the consideration necessary which was utilized towards the liquidation of Narain's debts. This offer was made on 20th April 1920.

The first Court held that, inasmuch as the consideration of the lease partly utilized in payment of the debts of Narain, the lease was binding as against the reversioner. The first Court thought that for that part of the consideration which consisted of Rs. 1,053-8-6 the lease must be held for the reduced term of 20 years. The plaintiffs accordingly got a decree in the following terms:—

"That the defendants do put plaintiff in possession of the field till 1941 A. D. or if he claims mesne profits for these two years then till 1939 A. D. when he shall deliver possession thereof to defendant No. 1."

Against this decree, dated 19th March 1921, defendant No. 1 filed an appeal to Additional District Judge on 16th June 1921 and urged following grounds:—

1. That the lower Court should not have awarded possession to the plaintiffs, but only put the defendants on terms, if necessary.
2. That the lower Court has erred in law in awarding possession as a lessee to the plaintiffs to the prejudice of the rights of the appellant.
3. That the lower Court should have retained possession of the appellant as owner thereof.
4. That the lower Court should not have awarded mesne profits to the plaintiffs, and it has also not arrived at the correct amount, but should have fixed it at the estimate given by the appellant.

The plaintiffs filed the following cross-objections on 2nd August 1921:—

1. That the learned Munsif should have decreed possession to the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 (plaintiffs) for the full term of their lease, viz., 35 years, and should not have reduced the term to 20 years.

BANI v. NARSOO

2. That the learned Munsif should have held the plaintiffs' lease to be for adequate consideration and for full value.

Each party was thus dissatisfied with the decree as given by the first Court and each desired its reversal so that they or she may get the right to possess the land declared in their or her own favour. The appeal was heard on 24th August 1921 and the judgment was delivered on 29th August 1921 by R. S. S. B. Chitnavis I may reproduce a few passages from it :

'In the present case no attempt is made by plaintiffs to prove the necessity for Mt. Saru to enter into this transaction of lease. . . There is no evidence that the creditors had pressed Saru for those debts. Narain died before he gathered the harvest. There is no evidence given, as to what Saru did with the produce of the year 1918-19. The very fact that she remarried within six months of the execution of the deed of lease shows that she did not care to find if the transaction would be prudent and beneficial. As a matter of fact, the lower Court has found that the lease for 35 years was not justified at all in view of the letting value of the land. On these findings of the lower Court the only course open to it was either to set aside the lease asking the defendant to refund the amount in respect of which legal necessity was established or to uphold the lease as it is. It was not in the power of the Court to grant a new lease on the original trunk.'

The plaintiffs' contention before the lower Appellate Court was that the transaction should not be set aside as the major portion of the consideration is justified by legal necessity. The lower Appellate Court finds that "the present lease appears to be purely imprudent and is not justified at all. It was, so to say, a reckless transaction. . . She did not care to see if the transaction was proper and fair. I hold that the transaction is not justified by necessity, that it was imprudent and not binding on the appellant. Mt. Bani is, however, bound to refund to plaintiffs-respondents the sum of Rs. 1,053-8-6 which the latter have paid to Narain's creditors as she is benefitted to that extent." The lower Appellate Court, therefore, set aside the decree for possession and on 29th August 1921 passed a money-decree in lieu thereof for payment of Rs. 1,053-8-6 within two months and directed delivery of possession in the event of non-payment of the amount in time.

The plaintiffs were not satisfied with this and, therefore, came up to this Court in second appeal No. 10-B of 1922, but their appeal was dismissed under O. XLI, r. 11, Civil Procedure Code, on 11th April 1922. An application for review of judgment was also made but was withdrawn on 19th December 1922.

Instead of waiting for the confirmation of the decree dated 19th March 1921 of the first Court in appeal, the plaintiffs, on 22nd March 1921, applied for possession of the field until 1924 and got possession on 5th April 1921. The appeal of the defendant No. 1 was successful and she deposited the amount into Court on 19th September 1921 and on 6th October 1921 possession of 'the land with crops thereon were delivered to her. The Court, after fixing the value of the crops at Rs. 950, decided on 5th November 1921 that defendant No. 1 was entitled to the value of the crops. Possession of the land with crops was redelivered to defendant No. 1 on 6th November 1921.

Against this order dated 5th November 1921 an appeal was preferred by the plaintiffs and it was held that the crops were the property of plaintiffs, and defendant No. 1 had no right to them. The present appeal by defendant No. 1 is against this order on the execution side. The order has the force of a decree and hence second appeal lies. The decision of this appeal hinges upon the right interpretation of the judgment and decree passed by the Appellate Court on 29th August 1921. The lower Appellate Court thinks that in the Appellate Court each party had partially succeeded. That the Appellate decree involved clear implication a recognition of the plaintiff's right to possession till payment of Rs. 1,053-8-6 to them. It decreed defendant No. 1 to deliver possession because she was at date of suit in possession. From the order for delivery of possession it did not, therefore, follow that the Appellate Court recognized as lawful the defendant's possession until payment of the amount. The conclusion arrived at was that plaintiffs were entitled to remain in possession until defendant No. 1 paid or tendered the amount of Rs. 1,053-8-6 and that defendant No. 1 had no right to demand or take possession before such payment.

In my opinion, the lower Appellate Court has not correctly interpreted the judgment and decree dated 29th August 1921. The decree and the judgment, instead of affirming the plaintiffs' right to possession negatives it in very strong terms. The following observations in particular in the judgment of R. S. S. B. Chitnavis, Additional District Judge will clearly show that, in the opinion of the learned Additional District Judge, the lease was "purely imprudent" and "not justified at all." "It was, so to say, reckless transaction." The widow "did not care to see if the transaction was proper and fair. . . . the transaction is not justified by necessity. . . . it was imprudent and not binding on the appellant. Mt. Bani is, however, bound to refund to plaintiffs-respondents the sum of Rs. 1,053-8-6. . . . as she is benefited to that extent."

These extracts leave no doubt as to the meaning of the adjudication given by the Appellate Court on 29th August 1921. In face of this strong and vehement condemnation of the lease, it cannot be contended for a moment that that Court did think of affirming the right of the lessee to retain possession of the land for the term of the lease or even for a shorter term on until payment of the amount by the reversioner. It declared that the lease is not binding on the reversioner. The effect of this declaration was to hold that the lease gave the lessee no right to possess the land beyond the widow's lifetime (here beyond the date of her civil death by remarriage) and affirmed the right of the next reversioner to immediate possession on such death. This contingency happened in April or May 1919. That judgment nowhere says that the defendant Bani's act of entering into possession was unlawful and that, therefore, she must vacate, but it has simply held that before ordering her to vacate, she should be given a chance to pay up the amount which formed the valid consideration of the lease. The whole tenor of the judgment is from one end to the other a negation of the rights created under the lease. The direction of the Court to defendant No. 1 to reimburse plaintiff with the amount of the debts paid out of the consideration of the lease, is not a direction intended to enforce the terms of the lease but only a recognition of the equity which a reversioner suing to recover back alienated lands is usually ordered to do to the transferee who was out of pocket and whose transfer is adjudged null and void or is set aside. That the Judge looked upon this equity in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents Nos. 1 and 2 as nothing higher than one entitling them to a money claim is clear from the use of the expression "money-decree granted to them" at the end of the judgment.

Under these circumstances, there is no scope for any other interpretation being put on the judgment and decree. The executing Court has only to interpret the decree. It cannot go behind it or interpret it in a manner wholly repugnant to the tenor of the judgment on which it is based. The mere fact that, in view of the recent Privy Council decision in Banwari Lal v. Mahesh (1), there was scope for holding that the possession of the alienee could be treated as perfectly lawful is no ground for putting that construction upon the judgment and decree which proceeded upon the very negation of such a view. If the matter had to be decided apart from and independently of the decision already arrived at on 29th August 1921 and not as an executing Court, I dare say there is much force in what the lower Appellate Court Mr. D. K. Kolatkar, Additional District Judge) has written, but I am not prepared to accept his view as correct in preference to the view already taken on 29th August 1921, which is nothing short of an entire condemnation of the lease as being not binding against defendant No. 1. The parties are conclusively bound by it on the principle of res judicata and they cannot reagitate it on the execution side.

I, therefore, hold that the decree, dated 29th August 1921, while reversing the decree of the first Court at the instance of the defendant No. 1 did not intend to affirm the alienee's right to possession at all but, on the contrary, negatived it, and affirmed the reversionary heir's right to immediate possession and that the direction in the decree for payment of Rs. 1,053-8-6 within two months, did not in any way qualify her right to such possession. The further direction for delivery of possession in default of payment was only in the nature of a forfeiture clause for enforcement of timely payment, or a provision for a contingency which might have never happened in this case. It could not and did not in any way put the alienee's rights on a higher footing than it could otherwise have been. Looked upon as a forfeiture clause it was liable to be relieved against and the time fixed for payment extended. It could never have been the intention of the Court passing the decree to award possession of the land for the full term of 35 years for failure to pay within two months.

In the view I take of the decree, dated 29th August 1921, I think, the lower Appellate Court was bound to hold that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the crops. Their right to the land being negatived they had no right to raise and enjoy its usufruct as against the defendant No. 1 who was declared to be the rightful owner thereof. I, therefore, declare that the appellant Bani (defendant No. 1) is entitled to the sum of Rs. 950 which has by agreement of parties been fixed at the value of the crops raised by the plaintiffs.

The appeal succeeds and it is allowed with costs. Costs in lower Courts will be paid by the plaintiffs. Pleader's fee Rs. 15.

Appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut, dated the 27th November 1920.

Mr. O'Connor and Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

Babu L. M. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Lindsay, J.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit filed by the Secretary of State for India in Council in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Meerut for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that a deed of sale executed by the first defendant, Raghubar Dayal, in favour of the second defendant, Mr. Thomas Singlehurst, on the 28th July 1919 and registered on the 9th August 1919 was null and void and ineffectual on the ground that the previous consent of the Military authorities had not been obtained, and that the transfer was detrimental to the interests of the Military officers in the Meerut Cantonment.

The reason for the suit is indicated in para. 6 of the plaint.

Under section 11 (c) of the Cantonments (House Accommodation) Act of 1902 (Act II of 1902) which was in force at the time the suit was brought, no notice under section 6 of the Act can issue in respect of a house in Cantonment occupied by the owner; in other words, where the owner of such a house is in actual occupation he cannot be required, by notice under section 6, to let the house to a Military officer. The declaration sought for in the plaint was, therefore, being asked for in order to have it established that the Military authorities were not under any legal obligation to treat the second defendant, Singlehurst, as the owner of the house conveyed by the deed in question for the purposes of the Act just referred to.

RAGHUBAR DAYAL v. SECRETARY OF STATE

The house is described as Bungalow No. 42 Bedford Row, in the Meerut Cantonment.

It is not disputed in this case that the land upon which this bungalow stands is Cantonment land and, therefore, the property of Government. Nor is it disputed that at the time when this conveyance was executed the vendor, Raghubar Dayal, was entitled to be treated as the owner of the house.

The case for the plaintiff was that the relations between him and the defendant, Raghubar Dayal, were governed by certain rules set forth in Appendix IV, Volume II of Army Regulations, India, para. 35.

The rules in question purport to regulate the conditions upon which land in Cantonments was granted prior to the introduction of the Cantonment Code in the year 1899. It is declared that the conditions are to be subscribed to by every grantee of Cantonment land as well as by every person to whom the grant may be subsequently transferred. The particular condition with which we are here concerned is laid down in the following terms :—

“ If the ground has been built upon, the buildings are not to be disposed of to any person who does not belong to the Army until the consent of the Officer Commanding the Station has been previously obtained under his hand.”

It is upon this condition that the plaintiff rests his case. No previous sanction to the transfer now in question having been obtained from the authority mentioned in the condition, it is claimed that the plaintiff (and under him the Military authorities) has the right to ignore the transfer.

The first and second defendants resisted the suit on the same grounds. It was denied that the house had ever been sold to the defendants or their predecessors subject to the condition just mentioned, and it was claimed in substance that the house was held and had been held free of any of the conditions imposed by the Army Regulations cited in the plaint.

It was pleaded that these Regulations had not the force of law and could not be resorted to in order to affect the right of transfer as laid down in the Transfer of Property Act. It was also pleaded that there was no cause of action for the suit ; that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain a suit for declaration; and, in any case, that the declaration should not be granted on the ground that the Military authorities in withholding sanction had acted in an unjust, illegal and arbitrary manner.

The Subordinate Judge has found in favour of the plaintiff. He was of opinion that the suit was maintainable ; that the plaintiff had a cause of action ; that the relations of the parties were governed by the Army Regulations quoted in the plaint ; that the first defendant was bound by the condition requiring previous consent to the transfer, and that such consent not having been obtained the plaintiff was not obliged to recognize the transfer and to treat the defendant, Singlehurst, as the owner of the house for the purposes of the Cantonments (House Accommodation) Act, 1902. In the result, the Court below gave the plaintiff a decree declaring that the sale-deed in dispute was not binding and is ineffectual as against the Military authorities of the Cantonment.

The memorandum of appeal submitted to this Court embodies the various pleas which were raised by way of defence in the Court below. The purely technical pleas have not been strongly pressed before us nor, indeed, could they have been.

It being admitted that the land on which the house in dispute has been erected is the property of the plaintiff it could scarcely be contended that the plaintiff has not such an interest in the property in dispute as would entitle him to maintain a suit for declaration under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

And, clearly, if the relations between the parties are governed by the Army Regulations the plaintiff had a cause of action for it is plain that the transfer to the second defendant was made in spite of an express refusal of the Military authorities to accord sanction to the sale. Mr. O'Connor has argued the case on the merits and has contended that the Military authorities have no right to withhold sanction ; that the Regulations upon which the plaintiff relies have not the force of law and cannot interfere with the right to transfer the house ; that the grant of the land was not made subject to the conditions contained in these Regulations and that the want of sanction cannot invalidate the sale or justify the plaintiff in ignoring it so as to deprive the purchaser, Singlehurst, of the protection afforded by section 11, clause (c) of the Cantonments (House Accommodation) Act, 1902.

In the course of the arguments we have been referred to the history of the site of the bungalow in dispute and it will be as well here to set out the relevant facts in this connection. There was produced in the Court below a set of the registers relating to the transfer of houses in the Meerut Cantonment and these books have been inspected by us during the hearing of the appeal.

The earliest entry we can find is contained in a register which, so far as we can ascertain, must have been prepared for the first time soon after the year 1833.

On the 16th September 1833, a General Order was issued by the Commander-in-Chief directing that a register should be kept in the office of the principal Staff officer in certain Cantonments, including Meerut, for the purpose of recording all transfers of houses, bungalows or gardens in Cantonments. It was ordered that all proprietors of houses, etc., should forward to the Staff Officer concerned a memorandum stating when they purchased or become proprietors of the houses, from whom they obtained them and the dimensions of their different compounds. It was further directed that all future transfers of houses should be entered in the register. (See the compilation of orders printed in the Gazette of India of the 5th November 1898, Part V, page 371).

There can be little doubt that the first volume of the registers produced before us must have been prepared in accordance with these instructions. We find, then, that the first entry relating to the site of the house now in question shows that a house on this plot was in the occupation of a gentleman named McGarrison (?) who was a Civil Surgeon.

On the 18th December 1844 we find it stated that the house on this site was transferred by one Charles Madden, Civil Surgeon, to Major Matthew Smith of H. M.'s 9th Foot.

On the 29th July 1852 this officer transferred the house to Lt.-General Sir Joseph Thackwell, G. C. B.

From this date till the 7th February 1874 the house seems to have remained the property of the Thackwell family.

On this latter date, according to an entry in another volume of the register, the house, which was then in ruins was sold by the Cantonment Magistrate at public auction and was purchased by one E. C. Roberts, a person who did not belong to the Army.

Roberts, on the 20th November 1895, sold the house to a Mrs. Steventon who, on the 2nd July 1901, made a gift of it in favour of a minor named D. M. Bower.

On the 21st March 1912, G. T. Bower, the certificated guardian of the minor owner, sold the house to Raghubar Dayal, the first defendant in the present suit, and for the purposes of this case it is important to notice what took place on this occasion.

The Cantonment Magistrate having been informed of this proposed transfer wrote both to the guardian and to Raghubar Dayal pointing out that, in accordance with Army Regulations, bungalows in Cantonments could not be sold without first obtaining the sanction of the Officer Commanding the Station. Both parties were further informed that the land being the property of Government could not be sold and that no sanction would be given to the transfer unless a declaration was made in writing that the land was not being sold and that all that was being transferred was the bungalow together with the out-houses. (See the correspondence at p. 34 of the printed record).

Bower, the guardian, replied to the Cantonment Magistrate by letter Ex. 4, dated the 29th March 1912, that he "noted" that the bungalow could not be sold without the sanction of the Officer Commanding. He further stated that both he and the purchaser (Raghubar Dayal) were aware that the land was the property of Government and could not be sold. (See page 35 of the printed record.)

After this correspondence the Cantonment Magistrate obtained the sanction of the Officer Commanding at Meerut and this fact was notified to Bower by letter (Ex. 6) dated the 23rd April 1912.

It is clearly established, therefore, that when Raghubar Dayal acquired this house in the year 1912 he was made aware of the fact that the Military authorities were applying the rules laid down in the Army Regulations nd were insisting that the conditions contained in the Regulations governed the transfer of the property and in the circumstances it did not lie in the mouth of Raghubar Dayal to plead, as he did plead in para. 12 of his written statement, that "the bungalow in dispute was ever sold to any predecessor of the defendants or to himself, subject to the condition stated in clause (c) of rule 35, Army Regulations India 'vol. II.'"

RAGHUBAR DAYAL v. SECRETARY OF STATE

That was without doubt a false plea. Raghubar Dayal was well aware that the sale to him had been made subject to the condition in clause (c).

That falsity of this statement is further demonstrated by the fact that on the 29th July 1919 when he was arranging to sell this house to Singlehurst he made an application to the Cantonment Magistrate asking him to obtain the sanction of the Officer Commanding the Station to the sale of the house and saying that the sale should be registered. He quoted the Army Regulations in this application and obviously knew all about them (see p. 45 of the printed record). He admits his knowledge in a later letter sent by him to the Cantonment Magistrate on the 12th August 1919.

We may further note that in another letter, printed at pages 51 et seq. of the record, Raghubar Dayal described himself to the Cantonment Magistrate as a practising Barrister of nearly twenty years standing with considerable knowledge of Cantonment Law.

Whatever be the legal consequences of the notice given to Raghubar Dayal when he was purchasing in the year 1912, it is clear on all hands that he knew that he was taking subject to the condition that the exercise of the right to transfer the house he was buying could only be made with the previous sanction of the Officer Commanding the Station.

With regard to the plea that these Army Regulations relied upon by the plaintiff have no statutory authority and have not the force of law, we think it is well-founded, and we are unable to agree with the Subordinate Judge who took the contrary view. He refers to the Bombay Regulations which were cited before their Lordships of the Privy Council in the well-known Poona case reported in Khiakhusrü Aderji v. Secretary of State (1) and seems to have thought that the Army Regulations with which we are dealing in this case stand on the same footing. But that is not so. The Bombay Regulations in question were statutory enactments made under the powers reserved to the Governor-in-Council prior to the introduction of the Government of India Act, 1833.

The Army Regulations with which we are here concerned cannot, so far as we can ascertain, be traced to any statutory origin.

The various rules and orders to which the collective name of Army Regulations, India, was subsequently given were all collated and set out in an Appendix to the Cantonments (House Accommodation) Bill which was introduced in the Council of the Governor-General in India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on the 4th November 1898.

These orders which issued from time to time between the years 1789 and 1887 are all set out here and are described in various ways, e. g., General Orders, Extracts from Proceedings of the Governor-General-in-Council, General Orders by the Commander-in-Chief, Resolutions of the Military Board, etc. They cannot, in our opinion, be treated as rules having the force of law: they appear rather to be departmental rules issued with a view to the regulation of administrative business in the Army Department.

The particular rules which we have to consider in this case, i. e., the rules regulating the occupation of land and the disposal of premises and buildings were first promulgated by a General Order of the Governor-General in Council, No. 179, dated the 12th September 1836 and these rules were re-published from time to time with amendments and variations till they assumed their present shape in Army Regulations, India, 1887, section 17 (see page 394¹ of the Gazette of India, Part V of the 5th November 1898.)

houses in Cantonments as those which are set up by the plaintiff in the present case. It was expressly laid down that where Cantonment land had been built upon, the buildings could not be disposed of to any person not belonging to the Army until the consent of the Officer Commanding the Station had been previously obtained under his hand.

Now, while it might be conceded that this rule, having no force as law could not operate as per se to invalidate a transfer which is good under the ordinary law, it may, nevertheless, be that a person who has taken a grant of Cantonment land subject to this rule may be bound by it. It is true that in the present case we have no evidence of the terms in which the grants of the land upon which the bungalow in dispute now stands was first made. No document of grant is forthcoming—nor indeed do we know when the grant was made. There is, however, little doubt that a house had been erected on the land by the year 1883 and before the promulgation of the General Order of 1886.

Up till the year 1874 when the house was transferred to a Civilian named Roberts, the house and the site had remained in occupation of persons who actually belonged or were deemed to belong to the Army.

Since the date of the transfer to Roberts the house has changed hands several times, the transferee in each instance being a person not belonging to the Army, and it is the fact that each of these transfers, down to the transfer in favour of Raghubar Dayal in 1912, has been recorded in the register of transfers maintained by the Cantonment Magistrate. We cannot imagine that any of these transfers could have been made without the previous sanction of the Officer Commanding the Station. It must be presumed that the Cantonment Magistrate in each case acted in accordance with the Army Regulations which were certainly binding upon him as a Military Officer—and we have direct evidence in the case of the transfer to Raghubar Dayal that the previous sanction of the Officer Commanding the Station was sought and obtained before the transfer was registered. We have already pointed out that the conditions governing the transfer of the house were brought to Raghubar Dayal's notice and accepted by him. We have referred, moreover, to the fact that Raghubar Dayal sought previous sanction when he was about to transfer to the defendant Singlehurst.

While there is, therefore, no available evidence to show what conditions were attached to the grant of the site of the house when it was first built, there is in our opinion ample evidence to show that Raghubar Dayal took the house in 1912 subject to the limitation imposed by the rule upon the right of transfer—and we hold that, in the circumstances, he is bound by the condition.

In the Poona case referred to above Kaikhursru Aderji v. Secretary of State for India (1) it was held that the appellants and their predecessors-in-title held merely upon Cantonment Tenure and had no status therefore other than that of licensees. That, in our opinion, is the status of Raghubar Dayal and of his successors-in-interest since his death. It is not claimed here, as it was in the Poona case, that the land is not the property of Government. On the contrary, it is admitted freely that the land does belong to the Government. Raghubar Dayal and his predecessors held no lease, it is not pretended that they did, and, that being so, they could not be more than licensees, and, therefore, bound by the conditions of the license. Each transfer as it was made and sanctioned amounted to nothing more than the transfer of a license. That was the view taken by Russell, J., in the judgment of the Bombay High Court, and we understand that view to have been accepted by their Lordships of the Privy Council.

At page 9 of the report, dealing with the meaning of the word "sanctioned" endorsed upon the document of transfer in favour of the predecessor-in-title of the appellants, he observed as follows:—

"What is the meaning of the word 'sanctioned' in Ex. 71? . . . The only meaning I have been able to attribute to that word upon Ex. 71 is that, in accordance with the Rules and Regulations then prevailing upon the subject, the Brigadier-General permitted and ratified the surrender by Beyts, and the admittance of Dorabji Pastonji. I cannot believe that it was intended to refer merely to the transfer of one name in place of another in the register, for otherwise the register would be a purely useless and unnecessary document. By the use of the word 'sanctioned' I take it what the Brigadier General meant was that, inasmuch as Mr Beyts had surrendered all his rights to this Cantonment property the Brigadier-General was willing to substitute Dorabji Pastonji for him under the then prevailing orders and regulations under which, as we know, it was entirely ultra vires for the Brigadier-General to allow or to connive at allowing the vendee of those rights to acquire any proprietary rights whatever in the land itself."

Adopting the view laid down in this passage of the judgment, we hold that each transfer in the present case made with the previous assent of the proper Military authority amounted merely to the admission of a new licensee upon the conditions prevailing at the time with respect to the transfer of houses in the Meerut Cantonment.

Raghubar Dayal, therefore, came in as a licensee in 1912 and took the premises in dispute subject to the condition that he had no right to transfer them without the previous sanction of the Officer Commanding the Station.

The transfer now under consideration having been made without such sanction and in violation of the condition the plaintiff is not bound to recognize it.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the decision of the Subordinate Judge is correct and should be affirmed, and we dismiss this appeal accordingly with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Sulaiman, J. :—The plaintiff's case as set forth in the plaint was that all the land in Meerut Cantonment was the property of Government and was acquired between the years 1811 and 1815, that under certain Army Regulations 'if the ground has been built upon, the buildings are not to be disposed of to any person who does not belong to the Army, until the consent of the Officer Commanding the Station has been previously obtained', and that the defendant No. 1 by a deed dated the 28th of July 1919 sold the bungalow in dispute to defendant No. 2 without having obtained any such consent. The plaintiff, therefore, prayed that the sale-deed might be declared null and void and ineffectual inasmuch as it was executed without obtaining the previous consent of the Military authorities, and was detrimental to the interest of the Military Officers.

The defendants did not deny that the site belonged to the Government. They did not specifically set up any lease or specific grant in their favour but took their stand on the broad ground that they had a transferable interest in the house.

The learned Subordinate Judge has given the plaintiff a declaration that the sale-deed of the house is not binding on, and is ineffective as against, the Military authorities.

There is no direct evidence to show under what conditions the land was originally occupied by the predecessor-in-title of the defendants. Nor is there any evidence to show for how long before 1842 this house had existed. There is no lease or written grant that can be traced. The previous history of the devolution of this house has been fully set forth in the judgment of my learned colleague. All that is known is that this land lies within the Cantonment and has been occupied by a house which has been transferred from time to time with the consent of the Military authorities.

I agree that the Army Regulations relied upon by the plaintiff have not the force of law by themselves to render the transfer altogether invalid. They, however, have a special bearing on the case which I propose to consider.

The Regulations of 1807 required that no bungalow or quarters within the Cantonment was to be sold to or occupied by any one not belonging to the Army, and that if any individual other than an Army Officer purchased it he must remove the materials. But the house as such was in no case to be made over to a Civilian. Under the Regulations of 1833 a register was to be kept in which transfers of such houses were to be duly entered. The General Order of the Governor-General in Council No. 179, dated the 12th of September 1836, is particularly important inasmuch as the Regulations thereby brought into force for the first time authorised transfer to a non-military officer under certain restrictions. A right of resumption subject to a payment of compensation was reserved, the ground itself could not be sold, but the house might be transferred without restriction by a Military or Medical officer to another such Military or Medical officer, and if the ground had been built upon the house was not to be disposed of to any one not belonging to the Military Department without the sanction of the Commanding Officer, and in case of sales of houses over Rs. 5,000 in value the sales had to be subject to the sanction by the Government of India.

There can be no doubt that the Regulations of 1836 were in full force till long after 1842 when the existence of this house is distinctly established. As the house is situated within the Cantonment and as there were these old Regulations in force under which originally a house could not be sold to a Civilian at all and later on it could be sold only with the sanction of the Commanding Officer, it is fair to presume, in the absence of any direct evidence as to the actual terms on which the site was originally occupied, that the permission was subject to this reservation. It is unthinkable that Military Officers who, at any rate, were themselves bound by those Regulations would have made a grant of a site in defiance of the Regulations in force. The defendants are not setting up lessee's rights in the land. They can at best be mere licensees whose predecessors were allowed to occupy the land by building a house on it subject to certain restrictions. My learned brother has shown how the successive transfers of this house prior to the transfer in question were duly entered in the register of houses which fact in a way implies the sanction of the military authorities.

Under section 56 of the Indian Easements Act a license as such cannot be transferred. It is clear, therefore, that the legal effect of the past sanctions was simply to continue the license in favour of the transferees. It was, so to speak, a fresh license with the coming in of each new transferee. It would follow, therefore, that defendant No. 2 cannot claim the benefit of that license unless the plaintiff agrees to renew the license in his favour, that is to say, the defendant No. 2 can have no right to insist on retaining the house as a place of residence and in that way occupy the site unless he obtains the consent of the plaintiff.

On the other hand, it has to be noted that even under the Regulations of 1807 if a house situated in the Cantonment was sold to an individual other than a Military officer, the transferee was entitled to remove the materials of the house in the materials of the house did not vest in the persons who had occupied it from time to time, or were not transferable.

The defendant No. 1, who was indisputably the owner of the house and was occupying the site with the consent of the plaintiff, has by a registered sale-deed transferred the house as it stands with all the materials et cetera. He has purported to transfer the right of residence plus the proprietary interest in the materials of the house. So far as the materials go, they have under the registered deed been sold absolutely to the defendant No. 2. And I know of no ground under which it can be said that the sale of those materials is null and void or ineffectual. Neither the plaintiff nor the Military authorities can refuse to recognise that ownership in the materials has passed to the defendant No. 2. But I have already remarked that the right of residence cannot pass to the defendant No. 2 unless the plaintiff agrees to it.

The decree passed by the Court below is not very happily worded as it declares that the sale-deed of the house is not binding and is ineffective as against the Military authorities. If I had thought that by this the learned Subordinate Judge meant that the military authorities could ignore the sale-deed absolutely and treat the defendant No 1 as still the owner of the house then I would not have wholly agreed with him. I, however, think that all that he meant was that the defendant No. 2 had no absolute right to occupy the site without the consent of the Military authorities and on such terms as they choose to impose on him.

I also would, therefore, uphold the decree of the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

By the Court :—The appeal is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

The Regulations of 1836 in no way affected the rights of the occupiers of houses to transfer the materials. Nor is there anything in the previous history of this house which would suggest that the proprietary interest Hindu Law—Joint family—Alienation—Concurrence of members in charge of property—Necessity—Presumption.

The concurrence of all the adult members of a joint Hindu family in an alienation raises a presumption of legal necessity, and the presumption would apply equally where one of the members is working away from home and an alienation is effected by all the remaining members who are in charge of the property and is challenged by the former.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for sale on mortgage. The mortgage was executed in 1909 by Dalpat Rai and his younger son Shadi Lal. The suit was contested by Dalpat Rai's elder son, the appellant Bhagwan Das, on the ground that it was executed without legal necessity. It has now been found that the property was joint family property. The plaintiff produced evidence which the learned Munsif accepted as proving the existence of legal necessity. The learned District Judge was unable to rely on this evidence because in his opinion it proved nothing more than a representation by the mortgagors of the existence of the necessity. This does not appear to be strictly accurate. The evidence of one of the witnesses as quoted by the learned Munsif shows the existence of actual necessity at the time. This witness who was an Honorary Magistrate gave evidence that the mortgagors at the time of execution of the deed were in straitened circumstances and in need of money for their subsistence and in order to carry on their cultivation.

The learned District Judge goes on to hold, accepting the finding of the learned Munsif on this point, that the appellant was working away from home and that his father and brother were left at home and were in charge of the family affairs and property. It appears that the appellant was employed on the Railway and had been away at Allahabad for a long period leaving the family property in charge of his father and younger brother. The learned Judge considered that this state of affairs was sufficient to shift the burden of proof on to the appellant. In my opinion, this view is not inconsistent with the law on the subject. It has been held by the Privy Council that no invariable rule can be laid down but that the onus is liable to shift on proof of particular circumstances. Looking at the matter from a common sense point of view, it is highly unlikely that the father and the younger brother who were in charge of the property would combine, in the absence of the plaintiff, to alienate it without any necessity in order to defraud him. The concurrence of all the adult members of a family in a transaction has been more than once held sufficient, e.g., Balvant Santaram v. Babaji (1), to raise a presumption of legal necessity and in the particular circumstances of this case the Court below was, in my opinion, justified in holding that the concurrence in the transaction of Shadi Lal who was of age and was the only son present at home at the time of the transaction has the same effect.

I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.—The principal points for determination of this case were :—

(1) By whom was the site in dispute acquired, whether by Gangai or Chahadu?

(2) If by Gangai, whether her three sons Chahadu, Narayan and Khandu succeeded to the property by inheritance in equal shares or whether it was co-parcenary property with a right of survivorship in their hands?

(3) Whether Chahadu acquired any title by adverse possession?

(4) Whether defendant No. 2, who is a transferee from the defendant No. 1, has acquired any title by estoppel, or is he at any rate entitled to rely upon the provisions of sections 41 and 51 of the Transfer of Property Act?

The plaintiff's title was based upon a purchase from Mahadu, the son of Narayan, under a sale-deed, dated 16th December 1919, Exhibit

P-1, while the defendant No. 2 bases his title on two documents executed on 14th November 1917 and 7th September 1918. He has constructed a big house after the purchase. The Courts below have both held that the site in question was acquired by Gangai and that it devolved on the three sons in equal share, and that Chahadu was not proved to be in adverse possession for over 12 years before he sold, and that there was no estoppel and that sections 41 and 51 of the Transfer of Property Act had no application to the facts of the case. The lower Appellate Court differing from the first Court held that plaintiff's vendor Mahadu could transfer only 1/9th share and that plaintiff was entitled to mere declaration and not to joint possession.

I have been taken through the plaint and the pleadings and have perused whatever evidence both oral and documentary the parties desired me to peruse. I am satisfied that though there are some errors still the findings arrived at are in the main correct and as they are findings of fact I am precluded from interfering with them in second appeal as there is evidence proper for consideration which justifies them. No doubt, the Court of appeal has wavered in arriving at his findings on some of the points, but I do not think the appellant-defendant No. 2 is prejudiced by this, as on the two main points (i) as to Gangai having acquired the site in dispute, and (ii) as to the extent of each son's share his decision is in accord with the findings of the first Court. In face of Chahadu's own admission in the witness-box and of the other evidence on record that the brothers lived on the site in dispute, I think the lower Courts were right in holding that there could be no title by prescription or estoppel, or under sections 41 and 81 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The plaintiff neither appealed nor filed cross-objection against the decision of the first Court, and I must take it that the finding that plaintiff's vendor's father Narayan took 1/3rd was unchallenged before the Additional District Judge. The question whether the share was enlarged or not owing to jointness or separation between the sons at Gangai's death was, therefore, unnecessary to be decided at the appellate stage. The defendant No. 2's appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

BHAGWANA v. SHIB SAMETRI PRASAD

The only point that remains to be considered is whether plaintiff should not have been given a decree for joint possession to the extent of 1/3rd instead of a mere declaration that he is entitled to 1/9th share. I think the lower Appellate Court was wrong in disturbing the decree of the first Court awarding joint possession to plaintiff to the extent of 1/3rd share. That Mahadu purported to sell the share of himself and his two brothers to plaintiff is clear. The defendant No. 2 who is not a transferee from the minors cannot question the plaintiff's right to joint possession to the extent of 1/3rd share. In a case where the dispute is as between transferees from co-parceners, even a partial partition could be decreed: Amritrao v. Govind (1), Iburamsa Rowthan v. Thirumalai Muthuveera Theruvenkatasami Naiok (2). Much more could a decree for joint possession be given. On plaintiff's cross-objection the decree of lower Appellate Court will be set aside and that of the first Court restored.

The respondent will get costs of his cross-objection from the appellant. I do not like to disturb the equitable order passed by the lower Appellate Court as regards costs of the lower Courts.

Held, that the last clause meant that, if there were any delay in the tenant vacating the premises in accordance with the notice, he would be liable for damages for his continued occupation, and that the notice was not invalidated by the addition of this clause.

Bradley v. Atkinson, 7 A. 899; 5 A. W. N. (1885) 288; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 990, distinguished.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Meerut, dated the 18th November, 1922.

Mr. Harendra Krishna Mukerji, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Panna Lal and S.B. Johari, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for ejectment from two shops belonging to the temple of Savitri Ji of which the plaintiff is the manager. Most of the questions in dispute in the Courts below are now concluded by findings of fact. This appeal has been urged before me on three grounds.

1. That the notice to quit given by the plaintiff was invalid on the ground that it did not terminate on the expiry of a month of the tenancy as required by section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act.

2. That the notice was invalid under the Full Bench ruling in Bradley v. Atkinson, (1) because it gave the defendant an option to pay enhanced rent.

3. That the notice was invalid because it was not signed by the plaintiff but by his general attorney and because the heading of the notice does not state that the plaintiff was giving notice in his capacity of manager.

There is no force in any of these pleas. The first point was not raised anywhere in either of the two Courts below and the appellant is not entitled to raise it now, all the more as there is no evidence on the record to show that the notice did not expire with a month of the tenancy. The appellant's plea in fact is based on the fact that in the notice it is stated that the rent was payable on the 1st of each month. It seems clear on a perusal of the notice that the plaintiff in issuing the notice understood that to be the date on which the tenancy ended. The question on what day of the month the tenancy ended is a question of fact as to which no evidence was led and there was no controversy in the Courts below. I accordingly reject this plea.

As to the second point, a perusal of the notice shows that it is by no means on all fours with the notice which was considered in the Full Bench ruling in Bradley v. Atkinson (1). In that case the person giving the notice said that if the premises were not vacated he would sue for ejectment and for recovery of rent at an enhanced rate. In this case the notice definitely informed the defendant that he is required to quit the premises on the 1st of August 1921 and that if not a suit for his eviction will be filed and rent by way of mesne profits (wasilat) will be claimed. This merely means that if there is any delay in the defendant quitting the premises in accordance with the notice he will be liable for damages for his continued occupation. It in no way invalidates the notice and indeed this point, like the first, was not raised in the Court below.

As to the third point the fact that the shops belonged to the temple of Savitri Ji is clearly stated in the body of the notice and the notice is not invalid because it is signed by the authorised agent of the plaintiff instead of by the plaintiff himself.

There is no force in the appeal and I accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Arts. 6, 11—Suit for money based on hypothecation bond, nature of—Amount claimed under Rs. 500—Appeal, second, whether lie.

Where a plaintiff asks for a simple money-decree on the basis of a hypothecation-bond and expressly abandons all claims against the mortgaged property, the suit is a pure money suit and does not fall under Article 6 or Article 11 of Schedule II to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and where the amount claimed is less than Rs. 500, a second appeal will be barred under section 102 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Sukhdeo Prasad v. Lachman Singh, 24 A. 456; A. W. N. (1902) 114, distinguished.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Badaun, dated the 21st of June, 1922.

Mr. S. A. Haider, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT:—In this case a preliminary objection is taken that no second appeal lies. The amount in dispute in the case was Rs. 252-10-0 only and the plaintiff asked for nothing more than a simple money-decree. It is true that the bond on which his claim was based was a hypothecation-bond but he expressly abandoned all claim against the mortgaged property and framed his suit purely as a money suit. Under these circumstances, section 102, Civil Procedure Code, applies and no second appeal lies. The appellant pleads that the suit should be treated as falling under Article 6 or 11 of the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. Neither of these Articles is applicable. Article 6 applies to suits for sale or foreclosure and to suits for redemption but to no other kinds of suit. Article 11 applies only to suits for the enforcement of a right to or interest in immoveable property. No such right is sought to be enforced in this case. The ruling in Sukhdeo Prasad v. Lachman Singh (1) cited by the appellant is inapplicable. There the suit was framed as an ordinary mortgage-suit in which sale of the property was asked for. It was only at a later stage of the case that the plaintiff withdrew his relief for sale of the property and expressed his willingness to be content with a simple money-decree. I give effect to the preliminary objection and dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—This appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Saran in a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants for a declaration that Mahal Bhawarajpur, Belahi and Mohsilpur, Tauzi No. 63 in the district of Saran had already been privately and regularly partitioned with the consent of all the proprietors and that the defendants had no right to get a fresh partition made, and that the dismissal of the plaintiffs' petition objecting to the making of a fresh partition by the Collectorate was illegal and that the patti formed by partition and allotted to the plaintiffs could not be partitioned afresh by the Collectorate.

The plaintiffs' case is that long ago Tauzi No. 63 was privately partitioned so far as culturable lands were concerned, and that 284 bighas of saltpetre lands, tank, river, etc., which were not capable of being partitioned, were left ijmal; the four pattis were formed patti Madar Baksh 4-annas, patti Mir Ali and Waris Ali 4-annas, patti Didar Baksh, Wazir Ali and others 2-annas and patti Teg Ali and Eyad Ali 4-annas making in all 14-annas of which it is said Tauzi No. 63 consisted, the other 2 annas of the Mahal being Tauzi No. 62. In 1832 the proprietors applied for a partition by the Collector and an Amin came and made a regular Survey of all the pattis and prepared a khasra which was accepted by all proprietors. But on account of some technical defect the partition case was dismissed in 1841; and the Tauzi was not separated, but the proprietors continued to be in possession of the lands in their respective pattis while the ijmal lands remained joint. The two four-annas pattis Madar Baksh and Teg Ali and Eyad Ali subsequently became united in a single proprietor and there are now three pattis of 8-annas, 4-annas and 2-annas in the separate possession of their owners. It is said that in the Settlement proceedings of 1895 khewats and khatians were prepared patti by patti. The plaintiffs are the owners of the 2-annas patti which consists of 290 bighas 11 kathas and 11 dhurs of land. The defendants Nos. 1 to 6 and No. 9 applied to the Collector for fresh partition and the plaintiffs' objections under sections 7 and 77 of the Estates Partition Act (Act V of 1897) were rejected by the Revenue Officers.

The defendants denied that all the lands of Tauzi No. 63 were privately and regularly partitioned. It is said that the Batwara proceedings referred to in the plaint were not given effect to and remained incomplete. The Record of Rights shows that a good deal of Abadi and other lands from which income is derived are in joint possession of all the proprietors and that, therefore, the plaintiffs are not entitled to the benefits of sections 7 and 77 of the Estates Partition Act. It is also alleged that different proprietors have kept different lands in their occupation simply for convenience of cultivation. The learned Subordinate Judge found that in the Batwara of 1832 the Shami lat lands were 263 bighas 18 kathas and 16 dhurs, but that the areas given in the Cadasstral Survey and Revisional Survey were different, and that it is not clear whether the partial pattibandi of Tauzi No. 63 was in respect of lands or tenants. He held that section 7 of the Estates Partition Act was not a bar to the partition. He gave a modified decree to this extent that the parties are in separate possession of certain lands regarding which he makes a suggestion that this fact may be taken into consideration as far as possible in affecting partition.

The question for decision is, whether this interpretation of section 7 of the Estates Partition Act of 1897 is correct. That section lays down: "Where the lands of an estate have been divided by private arrangement formally made and agreed to by all the proprietors and each proprietor has, in pursuance of such arrangement, taken possession of separate lands to be held in severalty as representing his interest in the estate, no partition of the estate shall be made under this Act except "(a) on the joint application of all the proprietors, or (b) in pursuance of a decree or order of a Civil Court."

The Revenue Authorities, within whose special jurisdiction the partition of the estates rests, have held the view that this section is no bar to a Collectorate partition. That opinion is entitled to all respect and the Civil Court will not interfere with the decision of the Revenue Authorities except on the clearest proof that that decision was wrong. It was held in Shah Tajammul Ali v. Mussod Ali (1) that section 7 contemplates a complete partition. Now, it is admitted that an attempt was made to have a complete partition between 1832 and 1841 which was not carried out. If there had been a complete private partition before that date it is difficult to see why, if all the proprietors joined in seeking a Collectorate partition, the proceedings should have been left incomplete. It is admitted in the present case that a large area of 284 bighas was left Ijmal. This area is practically as large as the 2-annas patti of the plaintiffs; and, in view of this outstanding Ijmal property, it cannot, I think, be said that there has been a complete partition of the lands of the estate by private arrangement. It may be that section 7 does not require that all the lands of the estate should have been divided, but at all events the division by private arrangement must have been substantially of the whole estate. In view of the comparatively large area that was left undivided, some of which is rent producing land, I do not think that it can be held that the Revenue Authorities were in error in holding that a Collectorate partition could be made.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal is confined to a 13 biswas and odd share in the village Chalaatha which was held by Mst. Chetni, the widow of Kanhai Lal, and the questions for consideration are whether she had made a valid Suphal Sankalap of the same in favour of Lachman Prasad, a priest of Gaya, so as to bind the members of the family, to which her husband belonged or his reversionary heirs.

Kanhai Lal had died in the lifetime of his father Shib Dayal. The allegation of the plaintiffs was that Shib Dayal and Kanhai Lal lived separately, that the property in dispute was the separate property of Kanhai Lal, and that on his death it devolved on Mst. Chetni as a Hindu widow. They denied that any gift had been made or could have been validly made by Mst. Chetni in favour of Lachman Prasad. Shib Dayal died in 1902, Mst. Chetni died in 1916. One of the plaintiffs, Ram Lal, claimed to be the son of one of the sisters of Kanhai Lal, and also claimed to have acquired by purchase the shares of the sons of the other sisters of Kanhai Lal. The other plaintiff, Raja Fateh Singh, claimed to have purchased a half share of the property in question from Ram Lal. There were two other plaintiffs, who claimed to have derived their title under a deed of gift made by Ram Lal and Raja Fateh Singh. The defendants are the transferees and successors-in-interest of Lachman Prasad. Their case was that Shib Dayal and Kanhai Lal lived jointly, that after the death of the latter the property in dispute was entered in the name of Mst. Chetni, his widow, who remained in possession as an adverse owner, and that she had a right to make a valid gift of the same for the spiritual benefit of her deceased husband. They denied that the plaintiff, Ram Lal, or the persons from whom he claimed to derive his title were the nearest reversionary heirs of Kanhai Lal.

The Court below found that Shib Dayal and Kanhai Lal lived separately, that the property in dispute was the self-acquired property of the latter, that on the death of Kanhai Lal Mst. Chetni inherited the same as a Hindu widow and that she could not have acquired an adverse title thereto. It further held that no gift was shown to have been made or could have been validly made by Mst. Chetni in favour of Lachman Prasad and that the plaintiffs, as the lawful successors-in-interest of her husband had a right to recover possession of the property in question.

The correctness of these findings is challenged here. There can be no doubt that Ram Lal and his vendors were the nearest reversionary heirs of Kanhai Lal. The evidence on the record satisfactorily establishes that Shib Dayal and Kanhai Lal lived separately and carried on a separate cloth business and that the property in dispute was the self-acquired property of the latter. In fact, on the death of Kanhai Lal, an application was made by Mst. Chetni, for a succession certificate to collect certain debts due to her deceased husband. Shib Dayal resisted that application on the ground that Kanhai Lal lived jointly with him; but the District Judge of Shahjahanpur who heard the application came to the conclusion that Shib Dayal and Kanhai Lal lived and carried on business separately, that each of them was assessed to income-tax, and that Mst. Chetni was entitled to collect the debts due to her husband. Shib Dayal took no steps thereafter to establish his title against Mst. Chetni by a suit and allowed Mst. Chetni to remain in separate possession of the disputed property from the time of the death of her husband. Indeed, her name was recorded in the place of her deceased husband in respect of the disputed property in the revenue papers and she was in receipt of the profits of the same on her account. She had only a life-interest in the said property; but she could alienate any reasonable portion of the same for pious or religious purposes or for the spiritual benefit of her husband.

As pointed out in Khub Lal Singh v. Ajodhya Misser (1) a Hindu widow has a larger power of disposition for religious or charitable purposes, which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of her husband, than what she possesses for purely worldly purposes. In Lachmi Kunwar v. Durga Kunwar (2), a gift made by Hindu widow for the spiritual benefit of husband, after she had returned from a pilgrimage, was upheld, and in Govind Upadhyaya v. Lakhrani (3), a similar gift was made by a widow on her return from a pilgrimage to Gaya was treated as valid and binding on the reversionary heirs of her husband.

The question therefore is whether such a gift was really made. The evidence produced on behalf of the defendants-appellants to prove that a gift had been made by Mst Chetni in favour of Lachhman Prasad, a priest of Gaya, has, in our opinion, been rejected by the learned Subordinate Judge on insufficient grounds. Raghubar Dayal states that he went with Shib Dayal and Mst. Chetni to Gaya about 35 or 36 years ago and that the gift was made in his presence by both of them in favour of Lachman Prasad. No deed of gift appears to have been written at the time. But there was a mutation of names effected in pursuance of an order of the 13th February 1885 in favour of Lachman Prasad. A copy of an extract from the mutation register has been filed in proof of that entry. There is no satisfactory explanation why this mutation of names was effected in favour of Lachman Prasad, if no gift had been made in his favour. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs refers to the written statement of the defendants-appellants, wherein the gift aforesaid is stated to have been made after the death of Shib Dayal. Being vendees from the transferees of the original donee, it is possible that they may have been misinformed as to the actual date of the gift. The extract from the mutation register shows that the transfer must have been made some time before the 13th February 1885.

Shib Dayal was then alive. He never challenged the gift or the right of the donee or his transferees in his lifetime. Ram Lal states that there was a priest of Gaya named Lachhman Prasad who lived at one time in Pawayan. Lachhman Prasad transferred his rights in favour of Khaga Lal and Ram Lal, who resold the same to the defendants-appellants on the 24th December 1897. The gift aforesaid is, in our opinion, satisfactorily established and the plaintiffs have no right to recover possession from the donee or his transferees.

The evidence adduced by the plaintiffs goes to show that Kanhai Lal was possessed of considerable property. Sita Ram, one of the witnesses for the plaintiffs, states that Kanhai Lal had property worth Rs. 80,000, or

Rs. 40,000. Ajudhya Prasad, another witness, states that he had property of the value of Rs. 50,000. Puttu Lal, another witness, estimates the value of the property of Kanhai Lal at Rs. 60,000 or Rs. 70,000 including groves and muafi land. Ram Lal, one of the plaintiffs himself, states that the landed property of Kanhai Lal yielded an income of Rs. 500 or Rs. 600 per year. The property comprised in the above gift is assessed at a revenue of Rs. 93-5-4. The plaintiff valued it at Rs. 3,000, but a property yielding approximately a profit of about Rs. 100 a year could not have been of that value in 1885. It is not clear what was the revenue assessed on that property at that time. In 1897 it was sold for Rs. 595 and that value bears a very small proportion to the total value of the property which Mst. Chetni had inherited from her husband.

The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the claim with regard to the 13 biswas and odd share of the village Chilauta dismissed with costs here and hitherto to the defendants-appellants including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

There is, however, no logic in making a person liable in damages for causing an alleged injury to a thing which from its nature is incapable of sustaining such injury. For instance, a person cannot be held liable for causing damage to another by rendering his land unfit for cultivation by reason of submersion owing to the overflow of water from the former's land, where it is found that the submerged land was not capable of cultivation at all. Mr. C. B. Parakh, for the Appellants.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmoorti, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by the present respondents for damages said to have been caused to them by reason of the loss of an alleged prospect of raising dhan and kathon crops in an area 11-55 acres appertaining to fields which are described with reference to their old Nos 256, 256½, 258 to 261 and 274½ and 275½ of mauza Morgaon, owing to the defendants' wrongful act of submersion of the said land by the water of their tank in their adjoining village called Nilagondi. The damages claimed are in respect of the years 1917-18, 1918-19, 1919-20 and 1920-21, the suit being instituted on 16th February 1921.

Between these parties there has been a lot of previous litigation in which the plaintiffs' right to discharge the surplus water accumulating in their own tank into the defendants' adjoining tank on lower level has been affirmed and the defendants have been held to be under an obligation to maintain the level or height of the column of water in their own tank to such extent and in such manner as will keep the plaintiffs' aforesaid land free from submersion. This litigation commenced in 1911 and went up to three Courts, and was also followed by a second one in 1917 which also had come up to this Court. The rights and liabilities as declared by the decree passed in the litigation of 1911 must, therefore, be considered to have been decided once for all as between the parties, and neither party can resile from the position so declared by the decree and reargue the question so far as the question of the rights and liabilities of the parties are concerned. The only question, therefore, open for consideration is, whether in the years in suit the plaintiffs have succeeded in establishing that there was such an infringement of their rights as entitled them to demand compensation from the defendants for what is termed submersion of their lands by reason of the surplus water of the defendants' tank having been allowed to remain accumulated therein so as to trespass upon the plaintiffs' land beyond the particular limit fixed or defined by the previous decision between the parties.

The Court of first instance, in a careful judgment, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit holding that the defendants were not responsible for the submersion and that they could not be expected to check the overflow more than what they did. That Court had made a careful local inspection and had taken the help of a Commissioner for determining the area submerged. It was held that only 2-26 acres out of new Nos. 427, 423, 422½ and 422¼ were under water and that field No. 422½ and major portion of field No. 422½ were unfit for cultivation being full of lime-stone and that plaintiff never made any attempt to cultivate this submerged land but wished to make the tank of the defendants a source of recurring income to themselves by claiming compensation from them. The District Judge has, however, reversed that judgment and passed a decree for Rs. 144 on account of the years 1918-19, 1919-20.

It has been correctly pointed out by the lower Appellate Court that the defendants built a tank on their own land for collecting water for their own use, and it was, therefore, incumbent upon them not to allow the water of their tank to overflow the plaintiffs' land or to cause damage to the same. The plaintiffs' tank is on a higher level while that of the defendants is on a lower level. The flow of water being naturally downwards, the water from plaintiffs' tank naturally flows into the defendants', and this imposes upon the defendants a continuing obligation to take special care to see that the level of the water of their tank does not reach above a particular height, so as to keep the plaintiffs' aforesaid area free from submersion. The submersion is, thus a source of continuing damage to the plaintiffs, which are likely to render the defendants liable to them for compensation not only for acts of commission but also for acts of omission, if it be proved that the damage is the direct and natural consequence of their act or omission, or a direct relation of cause and effect is established between the two. The lower Appellate Court, relying upon Rylands v. Fletcher (1), has pointed out, and I think rightly, that a person who for his own purposes brings on his land and collects and keeps there anything likely to do mischief if it escapes, must keep it in at his peril, and if he does so, and does not succeed in confining it to his own property, he is answerable for all the damage which is the natural consequence of its escape, though the escape may not be due to any fault or negligence on his part.

The view taken by the lower Appellate Court of the rights and liabilities of the parties as determined in the abstract by the previous decisions is certainly correct. But in applying it to facts of each year he was not quite correct. It cannot be said that, invariably, the same or uniform results must follow from the infringement of these rights even though the circumstances and atmospheric conditions of each of the years in suit may be or are bound to be different, according as there is scanty or unusual or unprecedented or abnormal downpour of rainfall. It was, therefore, necessary for the plaintiffs to prove, and for the Court to decide with reference to the state of things obtaining in each of the years in suit, how far by reason of the defendants' acts or omissions the plaintiffs' rights have been proved to the infringed, and what damages were consequent on such infringement. Then, again, the extent of injury caused to plaintiff must necessarily depend upon the extent of the additional submerged area of land fit for raising ghan or kathan crop, situate beyond the particular limit defined by the previous decision, in each of the years in the suit. In this connection, the question whether the particular land said to be submerged was otherwise fit for cultivation, in any part of the year or years in suit, either for the ghan crop or for kathan crop, is very pertinent, because on it must depend the standard of assessment of damages payable to plaintiffs for such lands. Whether the damage said to have been caused to plaintiffs is due to the unfitness of the soil for cultivation, and whether this unfitness, is due to the presence of lime-stone, or exists in the soil from its very nature, or has come into existence as the direct and necessary consequence of its submersion, is a factor which cannot be treated as immaterial, in determining the extent of defendants' liability for damages, as the lower Appellate Court seems to have erroneously thought. If the land had never been a source from which plaintiffs derived any income in the past owing to its being uncultivable land from its very nature, or being full of lime-stone, I do not see how its submersion with water escaping from the defendants' tank could place on the shoulders of the defendants any obligation to compensate the plaintiffs for the loss of a so-called prospect of sowing ghan or kathan on such land. There never was or could be such a prospect, and, therefore, none was lost, so far as these lands were concerned. Plaintiffs have assessed their damages on the basis of the land being fit for sowing ghan or kathan crop. In order to succeed they must, therefore, establish this as the primary condition of their maintaining a claim for damages in respect of such lands. The inundation or submersion cannot be the direct and immediate cause of the loss of the prospect of raising a crop on lands which were never fit for raising any such crop. There is absolutely no logic in making a person liable in damages for causing an alleged injury to a thing which from its nature is incapable of sustaining such injury. We are concerned only with the loss of prospect of raising ghan crop because the lower Appellate Court has accepted the view of the first Court that the submersion continued only till the sowing time of kathan crop, so that there could be no injury whatever to the kathan crop if they were regularly sown on the land.

The District Judge has found that only 3.60 acres of land was submerged under water; this consisted of 94 out of field No. 423, and 266 out of fields Nos. 422/2, 422/3 and 422 4. It has also been found that plaintiffs have not sown any ghan crops since 1908 to 1921. In fact, no cultivation was ever attempted by them. As rightly remarked by the lower Appellate Court, it is very unlikely that plaintiff's could not do the cultivation of these fields owing to the submersion. It can, therefore, be safely taken as not established that the alleged loss of the prospect of sowing धान crops was not the direct consequence of the submersion of the lands bearing Nos. 422/2, 422/3 and 422/4.

(1) (1868) 8 H. L. 380; 87 L. J. Ex. 161; 19 L. T. 220.

As regards these and the rest of the land, in the absence of any evidence to show that submersion was maliciously brought by the defendants by doing any positive acts of wrong, it cannot be said that any damage was claimable from the defendants on the ground that the act was an act of aggression on their part. The submersion cannot, under these circumstances, be wilful or be the direct and immediate cause of the loss alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiffs. The next position to be considered is whether the damage is attributable to any neglect of duty cast upon the defendants by the former decisions. The defendants cannot, ordinarily, escape from the consequences of their own neglect or omission to take due care to see that the level of their tank is kept at a sufficiently low height so as to prevent '94 area out of field No. 423 from being inundated by the water of their own tank. It was open to the defendants to show that owing to causes over which they had no control such as unusual or unprecedented or abnormal or sudden rainfall they could not avoid the submersion, in spite of their best endeavours to let off the surplus water from the waste weir and by other breaches or sluices. In the absence of any evidence or finding to that effect, I think, I am justified in presuming that the submersion of the area of '94 out of field No. 423 was due to the neglect of the defendants to let off the excess water from the out-lets. The District Judge has rightly found the defendants liable in damages for allowing the water which should have legitimately passed on to lower level to remain locked on higher level. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to claim damages for the area of '94 of an acre which remained submerged owing to their neglect. The rate is fixed by the District Judge. The damages at that rate come to Rs. 19.

The next question is for what years I can award at this rate. I cannot assume that the same atmospheric conditions prevailed in the different years in suit, so I shall not be justified in adopting a uniform standard of assessment of damages for all years, as appears to have done by the lower Appellate Court, and make the defendants liable for the so-called damage to the land at the uniform rate for each year. I have no materials before me for holding that the 94 acres of land was invariably under water in the past in each of the years in suit. However, this appears to me to be a fit case in which, under these circumstances, an award of nominal damages for the infringement and Rs. 10 as nominal damages ought to satisfy the requirements of the case. I have already held that the District Judge's award of damages in respect of lands which from the very nature or from the presence of limestone are unfit for cultivation of any kind is unsustainable.

There is no force in the contention raised by the appellants regarding limitation. I, therefore, direct that the decree passed by the lower Appellate Court be modified by substituting the figure of Rs. 10 in place of Rs. 144. The appeal succeeds only partially. The costs of this appeal will, therefore, be borne as incurred. The costs in the lower Courts will be borne and paid in proportion to success and failure in this Court.

Custom—Pre-emption—Partition, effect of—Custom whether abrogated.

MUHAMMAD NAZEER v. MUHAMMAD SULAIMAN

The effect of a partition may be to deprive a certain number of those who were formerly entitled to pre-empt of their right, but a partition does not entirely abrogate a custom of pre-emption. The custom may still apply to other classes whom the partition has not deprived of the right of pre-emption. It will continue to apply to all who, notwithstanding the partition, continue in the same relation or relations as formerly entitled them to claim pre-emption.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur, dated the 27th March, 1922.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the appellants.

Mr. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.— The appellants vendees were defendants in a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent, Sheikh Muhammad Sulaiman, to pre-empt a sale of property in two villages, Rafipur and Khwajpur, made in their favour by the third defendant, Salika Bibi.

This lady is a first cousin of the plaintiff and she and the plaintiff are co-sharers in the same mahals in the two villages. The purchasers have shares in these villages but in different mahals. The plaintiff relied upon the custom set out in the wajib-ul-arzes prepared at the last revision of Settlement in or about the year 1884. (The District is permanently settled).

It is admitted that, since these wajib-ul-arzes have been prepared, there has been a perfect partition of both the villages in suit and it is this fact which has been relied upon by the defendants-appellants in order to defeat the plaintiff's claim. It is common ground that no fresh wajib-ul-arzes were prepared after partition and so it was contended that the custom had been abrogated. In the alternative, it was pleaded that if the custom was still in force the plaintiff had no better right than the defendants-purchasers as all are owners of shares in the two villages.

This defence was accepted by the trial Court and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. In appeal this decision was reversed and the suit decreed.

In this Court three pleas are taken in the memorandum of appeal.

It is said in the first ground that the existence of the custom has not been proved. The second ground takes the same point in a different way: it is said that the Court below should have found that the custom had been abrogated by the partition.

Lastly, we have a plea that in any case the plaintiff has no right superior to that of the purchasers.

It is not possible to sustain the argument that a partition abrogates a custom of pre-emption. That is settled by the Full Bench decision in Dalganjan v. Kalka (1) and also by the Privy Council Decision in Digambar's case (2).

The question is whether the custom as recorded in the old wajib-ul-arz has survived the partition and whether it can be applied to the altered state of things brought about by the partition. It has been argued before us that if the custom as recorded before partition cannot be applied in its entirety in the altered conditions effected by the partition it must be deemed to have been abrogated. We do not think there is anything in either of the rulings cited above to justify this proposition.

A custom may survive but its scope may be narrowed, as it often is when partition is effected. As is apparent from the decision in Dalganjan's case (1).

The effect of a partition may be to deprive a certain number of those who were formerly entitled to pre-empt of their right but it never seems to have been suggested that it results from this that the custom is entirely abrogated. It may still apply to other classes whom the partition has not deprived of the right of pre-emption. A partition is the act of parties and it is difficult to see why, if some of the sharers in a village choose to seek a partition and bring about by their own act their exclusion from a right they formerly enjoyed, the other sharers who remain within the co-parcenary body should be deprived of the right they had. The proper view appears to be that the old custom persists and is applicable to all who, notwithstanding the partition, continue in the same relation as formerly entitled them to claim pre-emption.

The wajib-ul-ars of Khwajapur provided for a right of pre-emption, first, in favour of sharers who were members of the same family next, in favour of "hissedaran qaribs" and after that in favour of "hissedaran deh".

In the case of Rafipur the scheme was somewhat different. The first right was given to sharers, members of the same family—the next to sharers in the same patti the third to sharers in the same thok and the last to "hissedaran deh". Now that new mahals have been formed some of these classes of pre-emptors have necessarily disappeared, e.g., the "hissedaran deh". But there can be no difficulty in holding that the custom is still applicable as regards the class denoted by the expression "sharik khandani" who in both villages have clearly the best right of all. The vendees can only claim as "hissedaran deh" but under the altered constitution of both the villages they would not be entitled to pre-empt in a mahal in which they had no share.

The plaintiff here is clearly a "sharik khandani" of the vendor: they are, as has been said, first cousins and undoubtedly belong to the same family being descended from a common grandfather.

The plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of the custom which, so far as the class to which he belongs is concerned, must be deemed to have survived the partition.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is correct. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including, in this Court, fees on the higher scale.

Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859) s. 38, applicability of—Bengal Touji Manual, rule 61—Contract Act (IX of 1872) s. 60—Payment of revenue by Revenue Money Order—Time of payment—Payment to Post Office, whether payment in time.

Under the rules contained in the Bengal Touji Manual, 1918, the question whether a remittance of land revenue remitted by Revenue Money Order reaches the Collector in time depends not on receipt of the money or even of the money-order form at the Treasury, but on the date when the Post-Master fills the Treasury voucher. [p. 665, col. 1.]

Under rule 61 of the Bengal Touji Manual, 1918, read with section 60 of the Contract Act, a payment of land revenue to the Post Office by means of a Revenue Money Order before the last day of payment is a good payment in time. [p. 665, col. 1.]

In order that section 33 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act may come into operation there must have been a sale for arrears of revenue. Where an estate is sold at a time when there are no arrears of revenue, the sale is not a sale for such arrears, and section 33 will have no application to such a case. [p. 665, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Dacca, dated the 23th February 1922.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Troilakyanath Ghose), for the Appellant.

Babu Tarak Chandra Chakravorthy (with him Babu Kalikunvar Chakravorthy), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Bilas Chandra Roy who is the appellant before us was the owner of an entire estate bearing Touji No. 9299 in the Dacca Collectorate. The revenue of the estate is Rs. 88 1-1 payable in three instalments and the amounts and the latest days of payments, fixed under section 3 of Bengal Land Revenue Sales

BILAST CHANDRAROY v. RAJENDRA CRANDRA DAS ROY

Act XI of 1859, of these instalments are Rs. 60-4-0 on the 12th January Rs. 16-9-1 on the 28th June. On the 26th June 1919 the plaintiff himself paid Rs. 11-4-0 at the Dacca Post Office with a Revenue Money-Order form duly filled in according to the rules contained in the Bengal Touzi Manual, 1918, on account of the revenue payable on the 28th June. On the 6th July the plaintiff received Exhibit 12 the acknowledgment portion of the money-order which, instead of being a receipt for the payment of revenue, contained an intimation endorsed in red ink in the following terms:—"Received after expiry of due date. The amount is kept in revenue deposit. The Mahal should be released by filling an application otherwise it will be sold at auction sale." This endorsement is dated the 2nd July. The 29th and 30th June and 1st July were holidays. Within two or three days of receiving this acknowledgment at Munshiganj, where the plaintiff is a practising pleader, he wrote to Rasik Chandra Gangopadhyaya, defendant No. 2, who is his Am-muktear, requesting him to file an application for converting the revenue deposit to revenue in respect of Touzi No. 9299. Rasik did not answer this latter until 13th September when he wrote the post-card, Exhibit 114, which reached the plaintiff a day or two later. During this interval on about the 23rd August a young son of the plaintiff died suddenly. Also, before this post-card was written the plaintiff's estate had been advertised for sale for arrears of revenue, the sale date being fixed for the 22nd September. In this post-card, the defendant Rasik, after explaining his delay in writing on account of his not getting a copy wanted for some other matter, wrote "For Mahal Nos. 9299 and 221 two petitions and two Agentnama..... will be necessary. Also the receipt for the deposit of money and something for extra expenses and for the Muktear and his clerk will be necessary". On the 15th September the plaintiff sent Rs. 2 by money-order to Rasik. A day or two later the plaintiff sent his clerk Satis Chandra Choudhuri (P. W. No. 6) to Rasik at Dacca with an Agentnama and three blank demy papers signed by the plaintiff. No application was filed by the defendant No. 2 in accordance with the plaintiff's instructions but on the 21st September he sent the post-card, Ext. 17, to the plaintiff. In this he informed him that the sale of Mahal No. 9299 for arrears of revenue was fixed for the next day and that in order to prevent the sale, it would be necessary to pay a fine and also over Rs. 100 for cesses in arrear. The plaintiff was, therefore, asked to send Rs. 125 by Telegraphic money-order at once. This post-card did not reach the plaintiff until the 24th September as he had left Munshiganj for his home in Maijpara on the 20th. On the 22nd September the plaintiff's estate was sold by auction at the revenue sale for an arrear of Rs. 7-1-8. There was Rs. 4-2-4 to the plaintiff's credit in the Collectorate accounts when the instalment of Rs. 11-8-0 was payable this explains why the arrear was this smaller amount. The estate was bought by defendant No. 1, a pleader's clerk for Rs. 530. The value of the estate is over Rs. 5 000. On the 19th November, 1919, the plaintiff appealed to the Commissioner of the Dacca Division to have the sale set aside under section 2 of Act VII (B. C.) of 1868 and section 26, of Act XI of 1859. This appeal was dismissed on the 29th May 1920 and the sale was confirmed on the 5th June following. On the 22nd January 1921 the plaintiff brought the present suit which was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge, 4th Court, Dacca, on the 23rd February 1922 and he has appealed to this Court.

The above is a statement of facts of the case which are either now undisputed or which, if disputed, we hold to have been established by the evidence on the record. Where there is a variance between the evidence of the plaintiff and the second defendant we have no hesitation in accepting the plaintiff's version. The lower Court has doubted his veracity on the ground that he has made discrepant statements as to whether he wrote his first letter to defendant No. 2 two or three days after the 6th July or a day or two before receiving Exhibit 14, this defendant's post-card of the 13th September. We find no such discrepancy. The sentence "This post-card letter I received a day or two after the writing of this 'letter'" must mean that the plaintiff received it a day or two after it was written. This is the grammatical meaning of the sentence and the meaning given to it by the learned Subordinate Judge is inconsistent with the plaintiff's evidence that Exhibit 14 is a reply to his first letter. If it was a reply it could not have been received a day or two after the plaintiff wrote his letter. Also, the contents of Exhibit

14 indicate that it was a reply to a letter from the plaintiff received sometime previously. Exhibit 14 also shows from its reference to several matters that this defendant's denial that he was then acting as the plaintiff's Revenue Agent is false. The contents of the second post-card, Exhibit 17, are not what he would have written if, as he says in his evidence, he found Touzi No. 9299 in the Bakiat list two days before he wrote the letter.

The plaintiff brought this suit to set aside this revenue sale. He also asked for a declaration that the sale certificate issued to defendant No. 1 did not affect his title to certain specified Mouzas. In the alternative, he asked for a decree directing a reconveyance of the estate. There were also prayers for recovery of possession and mesne profits. The grounds on which he claimed these reliefs were that the sale was void as there were no arrears of revenue at the time of the sale; that the sale was the result of a fraudulent conspiracy between the two defendants; that the sale was bad on account of failure to serve the notices required by law, and that notices did not properly describe the estate. At the hearing of the appeal six points were argued:

(1) that on the evidence it should be held that the plaintiff's money-order reached the Collectorate before the time for payment expired;

(2) that the payment to the Post Office of Rs. 11-4-0 by Revenue Money-Order was valid payment in time;

(3) that a fraudulent conspiracy between the two defendants has been proved;

(4) that notices required by law were not served at all;

(5) that the 28th June was the date of payment of the June kist to which section 2 of Act XI of 1859 is applicable and not the latest day of payment fixed under section 3 of that Act;

(6) that the sale-certificate conveys no title to the property in suit.

We hold that the first of these points has been established. The plaintiff has proved by his own evidence corroborated by that of the Head Clerk of the Money-Order Department of the Dacca Post Office that he delivered

Rs. 11-4-0 with a Revenue Money-Order form properly filled up and addressed to the Collector on the 26th June 1919. The time of payment is not stated in the evidence but is given in the plaint as between 11 a. m. and 12 noon. As to what actually happened in the Post Office after the receipt of the money and money-order there is no evidence, but it was not possible for the plaintiff to adduce further evidence on the point since it is hardly possible that any of the Post Office officials should have any recollection of this individual transaction and all documents relating to it were destroyed before this suit was instituted. From the Head Clerk's evidence and the rules in the Bengal Touji Manual, 1918, it appears that the ordinary procedure would be as follows: Ordinarily, Revenue Money Orders are sent to the Collector the next day but if they are given on the last date for payment they are all hunted up and sent on that very day to the Collector. The actual money received by the Post Office is not sent to the Collector with the money-orders. A list or lists of these money-orders is prepared in triplicate and also a Treasury voucher (Form A/C-12) representing the total value of the money-orders as entered in all the lists. The duplicate copy of the list with the money-orders and Treasury voucher are taken by the postman to the Collectorate Accountant at the Treasury. On receipt of these documents they are checked and compared and if found correct the Accountant will at once cut off the portions of each money-order containing the coupon and acknowledgment, sign and date the money-orders (as payee) and return the paid money-orders to the postman. The Accountant will retain the lower portion of each money-order including the coupon and acknowledgment the duplicate list or lists and the Treasury voucher. Forms of Revenue Money-Order and of the triplicate list are given in Appendix A of the Bengal Touji Manual, 1918, as Forms 17 and 18. After this the Treasury Officer will make the necessary adjustment of account between the Post Office and the appropriate department to whom the money is to be credited. The acknowledgments and coupons which were cut off by the Accountant will then be examined in the Collectorate. If a remittance of land revenue is received in the Treasury after the sunset of the latest day of payment a note red ink that the payment is "too late for the latest day of payment." This, as stated above, is what was done in the present case.

Even assuming that the question whether this payment of revenue by money-order was in time or not, depended on whether the money order reached the Treasury on the 28th, we are unable to agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the money-order reached the Treasury before sunset on 28th June 1919. There was obviously some omission to follow the ordinary procedure either in the Post Office or the Collectorate. The learned Subordinate Judge has applied the presumption that official acts have been regularly performed to the acts of the Collectorate. We think, on the evidence in this case, it should be applied to the acts of the Post Office officials. It is proved that the money-order was delivered with the money on the 26th June. The evidence of the Head Clerk of the Money Order Department that such money-orders are ordinarily sent to the Collector the next day was not attacked in cross-examination nor was any suggestion made to him of irregularity in the Post Office. The Collectorate or Treasury is only a quarter of a mile from the Post Office. A strong presumption, therefore, arises in the plaintiff's favour that the money-order reached the Collectorate on the 27th June. To rebut this presumption there is no evidence that it reached the Treasury after the 28th. Neither the clerk who wrote the red ink endorsement nor any other officer of the Collectorate has been examined to prove when the money-order was received. There is, therefore, in support of the defendants only the presumption that the Collectorate officers performed their official acts regularly and that they would not have acted as they did unless the money orders had arrived too late. This presumption is far weaker and insufficient to rebut the presumption in the plaintiff's favour.

We also hold that the appeal should succeed on the second point, that the payment to the Post Office of Rs. 11-4-0 by Revenue Money-Order was a valid payment in time. The learned Subordinate Judge would have decided this point in the plaintiff's favour had he not held himself bound by the decision of a

Divisional Bench of this Court in Baisantha Nath Dutt v. Ganga Prosad Patnaik (1). In that case a zemindar sent his revenue by money-order through the Post Office at Bhadrak, in the Balasore District, for payment to the Collector of Cuttack. By mistake, the money was sent to the Collector of Balasore and consequently reached the Collector of Cuttack too late. In our opinion, this case is distinguishable from the present case on two grounds. In the first place, the legal effects of a payment of revenue by money-order must depend on the rules in force at the time such payment is made. We have not been able to obtain a copy of the rules in force in 1893, when the payment was made in the case cited. There has been at least one other edition of the Bengal Touji Manual published between then and 1918, the edition which contains the rules governing the present case. But it is clear from the judgment in that case that there was one very material difference between the system then in force and the present system. From the frequent references to payment of money in the judgment it is evident that the payment by the Post Office to the Collectorate was then a cash payment and not, as it is now, a payment by transfer in the accounts. In the case of a cash payment, in the absence of any rules to the contrary, the time of the payment of revenue would be the time the remittance was received by the Collector. In the case of a payment by transfer it is necessary to examine the rules to decide when the money paid to the Post Office is to be held to have been received by the Collector. Though the concluding paragraph of r. 98 provides that "the acceptance of the money-order after the latest date of payment is to be treated in the same manner as the receipt of a personal payment of revenue after the latest date of payment;" this is qualified to an extent almost amounting to contradiction by the footnote to r. 102 which is in the following terms: "It is to be understood that date of receipt of the money-order in the Treasury is the date of the Treasury voucher by which it is paid and not necessarily the date on which the acknowledgment is examined, signed or returned." Now, this Treasury Voucher should be made across the acknowledgment in

(1) 4 C. W. N. 108.

BILAST CHANDRA ROY v. RAJENDRA CHANDRA DAS ROY

(Form A-C 12) is filled in, and filling in includes dating, by the Post Master before it leaves the Post Office. Under the existing rules, therefore, the question whether the remittance reaches the Collector in time depends not on receipt for the money or even of the money-order form at the Treasury but on the date when the Post Master fills in the Treasury Voucher. On the evidence in the present case there is a still stronger presumption that this was done before sunset on the 28th June 1919 than there is to support the inference we have already drawn that the money-order form reached the Treasury before this time.

But we further hold that, apart from what in fact happened after the money was paid by the plaintiff at the Post Office, that payment was a good payment in time. With all respect to the learned Judges who decided Bakuniha Nath Dutt's case (1) the question appears to us to depend, not on whether the Post Office can be considered the agent of the Collector authorised to give a valid receipt for arrears of revenue but on whether the payment was made in a manner and at a time prescribed or sanctioned by Government. Section 50 of the Indian Contract Act IX of 1872 provides: "The performance of any promise may be made in any manner or at any time which the promisee prescribes or sanctions" Illustration (d) to that section is "A desires B who owes him Rs. 100 to send him a note for Rs. 100 by post. The debt is discharged as soon as B puts into the post a letter containing the note duly addressed to A." Rule 61 of the Touji Manual prescribes payment by means of a revenue money-order as one of the manner in which a payment of land revenue may be made. This rule must be read subject to the other rules as summarised in the "Instruction for the remittees' guidance" printed on the Revenue Money-Order Form. The only one of these instructions which it is suggested the plaintiff did not follow is the fifth which relates to the time of payment "Remittances of land revenue should be made a sufficient time before the kist day to ensure their reaching the Treasury on or before that day. Remitters are advised to allow ample margin on this account, for the acceptance of money-orders for land revenue after the kist day will not exempt an estate from sale, except according to the rules applicable to personal payment of revenue after kist day." We are unable to hold that the condition prevents the plaintiff from establishing that his payment at the Post Office was a payment in the manner and time prescribed so that it would take effect from the time of payment there. It might be an arguable point whether this instruction prescribes that a remittance should be made in sufficient or in ample time to ensure reaching the Treasury on or before kist day. In the present case the payment at the Post Office on the 26th was in ample time to ensure its reaching the Treasury on the 28th June when it is remembered that the distance between these two places was a quarter of a mile. This brings us to the second point on which Baikuntha Nath Dutt's case (1) is distinguishable as it was then held that the plaintiffs could not be acquitted from blame because he should have acted upon the warning contained in r. 6, which is similar to the present Instruction 5, and should have left ample margin of time for accidents in transit. What is an ample margin of time must depend on the facts of each case. In the present case this margin was undoubtedly ample.

For the respondent it is contended that section 33 of Act XI of 1859 bars the plaintiff from taking these first two grounds because they were not declared and specified in Ext E. the plaintiff's memorandum of appeal to the Commissioner. But in order that this section may come into operation it is necessary that there should have been a sale for arrears of revenue. In the present case there was no arrear of revenue and, consequently, the sale which was held was not a sale for such arrears.

As the appeal must succeed on these grounds it is not necessary to discuss at length the other four grounds urged on behalf of the appellants on these points. We are in substantial agreement with the lower Court. The question of fraud is rendered more difficult on account of the false defences set up by both defendants. There can be no doubt that they were on more friendly terms than they admit and also that intending purchasers were discouraged from bidding by the cond defendant. But though we differ from the learned Subordinate Judge in giving more credit to the plaintiff's evidence we agree with him in holding that there was no conspiracy to defraud the plaintiff. It is suggested that the second defendant deliberately abstained from filing a petition, which would prevent the sale, in order that the first defendant might make some money by buying in the estate and surrendering it to the plaintiff. This would be as much a fraudulent conspiracy as it would have been if they had intended to divide the estate between them. But on a consideration of all the evidence we think that the second defendant honestly believed that it was useless to file a petition on the plaintiff's behalf unless he were in a position to pay the arrears of cesses. We believe that it was not until it was too late to stay the sale that he entered into an agreement and took action to enable the first defendant to buy the estate at a low price and that he did this thinking he was acting in the plaintiff's interest. The trouble probably arose on the first defendant demanding an amount which the plaintiff thought unreasonable. As regards the fourth, fifth and sixth points urged before us it is unnecessary to add anything to what has been written in the judgment of the lower Court.

We accordingly decree this appeal. The cross-objection taken by the first defendant on the ground that he should be allowed his costs necessarily fails and is dismissed. The plaintiff will be granted a decree setting aside the revenue auction sale of Estate No. 9299 of the Dacca Collectorate held on the 22nd September 1919, and for declaration of his title to this estate and for recovery of possession and for mesne-profits which will be assessed in the lower Court.

The plaintiff will get his costs both in this and the lower Court from defendant No. 1, defendant No. 2 who did not appear in this Court will bear his own costs in the lower Court.

One Musammat Zaiban Bibi owned a share amounting to 1-anna 6-pies 6-kirants 8-jan in the village of Bharwari in the Allahabad District. She died in 1896 leaving two daughters, Salim-un-nissa and Rahim-un-nissa, as her sole heirs. Her brother-in-law, Zia-ul-haq, took possession of the entire property. Musammat Rahim-un-nissa filed a suit and obtained possession of her share of the inheritance namely 9-pies 3-krants 4-jan, Mst. Salim-un-nissa did not file a suit but on Zia-ul-haq's death in 1902 she claimed her share in the mutation proceedings. A compromise was entered into by which she was awarded a 7-pies share and the remaining 2-pies 3-krants 4-jan remained in possession of the heirs of Zia-ul-haq. While Zia-ul-haq was in possession of the entire property he had mortgaged 9-pies of it to one Mukarram Husain. Mukarram Husain filed a suit on his mortgage and obtained a decree for sale in respect of this 9-pies. In the meantime, there had been a partition of the property and the 9-pies 3-krants 4-jan to which each of Zaiban Bibi's daughter was originally entitled became after the partition a share of 2-annas 9-pies 1-krant 2-jan 11-tond. In the auction sale which took place in execution of Mukarram Husain's decree the property was purchased by the present appellants Mukhtar Ahmed and others. In the sale certificate the 9-pies share was correctly stated but it was incorrectly described as corresponding to 2-annas 9-pies 1-krant 2-jan 11-tond which was really the equivalent of the entire 9-pies 3-krants 4-jan share as had existed formerly. The revenue of the share was, however, correctly given and was the revenue corresponding to the original 9-pies share which the Court was entitled to bring to sale under the decree. Both the Courts below have held that the words "2-annas 9-pies 1-krant 2-jan 11-tond" in the sale certificate are merely a misdescription due to a clerical mistake and that what really passed was the original share of 9-pies in respect of which the decree was granted. Two suits were brought, one by the heirs of Musammat Salim-un-nissa and the other by the heirs of Zia-ul-haq, against the representatives of the auction-purchasers to recover the difference of 3-krants 4-jan. In connection with these two suits three appeals were filed to the Court below, two by the heirs of Zia-ul-haq and one by the defendants. The Court below has held that the 3-krants 4-jan share belongs to the plaintiffs in the two suits in proportion to their share in the entire property. As between the two sets of plaintiffs there is no longer any controversy. The defendants have filed three connected appeals to this Court against the decrees passed by the Court below on the three appeals preferred to it.

Both suits were filed within twelve years of the date of the auction-sale so that no question of limitation arises.

Seven grounds are taken in the memorandum of appeal but the points which have been actually argued are three only. They are,—

1. That as the plaintiffs in the two suits were parties to the sale proceeding they are bound by the description of the property given in the sale certificate.

2. That in any case their remedy was by application under section 47, Civil Procedure Code and not by suit. If the remedy was by application under that section, it would now be time barred.

3. That the heirs of Musammat Salim-un-nissa are estopped by reason of a Kabuliat executed by them in favour of the auction-purchasers in respect of ex-proprietary plots.

On the first question it appears to me clear law that where there are in the sale certificate two descriptions of the property which cannot be reconciled it is open to the Court to look at the decree in the suit and to determine which of those description really governs the sale. This has been expressly held in a Calcutta case Barhamdeo Singh v. Ram Narain Singh (1). The same principle is laid down in section 97 of the Evidence Act which says that where the language used applies partly to one set of existing facts and partly to another evidence may be given to show to which of the two it was meant to apply. In this case the finding of the Courts below is supported by the presumption that what the Court intended to sell was that which it was authorised by law to sell and there is no legal ground for disturbing that finding, which is clearly in accordance with the justice of the case.

The second point is concluded against the appellant by the Full Bench ruling in Bhujwari v. Banwari Lal (2) which has been followed in the recent case of Munna Lal v. The Collector of Shahjhanpur (3) The dispute here, as learned Judge of the Court below points out, is not between the parties to the suit but between the judgment-debtors and their representatives the auction purchasers.

As regards the third point I have examined the Kabuliat in question. It says nothing whatever as to the extent of the share. It merely acknowledge the title of the auction-purchasers to specific sir plots in respect of which an ex-proprietary tenancy had arisen.

All the grounds of appeal which have been urged, therefore, fail and I dismiss the appeals with costs.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE NO. 33
OF 1922.

January 23, 1924.

J. C. GALSTAUN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

SONATAN PAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS
—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 59—Equitable mortgage—Deposit of title-deeds—Pro note given by debtor, whether inconsistent with mortgage—Hand-writing, comparison of—Opinion formed by Judge in absence of evidence, danger of—Execution of decree—Sale—Purchaser, whether takes subject to equities against judgment-debtor.

A debtor handed over the title-deeds of certain property to his creditor saying that the latter was to hold them as security against the liabilities already incurred and that should be incurred thereafter by the debtor. He subsequently signed a memorandum in respect of the deposit of the title-deeds with the creditor ;

Held, that an equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds was created in favour of the creditor as soon as the title-deeds were handed over to him.

There is nothing inconsistent in a debtor executing a promissory-note in favour of his creditor and at the same time making a deposit of title-deeds by way of security for payment of the debt. [p. 674, col. 1.]

The practice of a Judge declaring whether a disputed signature agrees with the other signatures of a certain person without the assistance of any evidence but merely on his own inspection cannot be approved. It is especially undesirable that a Judge should take upon himself the task of comparing signatures in order to find out whether there has been a forgery in a case, where there is nothing to show on the record that the signature was alleged by any person to be a forgery. [p. 672, col. 1.]

Evidence relating to dissimilarity of signatures is peculiarly fallacious, where the dissimilarity relied upon is not that of general character, but merely particular letters ; for the slightest peculiarities of circumstance or position, as, for instance, the writer sitting up or reclining, or the paper being placed upon a harder or softer substance, or on a place more or less inclined—nay, the materials, as pen, ink, etc., being different at different times—are amply sufficient to account for the letters being made variously at the different times by the same individual. Independently, however, of anything of this sort few individuals write so uniformly that dissimilar formations of particular letters are grounds for concluding them not to have been made by the same person. [p. 672, col. 1.]

A purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree purchases the property subject to all the equities against the judgment-debtor and cannot take up the position of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, of Dacca, by the plaintiff. The suit was brought for the purpose of enforcing a mortgage by deposit of title deeds of certain properties at Gopechur made by one J. B. Sookias in favour of the plaintiff on the 22nd May 1914. The plaintiff's case is that he had been advancing money to J. B. Sookias for the purpose of carrying on business in jute and this transaction commenced sometime in 1906. On the 12th March 1912 there was an adjustment of the account of the monies due to the plaintiff from J. B. Sookias and this adjustment was made of the dues up to the 30th October 1911 when Rs. 75,000 odd was found to be due to the plaintiff from J. B. Sookias. Sookias acknowledged his liability to pay that sum with interest at 10 per cent. per annum with six-monthly rests affixing his signature to the account made up on the 12th March 1912. It was stated that this account with Sookias was kept in abeyance by the plaintiff, by which term it appears the parties meant that no further advance of money would be made to Sookias which would be debited in that account. Sookias used to carry on his business at a place called Nabigunge at that time. On the 15th September 1913 J. B. Sookias purchased some lands which are described as Gopechur property for Rs. 9,800. Gopechur is about 2 or 3 miles distant from Nabigunge and he transferred his business to that place. The plaintiff then alleges that a second account was opened between him and J. B. Sookias on the 26th November 1913, and then, on the 22nd May 1914, J. B. Sookias deposited his title-deeds with regard to the Gopechur property with the plaintiff in Calcutta as security for the debts he then owed the plaintiff as well as for future advances. Then, it is alleged that on the 30th June 1914, Sookias gave the plaintiff a memorandum with regard to this deposit of title deeds, and this document has been described as a letter of hypothecation. Then, in 1916, J. B. Sookias fell ill and was in hospital in Calcutta. When he was in hospital the plaintiff states that on the 3rd July 1916 adjustments were made with regard to both the accounts that he had with Sookias which were made up till the 30th June 1916. It was alleged that on the first account Rs. 1,27,000 and odd was due to the plaintiff and with regard to the second account Rs. 45,000 and odd was due by the plaintiff to J. B. Sookias. Sookias acknowledged these adjustments on that day and put his signature to the accounts in acknowledgment of his liability. J. B. Sookias died on the 6th August 1916 and the plaintiff brings this suit for the enforcement of the mortgage which was alleged to have been made by Sookias on the 22nd May 1914.

The defendants Nos. 1 and 4 represent the estate of J. B. Sookias, the defendant No. 1 being the minor son of Sookias represented by his grand-mother defendant No. 4 who has taken Letters of Administration to the Estate of J. B. Sookias. The defendant No. 2 was a creditor of Sookias who had attached the disputed property in execution of his decree for money and had sold it in execution, the purchaser being the defendant No. 3. It is alleged that defendant No. 2 was made a party as the sale in execution of his decree had not been confirmed when the suit was brought. The suit was contested by the defendant No. 3 alone. The defendant No. 2 alleged that he had been unnecessarily joined as a party and he only asked for his costs. The other defendants Nos. 1 and 4 appeared but did not contest the suit and they admitted the claim of the plaintiff. Defendant No. 3 only appears in this Court to contest the appeal.

The defendant No. 3, who is the auction-purchaser of the Gopechur properties which are the subject of the alleged mortgage in favour of the plaintiff, has denied all the facts stated by the plaintiff in his plaint. He even denied the fact that the plaintiff had advanced any money to J. B. Sookias and also the fact of the several adjustments mentioned by the plaintiff of the accounts which he had with Sookias. More specifically, defendant No. 3 alleged that Sookias had not made the deposit of title-deeds as alleged by the plaintiff, nor did he sign the letter of hypothecation alleged to have been given to the plaintiff on the 30th June 1914.

It will not be necessary to deal with many of the statements made in his written statement having regard to the arguments that have been addressed to us by the parties in this Court. A large number of issues was raised in the Court below but the important issues which have been argued before us are issues 5 and 9. Issue 5 runs thus:—"Does the plaintiffs' mortgage, as alleged in the plaint, amount to an equitable mortgage and did J. B. Sookias give this Gopechur property to the plaintiff in equitable mortgage as alleged, and, if so, what sum is due to the plaintiff on such mortgage?" The 9th issue was:—"Were the aforesaid accounts adjusted and accepted as correct and signed by J. B. Sookias as alleged by the plaintiff; if so, can the defendant No. 3 ask the Court to go behind the adjustment?"

GLASTAUN v. SONATAN PAL

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff had advanced monies to J. B. Sookias at an interest of 10 per cent. per annum and compound interest with six-monthly rests and that there were two running accounts of the transactions between them and that the accounts were adjusted and accepted as correct and signed by J. B. Sookias. With regard to the last portion of issue No. 9 we need not deal as the learned Judge found that the defendant No. 3 can question the account and upon the evidence he arrived at a sum which he found was due to the plaintiff. Neither of the parties before us challenged that account. The appellant did not do so on the allegation that, as there was no possibility of his recovering any amount of money in excess of what was found due by the Subordinate Judge out of the estate of Sookias, it would be useless waste of time to take us through the accounts for the purpose of increasing his own dues. The respondent, however, attacked the finding of the Subordinate Judge with regard to the first portion of the 9th issue in support of the decree in his favour. His contention was that the adjustments spoken of by the plaintiff on the 3rd July 1916 were not true and the signatures of J. B. Sookias in the two adjustments, which were marked Ex. 6 and 7, were not genuine. His argument was that on the 25th March 1916 Sookias had written a letter to Galstaun in which there is this passage:—"As I am anxious to see all accounts cleared up to date with your goodness, on arrival will go through it thoroughly"; and he further stated in that letter that he was leaving Naraingunge for Calcutta on Monday the 27th March 1916. It is urged that, as Sookias wanted to go through his accounts thoroughly on the 25th March 1916, it was not likely that he was able to do so on the 3rd July, when he was lying ill in hospital, within such a short time as he is stated to have taken in looking over the accounts. The fact that the accounts were adjusted has been proved by the plaintiff and his manager Basil. The plaintiff says in his evidence:—"About 15 or 20 days before his death I had some conversation with him about his business. It may be a month before his death. The conversation was about accounts. I told him that Basil would take my account to him and if he found it correct I asked him to certify its correctness. I sent Mr. Basil with the book. The next morning Basil showed me the book with the certificates of J. B. Sookias. These accounts bear the certificates. The certificates are, in my opinion, in the handwriting of J. B. Sookias." Basil says in his evidence that, "the certificate of acceptance and correctness of the account was written and signed by J. B. Sookias in my presence. That it was also signed and dated in my presence. There was another acceptance on that date. The certificate of acceptance and correctness of this account was also written and signed and dated in my presence. This was at the Presidency General Hospital in Calcutta." This evidence is supported by T. B. Sookias, who was examined as a witness for the plaintiff. This witness is a brother of J. B. Sookias. We do not see any reason why this evidence should not be accepted. There is no reason to suppose that Sookias did not know how his accounts stood with the plaintiff and that he could not examine the accounts when they were placed before him by Basil. We, therefore, hold, agreeing with the Subordinate Judge, that there were accounts between the plaintiff and J. B. Sookias which were adjusted and accepted by J. B. Sookias on the 3rd July 1916 and that the interest that was agreed to be paid was 10 per cent. per annum with six-monthly rests.

The real question of importance in this case is involved in issue 5. The Subordinate Judge has held that there was no deposit of title-deeds by way of security by Sookias with Galstaun on the 22nd May as alleged, and the document, bearing date 30th June 1914, was not signed by Sookias but was a forged instrument, and we shall have to deal with this question in some detail. The evidence with regard to the deposit of title-deeds as well as of the memorandum is mainly that of the plaintiff. His evidence is that, sometime in 1914, he pressed J. B. Sookias for security knowing that he had purchased the Gopechur property and had built on it with moneys which had been advanced by the plaintiff to Sookias, and thereafter Sookias brought the title-deeds respecting the Gopechur property and handed them over to the plaintiff saying that the plaintiff was to hold them as security against the liabilities incurred and that should be incurred thereafter by Sookias to the plaintiff. He says that on the 22nd

May Sookias made over his title-deeds at the office of the plaintiff 57, Radha Bazar Street, Calcutta in a bundle. The plaintiff examined the topmost document which was the conveyance obtained by Sookias of the property. The bundle was wrapped up in a piece of cloth. The plaintiff then says that he kept the bundle in a safe, and when Sookias handed over the documents to the plaintiff he said that he did so as security for the amounts he owed the plaintiff and which he would further owe him. At that time the plaintiff's manager Basil was present. Subsequently, Mr. J. B. Sookias gave him a letter and that letter, he said, was signed in his presence. In this matter he has been corroborated by his manager Basil, and it is unnecessary to state the evidence of Basil in detail. T. B. Sookias also gives evidence in support of the fact that J. B. Sookias brought the title-deeds from Gopechur in May or June 1914 and he told the witness at that time that he was going to hand over the documents to the plaintiff and he says that he left Gopechur with a bundle containing documents. If this evidence is believed there cannot be any doubt that a mortgage was created in favour of the plaintiff by Sookias.

It is necessary to state that, as against this positive evidence, there is no evidence on behalf of the defendant contradicting this except in one particular. It has been alleged by some of the witnesses for the defence that J. B. Sookias was in possession of the title-deeds of Gopechur about the months of August and September of the year 1914. The evidence is to this effect, that these witnesses asked Sookias if he had purchased the Gopechur property and they wanted to see the title-deeds in order to satisfy themselves that Sookias had actually purchased the Gopechur property in order that they might supply him with Jute on credit, and, on being so asked, Sookias did actually produce before them his title-deeds for their inspection on different occasions. The evidence, on the face of it, seems to be incredible, for the reason alleged as to why the documents were asked for by those witnesses could not possibly be true. Sookias had already been doing business at Nabigunge, which is only at a short distance from Gopechur, from 1906. The dealers of that place had been doing business with him from that time. The defendant No. 3 in his own evidence says that he had commenced to deal with Sookias in 1912 and from 1912 to 1914 he does not say that there was any circumstance which led him to consider that Sookias had ceased to be such a good customer as he was before the purchase of his property in September 1913. There was no reason whatsoever then for his asking for the production of the title-deeds in 1914 for the purpose as alleged. The Subordinate Judge has not also accepted this evidence as he says, "defendant No. 3 has adduced some oral evidence to show that after the date of the alleged deposit of title-deeds they were shown at Naraingunge by J. B. Sookias to him and his witnesses Nos. 5 and 9. I do not attach any weight to the evidence." We are also of opinion that this evidence is untrue.

The fact, therefore, remains that there is positive evidence on behalf of the plaintiff and there is no evidence on the other side contradicting it. In such a case unless the circumstances are such that the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff cannot be true, we should not be disposed to hold that this uncontradicted evidence should be rejected. But the Subordinate Judge has referred to certain circumstances from which he comes to his conclusions and it is, therefore, necessary for us to deal with the grounds on which the Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiffs' evidence should not be accepted and the document, Ex. 5, dated the 30th June 1914, is a forged instrument.

We should deal, first, with the signature on the letter, Ex. 5. The Subordinate Judge says, after looking into certain undisputed signatures of J. B. Sookias:—"He used to sign with a flourish below his signature and this flourish is drawn from the last letter of his name. All these undisputed signatures are in a bold and running hand and the flourish in the signature is not easy to imitate. The alleged signature in Ex. 5 does not appear to have been made with a running hand. It appears to have been made in rather a halting hand. Certainly the flow of writing in this signature is much less than in the undisputed signatures. The latter 'B' and the next letter 'S' in the alleged signature are clearly in a halting hand." Then, lower down, he says: "The flourish below this signature does not resemble the flourish below any of the undisputed signatures. It appears to be an imitation of the flourish below one of the signatures made in the hospital, to wit, the signature in Ex. 6. " Ex. 6 is the signature in one of the adjustments of account acknowledged by J. B. Sookias on the 3rd July 1916. We may say at the outset that no expert evidence was given in this case on behalf of the defendant for the purpose of comparing this disputed signature with the admitted signatures of Sookias. The observations which the Judge has made have been made on his own view of the signatures. The practice of a Judge declaring whether a disputed signature agrees with the other signatures of a certain person without the assistance of any evidence but merely on his own inspection, has been disapproved by experienced Judges in many cases. It is especially undesirable that the Judge should take upon himself the task of comparing signatures in order to find whether there has been a forgery in such a case, where there is nothing to show on the record that this signature was alleged by any person to be a forgery. It is also difficult to say that, because certain letters in the disputed signature appeared to have been written in a halting hand, in the opinion of the Subordinate Judge, that it should be a forgery. In this connection we think that the observations of Sir John Nicholl in the case of Robson v. Rocks (1), are appropriate. He says, speaking of evidence relating to dissimilarity of signatures: "But such evidence is peculiarly fallacious, where the dissimilarity relied upon is not that of a general character, but merely particular letters; for the slightest peculiarities of circumstance or position, as, for instance, the writer sitting up or reclining or the paper being placed upon a harder or softer substance, or on a place more or less inclined—nay, the materials, as pen, ink, &c., being different at different times are amply sufficient to account for the letters being made variously at the different times by the same individual. Independently, however, of anything of this sort few individuals, it is apprehended, write so uniformly that dissimilar formations of particular letters are grounds for concluding them not to have been made by the same person." This seems to have been the experience of most persons about their own signature which they make at different times. We have carefully examined the signatures ourselves. We do not think that the disputed signature is such that it can be said to be a forgery. Speaking of dissimilarities, we may point out that the signatures in Ex. 67 (a) to 67 (d) which purport to have been made at the same time on the same document by Sookias and which are undisputed show dissimilarities and the same observations may be made with regard to those signatures as have been made by the Subordinate Judge with regard to the signature on Ex. 5.

We must then deal with the observations of the Subordinate Judge with regard to the contents of the document, Ex. 5. The learned Subordinate Judge seems to have made too much of what he calls two slight inaccuracies in composition and those are the use of the word 'owed' when it ought to have been 'owe,' and the fact that a comma had been placed after the word 'account' instead of a full stop, and the letter 'a' following ought to have been a capital letter instead of a small letter. From this he comes to the conclusion that this draft could not have been made by an Attorney, because he says that an Attorney must be presumed to have good knowledge of English. But the Subordinate Judge seems to overlook the fact that these mistakes might have been made by the typist. It is a well known fact, and which we see almost every day, that typed petitions presented in Court contain serious errors due to the typists' mistakes, and even in this document, Ex. 5, in the list of the documents there will be found, even on a cursory view, that there are various mistakes due to the typists' errors. With regard to this we may also state that no question was asked during the plaintiffs' cross-examination about these inaccuracies. Now, even assuming that this document was drafted as it appears before us, there is no reason to suppose that it was a forgery. The plaintiff says in his evidence that he spoke to some Attorney, whom he could not remember, who made the draft. If the plaintiff wanted to forge a document he would have only to ask the Attorney for a draft of a memorandum for deposit of title-deeds by way of security and he would have got it. The fact, therefore, that there are these inaccuracies in the document does not lead to the conclusion that it was not a genuine document.

(1) (1824) Add. 58 at p. 79; 162 E. R. 215.

GLASTAUN V. SONATAN PAI.

The Subordinate Judge next seems to draw some inference against the plaintiff because of the draft not having been produced in this case. We do not attach any importance to this fact. Such a draft would not be preserved by any man of business in ordinary circumstances. In some cases drafts of documents may be necessary and their production highly important, as, for instance, where a Will is alleged to have been executed by a testator on his death-bed: and the question is whether the fair copy of the Will was in accordance with the draft approved by the testator. But we do not see any reason why the draft of a memorandum of the fact that title-deeds have been deposited as security should be preserved.

The learned Judge then makes certain observations with regard to the transaction being unbusinesslike. We do not see that it was unbusinesslike in any way having regard to the course of dealings of business-men in similar transactions. Mortgages by deposit of title-deeds are not allowed by the law in the Moffusil. They can only be made in certain towns specified in the Transfer of Property Act, and suits based on equitable mortgages in Moffusil towns are very rare, and it seems to us that the learned Subordinate Judge is not quite familiar with the way how these transactions are conducted in the Cities. Supposing Sookias were alive and the suit had been brought against him, could he be heard for a moment to say that the transaction was at all unbusinesslike? The whole difficulty has arisen from the fact that Sookias is dead and the plaintiff took possession of his properties under circumstances we shall state later on. If Sookias had been alive, certainly it could not have been urged by him, why there was no witness to this transaction, why was not any Attorney called in, and so forth. In order to understand the nature of this transaction one must remember the relationship between the parties. Galstan had every confidence in the integrity of Sookias as would appear from the fact that he had been making large advances of money to Sookias and when Sookias produced the title-deeds of the property before him, the plaintiff was satisfied, by looking into the last conveyance which Sookias had taken, as regards the nature of the deeds, and kept them in deposit. That being so, we do not consider that there was anything unbusinesslike in the transaction which would make the allegation of the plaintiff suspicious.

We should next deal with the other points of suspicion on which the Subordinate Judge relies. The first thing he says is that there is no documentary evidence to show that in 1914, or previously, the plaintiff ever pressed Sookias to give security for his debts to the plaintiff. The plaintiff has explained why he asked for security. The Subordinate Judge deals with two documents, Ex. 2 and Ex. 3., Ex. 2 is a letter at the end of which the plaintiff wrote:—"Don't forget to get the title-deeds of Gopechur Godown as you promised." This letter is dated 12th May 1914. In reply to this letter, Sookias wrote Ex. 3, which is dated 14th May 1914. The last lines are these.—"Gopichur title-deeds I shall with pleasure bring them down for year inspection and satisfaction to my satisfactory bargain in that property." The Subordinate Judge considers that the plaintiff asked Sookias to bring the title deeds of Gopechur properties to him in order that the plaintiff might inspect them for the purpose of satisfying himself that Sookias had made a good bargain, and he comes to this conclusion with reference to the last few words of Sookias' letter. We must say that it is difficult to understand the meaning of what Sookias wrote. But we have no doubt in our minds that the plaintiff did not want the title-deeds of Gopechur properties for the object of satisfying himself as to whether Sookias had made a good bargain. It is in evidence that Galstaun knew about the purchase when it was made. The purchase had been made in Calcutta and the conveyance was prepared by a Firm of Attornies here. Basil says that he had seen the title-deeds of Sookias at the time the property was purchased. Whether Sookias had made a good bargain or not might be a question of some importance at or about the time of the purchase and if the plaintiff was so anxious to be satisfied about that he would have enquired into the matter at or about the time of the purchase. But a mere inspection of the title-deeds would hardly enable any person without inspection of the property to decide whether the purchase of property was a good bargain or not. This property was purchased for 9,800 rupees only in September 1913, buildings were made upon it by Sookias and the value of the property at the time of the suit is said to have been about a lakh of Rupees. Galstaun says that when he saw that buildings had been made on it by Sookias with monies which he had advanced, he thought of taking that property as security for his debts by deposit of title-deeds. It seems to us that that is a probable explanation of plaintiff's asking Sookias to bring the title-deeds and it was not for the purpose of being satisfied as to the bargain Sookias had made.

Then, we have to deal with two other letters, Ex. 53 and Ex. 54. The Subordinate Judge has, in our opinion, made a mistake with regard to the inference he draws from Ex. 53. That is a letter written by Sookias to the plaintiff, dated 8th January 1916, and the relevant passage runs thus :—Regarding the pro-note my best endeavours are to reduce my old standing debts to you. Therefore, I am reluctant to sign a fresh note until I go down to Calcutta by the end of this month and adjust our account. Then I shall be ready to give you anything that you may ask for. "The Subordinate Judge seems to have thought that this letter was in answer to a letter by Galstaun asking Sookias to execute a fresh promissory-note in his favour and from that he infers that there was a previous promissory-note. If that was so, he says, then the story of a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds would be false. We are unable to follow this reasoning of the Subordinate Judge. It is well known that a debtor may execute a promissory-note in favour of his creditor and at the same time deposit his title deeds by way of security for payment of the debt. In fact the oldest cases with regard to equitable mortgages in our books before the Transfer of Property Act show the fact of deposit of title-deeds being endorsed on the promissory-note. In this case the deposit was made to secure the past and future debts. The amount of the debt was not ascertained and it is only natural that the creditor would ask for some acknowledgment from the debtor by way of a promissory-note in order to fix the amount of his liability.

Much has been made by the learned Subordinate Judge about a press copy-book of letters of the plaintiff. This press copy-book was filed by the plaintiff on the 31st March 1920 and it purported to be 'a copy-book of letter from 18th May 1915 to the 24th February 1916. After the close of the case of both parties the plaintiff's pleader took back this copy-book on the 26th June 1921. The book, therefore, remained in Court for about a year and three months. The defendant, from time to time, applied to the Court for inspection of the document and they obtained such orders. It may be presumed that they did inspect this book. But they did not choose to use any portion of this book as evidence on their behalf, nor did the plaintiff use it. After the book had been taken away from Court the Subordinate Judge desired to have it for the purpose of looking into the letter of the 4th January 1916 which was mentioned in Sookias letter of the 8th January 1916 (Ex. 53). It is unnecessary to state in detail about the various orders relating to this matter. On the 12th July the plaintiff's pleader informed the Court that he was unable to produce the press copy-book as it had been sent to England where Mr. Galstaun then was for the purpose of some litigation there. The Subordinate Judge draws an inference against the plaintiff for non-production of this document. It should be borne in mind that the defendant did not ask for it, presumably because the defendant knew that there was nothing in the book to support his case. It was not until the Judge was anxious to have it and the plaintiff was unable to produce it that he presented a petition in Court that he had not inspected the book thoroughly. In this Court, before us, the plaintiff offered to produce it if the defendant wanted it. But the defendant's Vakil declined to accept the offer, and, moreover, he said that he did not ask the Court to look into that book. The obvious inference is that that letter has no bearing on the present question at all. The only inference the Subordinate Judge appears to make is that there was a promissory-note prior to that date executed by Sookias in favour of the plaintiff. But the most remarkable thing in this trial is that questions which appear to be material to the Subordinate Judge were never put to the plaintiff when he was in the box and everything is left to conjecture as regards the probable meaning of letters and the transaction of the parties. The proper thing would have been to ask the plaintiff when he was in the box as to the matter dealt with by the lower Court.

The same observation would apply to the next two letters with which we are going to deal, that is the letter Ex. 54 which was written by Sookias to the plaintiff in answer to the plaintiff's letter, Ex E. E., which is dated 23rd March 1916. In the letter of the plaintiff he asked for a cheque and said, failing which, Sookias must arrange to work elsewhere as he could not go on paying these large sums getting no return. The relevant portion of the letter in answer by Sookias, dated 25th March 1916 is this: "As I am anxious to see all accounts cleared up-to-date with your good-self on arrival will go through it thoroughly. Any balance left I shall mortgage everything that I possess and refund you with grateful thanks. My aim and object has always been to pay off my dues to you and whatever I have made it has been paid to you, and I have kept no secret from you. I shall see that you will not lose a single pie out of my dues to you." The Subordinate Judge says: "This letter indicates to my mind that there was no mortgage to the plaintiff previous to this letter," and he proceeds thus: "In this letter J. B. Sookias promised to mortgage everything that he then possessed in order to secure what might be due by him to the plaintiff." It seems to us that this is a misreading of the letter, because Sookias said, "I shall mortgage everything that I possess and refund you with grateful thanks." He did not speak of securing the debt of the plaintiff by mortgage, but refunding him, that is, paying off his debt by mortgage, and, therefore, the letter does not contradict the fact that the debt had already been secured by a mortgage. The plaintiff was demanding money and not security, and the answer is that Sookias would pay the money by mortgage. It does not mean, therefore, that the mortgage should be effected in favour of the plaintiff, and it may mean that Sookias promised to pay off plaintiff by procuring money by mortgage to some other person. It appears to us that the argument based on these letters is altogether fanciful and not convincing.

It, therefore, seems to us that there is no ground based on the circumstances of the case on which it can be said that the plaintiff's case is inconsistent with the facts proved by him and on the facts disclosed by the evidence the plaintiff's story of the deposit of title-deeds and the subsequent letter of hypothecation is false.

Then, with regard to some observations of the learned Judge as regards the truthfulness or otherwise of the plaintiff we do not think it necessary to make any remarks at any length, for example, the Subordinate Judge says that the plaintiff had made a false statement in his affidavit sworn on the 25th April 1917 and this refers to the misstatement of the rate of interest at which he advanced money to Sookias. This is a statement which the plaintiff had made against his own interest, because the rate of interest was given in the affidavit as 9 per cent. per annum, whereas, it was really ten per cent. per annum with compound interest. It was reprehensible carelessness on the part of the plaintiff to make such a statement. To say that he had no scrupulous regard for truth on account of these statements seems to us to be going too far.

There is one other matter dealt with by the Subordinate Judge which we need only mention. That is with regard to the account-books of Sookias. The account-books of Sookias, according to Galstaun, had never been sent to him. A letter has been produced by the defendant purporting to have been written by Galstaun on the 22nd August 1917 asking C. B. Sookias, the brother of J. B. Sookias, his debtor, to send the cash. book-ledger and journals showing the debts of J. B. Sookias. C. B. Sookias had given a list of the debts of his brother to Galstaun for insertion in the application for Probate and the Probate Deputy Collector wished to see the accounts. In pursuance of that letter it has been proved that the documents had been sent to Calcutta, and it also appeared from the account-books of the plaintiff that those were sent to the Collectorate, presumably for the purpose of satisfying the Probate Deputy Collector about the correctness of the entries made in the application for probate. Similarly, with regard to the entries of the debts of T. B. Sookias and Basil in Ex. A, the affidavit of Galstaun. Those accounts of the debts, as will appear from the letter Ex. E, were given by C. B. Sookias to Galstaun, and if there was any misstatement Galstaun could not be held responsible for telling a false story. But with regard to Basil's debt it is quite clear that the shares of the Lansdowne Jute Mills were pledged with him by C. B. Sookias, and Basil considered them, when he was giving evidence, as belonging to C. B. Sookias. But they have been taken as belonging to J. B. Sookias in describing the assets of J. B. Sookias and the debt was shown as the debt of J. B. Sookias by pledge of these shares. Therefore, it cannot be said that Galstaun had no regard for truth when making that affidavit.

Then, one other fact must be stated with regard to this point. The debt of Galstaun was, roughly speaking, about a lakh. The debt of other creditors who had not been paid would not exceed Rs. 20,000. If there was no mortgage in favour of Galstaun he could obtain a decree for money against the representatives of Sookias, and if he had asked for rateable distribution of the sale-proceeds he would get 5/6ths of the sale-proceeds and the other creditors would get only 1/6th. In the present case the property had been sold for Rs. 30,000 and the amount which the other creditors would get, if Galstaun had asked for rateable distribution after obtaining a mere money decree with regard to his debt, would not exceed 5,000 Rupees. The advantage which the plaintiff would get by this mortgage in his favour is that the other creditors would be deprived of Rs. 5,000 only. It has been admitted that the plaintiff is a very wealthy man. He has landed properties giving an income of about Rs. 30,000 a month and he makes 15 to 20 thousand Rupees a month by his business. Apparently, he has some position in the mercantile circle. The learned Judge says that it is difficult for him to discover a motive for this forgery, to call it by its true name, of Ex. 5. It is possible that a man of the plaintiff's position may be guilty of the offence of forgery or of using a forged document as genuine. But there must be some relation between the advantage he expects and the risk he runs by that forgery. Here it is a question of money only, because it cannot be said that Galstaun is anxious to get the property; and to say that a man of his position stoops so low as to countenance forgery, if not actually doing it, for the gain of such a paltry amount would require some strong evidence to support it.

It is urged on behalf of the respondent that this fact of the mortgage was not given out by Galstaun immediately after the death of Sookias when some petty creditors of Sookias saw him or wrote to him about their debts. This is explained very well by the fact that, before the death of Sookias, he wrote a note that Galstaun should be guardian of his minor son. After the death of Sookias, Galstaun actually took possession of all the properties of his debtor and it appears that he carried on the business of J. B. Sookias, through his brother C. B. Sookias for sometime. When he was written to by these small creditors the answer he gave was that he would take Letters of Administration after the reopening of the Court after the long vacation in 1914 and then look to the assets of the estate. There was no occasion for him then to state anything to the other creditors about his mortgage, and the fact that he did not tell them about this mortgage at the time does not go against the fact that there was such a mortgage.

Then, it has been urged that the pleader purporting to have been authorized by the plaintiff in that behalf made a statement in a petition Ex. 12, dated 1st May 1919, that an equitable mortgage had been made on the basis of a letter of hypothecation on the 30th June 1914, and the argument is that then it was intended by the plaintiff that there should be a letter of the 30th June by which the mortgage by deposit of title-deeds was effected. We do not think that such a conclusion is warranted. It might be either a mistake of Basil who had instructed the pleader to file the petition or the mistake of the pleader. In any case, the document of the 30th June 1914 does not create a mortgage by deposit of securities. On these grounds we are of opinion that it should be held that there was a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds on the 22nd May 1914 and that the letter dated 30th June 1914 purported to be signed by J. B. Sookias was actually signed by him and which letter shows the terms of the loan.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found that defendant No. 3 had purchased with notice of the mortgage. This point has not been contested before us. But, in any case, it seems to us that he, being a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree, has purchased the property subject to all the equities of the judgment-debtor and he cannot take up the position of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice.

As we have already said, no question has been raised as regards the amount which has been found due by the Subordinate Judge to the plaintiff, there will, therefore, be the usual mortgage-decree in favour of the plaintiff for the principal amount of Rs. 79,043-8 as-10 pias with interest at ten per cent. per annum with six-monthly rests from the date of suit to three months from this date, with costs calculated on that amount in the lower Court and in this Court. The defendants will bear their own costs throughout. The interest and costs of the plaintiff will be added to the mortgage-money. The period of redemption is fixed this day three months. From after that date interest will run on the whole amount found due at the rate of six per cent. per annum.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. XLI, r. 22—Appeal, withdrawal of, effect of—Cross-objections, after withdrawal, whether competent—Limitation Act (IX of 1908) s. 6.—Appeal, delay in filing—Review, time spent in, whether can be deducted.

The dismissal of an appeal on withdrawal has the effect of a decision on the merits. It leaves the finding of the trial Court final against the appellant and the rule of res judicata applies. [p. 678, col. 2.]

Rule 22 of O. XLI of the Civil Procedure Code allows a respondent to take a cross-objection which he could have taken by way of appeal; it does not allow him to take an objection which he has already taken by way of appeal and which has been decided against him. [p. 678, col. 2.]

Ramji Das v. Ajudhia Prasad, 25 A. 628, followed. The expression "cross-objections" in r. 22 of O. XLI of the Civil Procedure Code implies that the objections are taken in answer to a pending appeal. Cross objections cannot be filed where the appeal has been withdrawn.

Time spent in prosecuting with due diligence a proper application for review of judgment can be deducted under section 5 of the Limitation Act, from the period of limitation provided for an appeal. The mere fact that the applicant for review made a mistake of law in applying for review does not preclude him from obtaining the benefit of the section. [p. 679, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Daniels, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant arising out of a suit for specific performance of a contract. As the appeal raises a question of limitation both as to the plaintiff's suit and as to the plaintiff's appeal to the Court below and involves a question of res judicata as to the defendant's cross-objections in the Court below it will be necessary to set out the material facts and dates in some detail. The contract, of which specific performance is sought, was made on 1st April 1915. By it the defendant-appellant Parbhu Dayal agreed to sell to his nephew the plaintiff Murli Dhar one-fourth of a house whenever the plaintiff should pay him the sum of Rs. 200. Shortly after this, the defendant mortgaged the house to a third party and I am informed that the mortgagee has filed a suit on his mortgage and has obtained a decree. On 4th November 1921 the plaintiff filed the present suit for specific performance alleging that, on 21st September, he had tendered the sum of Rs. 200 to the defendant and asked him to carry out the contract and transfer the house to him and that the defendant had refused. The learned Munsif passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff on 18th March 1922 subject to his paying to the defendant a sum of Rs. 300 and one-fourth of the decree obtained by the mortgagee. The sum of Rs. 300 included the original Rs. 200 stipulated in the contract and a further sum of Rs. 100 on account of one-fourth share of the improvements to the house made by the defendant since the date of the contract. The plaintiff, on 29th March 1922, filed an application for review objecting to this condition. His application was dismissed on 6th May 1922.

In the meanwhile, on 24th April 1922, the defendant had appealed to the District Judge. On 15th May 1922 he applied to the Court below to withdraw the appeal and the appeal was dismissed on his application. On the next day, that is, one day after the appeal had been dismissed, the plaintiff filed cross-objections under O. XLI, r. 22. The Court below dismissed those objections on the ground that there was no appeal pending before it and, therefore, no cross-objection under O. XLI, r. 22 could be preferred or entertained, and that the plaintiff's remedy was to file an appeal. On the same date, namely, the 18th May 1922 the plaintiff filed the appeal against the judgment in which the present second appeal has been brought. The defendant thereupon filed cross-objections raising the same points which he had raised in his appeal of 24th April. The Court below has dismissed those objections as barred by the rule of res judicata. It has allowed the plaintiff's appeal by deleting the condition requiring the plaintiff to pay one-fourth of the decree obtained by the mortgagee. The defendant has preferred a second appeal to this Court and has urged in support of it the following grounds:—

1. That the plaintiff's appeal to the Court below was time barred.

2. That as the plaintiff's cross-objections to the defendant's appeal had previously been dismissed it was not competent to the plaintiff to file a separate appeal on the same points.

3. That the Court below was wrong in dismissing the defendant's cross-objections on the ground of res judicata.

4. That the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation under Article 113.

5. That the plaintiff by his own laches had disentitled himself to equitable relief by way of specific performance.

6. That instead of relegating the defendant to a separate suit for contribution in case the mortgage amount should be realised from him, the equities should be adjusted now by requiring the plaintiff to pay one-fourth of the mortgage-money. In other words, the decree of the trial Court should be restored.

I take the third plea first. This plea is wholly untenable. The dismissal of an appeal on withdrawal has the effect of a decision on the merits. It leaves the finding of the trial Court final against the appellant and the rule of res judicata applies. The language of O. XLI, r. 22 is to the same effect. The rule allows a respondent to take any cross-objection which he could have taken by way of appeal; it does not allow him to take an objection which he has already taken by way of appeal and which has been decided against him. The point was expressly decided against the appellant in Ramji Das v. Ajudhia Prasad (1) and there is nothing in the alteration in the wording of the rule under the new Code which renders this decision inapplicable. The result is that the appellant cannot now raise any point which was decided against him by the trial Court. His fourth and fifth pleas are, therefore, not maintainable and it is unnecessary to go into them.

It remains to consider his objection to the appeal filed by the plaintiff in the Court below. His first contention is that that appeal was time barred. This depends on whether the plaintiff can be allowed the benefit of the time occupied in prosecuting his application for review. It is pointed out that neither the first nor the second para. of section 14 of the Limitation Act applies to appeals and that in other cases, e.g., in section 12 where it was intended that the provision should apply to appeals, the word "appeal" has been separately mentioned. In dealing with this question it is, however, necessary to consider not merely section 14 but also section 5. The Privy Council, in Brij Indur Singh v. Kanshi Ram (2), have laid down that time spent in prosecuting with due diligence a proper application for review of judgment can be deducted under section 5. It is also now settled that the fact of the plaintiff having made a mistake of law does not necessarily preclude him from obtaining the benefit of the section. In this case there is a finding of the Court below that the plaintiff was prosecuting his application with due diligence and it appears to me that I should accept that finding.

The second objection is that the dismissal of the plaintiff's cross-objections to the defendant's appeal precluded him from appealing on his own account. If those objections had been dismissed on the merits this plea would have been unanswerable. The record shows quite clearly that they were not dismissed on the merits. Indeed, they appear to have been dismissed on an office report without even hearing the parties. They were dismissed on the view that it was not competent to a party to file cross-objections after the appeal of the other side had been dismissed. Even if the view of the Court below was incorrect I must look to the ground on which the objections actually were decided and not to what, in the view of the appellant, the Court ought to have done. In my opinion, however, the view taken by the Court in dismissing them was correct. The very word "cross-objections" used in O. 41, rule (and introduced, I may note, for the first time in the present Code) implies that the objections are taken in answer to a pending appeal. Clause (4) of the rule has been referred to by the appellant but that clause is really against him. It lays down that where, after the respondent has filed a memorandum of objection under the rule, the appeal is subsequently withdrawn or dismissed for default such withdrawal or dismissal shall not prevent the objections being heard and decided. The rule clearly implies that the objections have been filed prior to the appeal being dismissed or withdrawn. I know of no reported decision on the point, but I am informed that there is an unreported decision of Mr. Justice Banerji in which the same view has been taken.

On the sixth plea I do not consider that I should be justified in interfering with the decree of the Court below. It is not yet certain that the mortgagee will realise any portion of his security from the share of the house which is in dispute in this case.

The result is that the appeal fails and on all points and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

SHITIKANTA BANERJEE, AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art 142—Dispossession and discontinuance of possession—Burden of proof—Constructive possession of owner.

Where a plaintiff sues for possession on an allegation of dispossession, he must prove possession within twelve years before suit. In order to prove such possession he may rely upon the presumption that possession of the lawful owner continues as long as the land is incapable of actual possession, but if he relies upon this presumption he must prove that the land was incapable of actual possession within twelve years before suit. For instance, constructive possession may be shown by the fact that the land being under water was incapable of actual possession, or that, although it was capable of being possessed, no one had actually taken possession during the period in question. He cannot, however, by proving possession at any period anterior to twelve years before suit, shift the onus on to the defendant to prove his possession.

Case-law discussed.

Per Page, J.—A man may cease to use his land because he cannot use it, since it is under water. He does not thereby discontinue his possession: constructively it continues until he is dispossessed; and upon the cessation of the dispossession before the lapse of the statutory period, constructively it remains.

While the doctrine of constructive possession is equally applicable to cases where the plaintiff seeks to obtain possession of land in the possession of another and to cases where the plaintiff claims to recover possession of lands of which he alleges that he has been dispossessed, a plaintiff who frames his suit to recover possession of lands of which he has been dispossessed must needs prove that he has been in possession and that he has been dispossessed within twelve years prior to commencing proceedings to recover possession of the land.

SURESH OHANDRA MUKERJI v. SHITIKANTA BANERJEE

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal (with him Babus Panchanon Ghose and Apurbacharan Mukherjee), for the Respondents.

The facts of the case will appear from the following judgments delivered in the Second Appeal :—

Woodroffe, J.—This is a suit for declaration of the plaintiff's title to and for recovery of possession of certain lands covering, it is said, 10,000 bighas in area described in the schedule to the plaint. The facts are fully set forth both in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge and of my learned brother. I need not, therefore, repeat them except so far as is necessary for explaining the conclusions at which I have arrived.

Since the date of the plaint, claim to certain lands has been abandoned. The tract on the east within stations m, n, x, v, 8, 7, 36, 35m in the Commissioner's map was given up in the trial Court. In this Court so much of the disputed land as lies north of the Settlement line of 1904 (which corresponds to the southern banks of the river at the time of Revenue Survey in 1856) was given up. Out of the lands comprised within the Revenue Survey and the boundary lines of Kabirajpore the plaintiff's title has been found in respect of 15 chaks and the residuary portion of Mouza Kabirajpore. The chaks are numbered 5, 7, 15, 17, 61, 64, 69, 70, 73, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103 and 104. The residue does not bear any number. These 15 chaks and the residue lie scattered all over the Mouza.

The learned Subordinate Judge has given the plaintiff a decree for so much of the 15 chaks and the residue as lies, speaking roughly, south of the southern line of the map of 1903 (thick brown line in the Commissioner's map) which is near to the southernmost line of the Partition Map of 1899. The plaintiff's title to so much of the 15 chaks and the residue as lies north of the above-mentioned line has been held by the learned Subordinate Judge to have been extinguished by the adverse possession of the defendants. The present appeal related to so much of the disputed land as lies north of the above-mentioned line of 1903, and is covered by the 15 chaks and the residue of Mouza Kabirajpore. The appellant asks that khas possession be given to the plaintiff of so much of the whole of the disputed land as is covered by these 15 chaks and the residuary portion of Mouza Kabirajpore.

The decision of the suit depends upon the questions of limitation and adverse possession. It is conceded that the plaintiff's suit is governed by Article 142 of the Limitation Act as also that, under that Article, it is necessary for the plaintiff to show possession and dispossession within 12 years before the suit. As to the sort of possession and the mode of showing it I deal later. It is also conceded that, whilst the burden of proving his case, namely, possession and dispossession within 12 years lies upon the plaintiff, the burden of proving adverse possession lies upon the defendants. The defendants are not, however, called upon to prove anything unless and until the plaintiff has established his possession and dispossession within 12 years. If the plaintiff does that, then the onus is upon the defendants to prove their adverse possession for 12 years. It is very important, in my opinion, to keep this distinction well in sight in order to avoid the confusion which is liable to result in cases of this kind in which a very large number of decisions have been cited. The point is, however, in my opinion clear, namely, that the plaintiff must, first of all, establish possession and dispossession within 12 years of the suit. It has been contended on the plaintiff's behalf that as his title to the land has been found as also that he had possession of the land before diluvion, his constructive possession must be deemed to have continued until the defendants show that such possession has come to an end. The argument has been carried to the length of the statement that in a case of this kind it is only necessary for the plaintiff to establish his title and to allege that he is out of possession in order to obtain relief, it being upon the defendants to allege and prove when such dispossession took place. This, however, in my opinion, is a wrong view of the law. It will be, however, more convenient to deal with this matter after I have set forth the case which the plaintiff made in the plaint. This is the case upon which his claim must be judged.

According to the plaint, diluvion took place in the year 1890. In 1902 there was a reformation. At the time of the temporary Settlement by the Collectorate of Nadia in the year

SURESH CHANDRA MUKERJEE v. SHITIKANTA BANERJEE

1904 of Char Balliadanga the then Collector of Nadia declared the lands to be reformation in situ of Mouza Kabirajpore to which the plaintiff had title and the Collector released them in favour of the plaintiff as talukdar of Mouza Kabirajpore. The plaintiff alleges that at that time the land was in the form of an extensive sand-bank and unfit for cultivation and possession. It was only after the rainy season of October 1906 that the land became, according to the plaintiff's case fit for cultivation. At that time, it is alleged that the defendants proposed to take settlement of the land from the plaintiff. But owing to their, that is, the formers' delay the plaintiff with a view of settling the land with others attempted in March 1913, to have it surveyed by an Amin but the defendants, alleging that the lands were comprised within the Settlement mahal belonging to them and denying the title of the plaintiff prevented the plaintiff from making the Survey. This allegation is denied. The plaintiff then alleges that the defendants, not having a legal title, the plaintiff has brought this suit. He dates his cause of action as having gradually arisen from the date when a portion of the land first became fit for cultivation, that is, from the 18th October 1906. Obviously this is incorrect, as "becoming fit for cultivation" is not a cause of action. But it appears from the evidence of the witnesses for the plaintiff and is admitted in argument that the plaintiff was dispossessed in the year 1906 when the land became culturable; for the evidence of his witnesses is that the defendants have been in adverse possession since the year 1906. The defendants claim to have been in possession long before that.

Now the position is this, the evidence of the plaintiff's own witness establishes, as I have said, the adverse possession of the defendants for a period of ten years, a period of two years short of the period of limitation under Article 142. A question then arises as regards the two years prior to 1906, that is, a period of 12 years before this suit. On the face of the plaint, the plaintiff is not barred and if it were established as he alleges that the lands only became capable of possession and were possessed from the year 1906 then the plaintiff's suit would be in time because during the two years prior to 1906 the lands would have been,

according to the plaintiff's case, incapable of possession, having reformed only in 1902 and in the case of land incapable of possession it would have to be held that the plaintiff who has title has constructive possession during such period. But it has shown to a certainty in this case, and it has not been contested before us, that the story which has been put forward by the plaintiff is not a true one and the Judge has described it as absurd. For it has been abundantly shown that it is not true that the land for the first time re-formed in the year 1902 as alleged in the plaint. As a matter of fact, (to go no earlier) the land re-formed in 1880. In that year a Settlement was made; as also in 1890 another Settlement was made. There was a further re-formation and further Settlement more than 12 years before the suit. That being so, the question then arises whether or not the plaintiff's allegation having been disproved on this head he must not show that he had possession of the land during the period of 1904 to 1906. For the appellant it is contended that the plaintiff has not to show this, that we must assume, in the absence of any evidence and on the strength of his title, that during such period he had constructive possession unless and until the defendants prove their adverse possession during such time. In my opinion, however, this contention is not sound. The plaintiff sued for possession on the allegation of dispossession. He is bound to prove possession within 12 years before the suit. This possession may be either actual or constructive. His witnesses say that he was not in actual possession from the time the land became submerged as it became incapable of such possession and that he has not had actual possession since the land re-formed and become culturable. The plaintiff must, therefore, prove that the land was incapable of actual possession within 12 years before the suit, that is, during the two years preceding 1906 since which date, admittedly, there has been adverse possession. In other words, he must show that this constructive possession continued on account of dilution and on account of the land being incapable of possession within 12 years of the suit. He must show that the land became incapable of user by submergence or otherwise and remained in such a state of incapacity for use until within the period of limitation.

Now the question is whether the plaintiff has shown this : It is, in the first place, to be observed that there has been admitted adverse possession for 10 years before the suit and having regard to the fact that some of the disputed land re-formed so far back as the year 1880, some 26 years before the institution of the suit, it is in my opinion prima facie probable that in the two years prior to 1906 the land was capable of possession as it admittedly was during the ten subsequent years. As stated in the judgment, the plaintiff does not claim to have exercised an act of ownership over any part of the re-formed land and his witnesses show that possession had been for ten years prior to the suit with the defendants. Of course, if the allegation in the plaint be established there would obviously be a distinction between the period of ten years before the suit and the period before that because the answer to the question why we should not hold that the defendants admitted possession of ten years did not extend two years further would, upon the plaint, have been that it could not be extended further because the land was incapable of possession having only been re-formed in 1902. But as that case is shown to be untrue that reason can no longer be given. The plaintiff now seeks to establish, (if the onus be upon him) that the land was unoccupied and incapable of user during the years preceding 1906 and, therefore, his constructive possession continued. He seeks to do this not by his own evidence, of which he has none, for that period but by the evidence given on behalf of the defendants. Some inconsistent arguments have been addressed to us upon this part of the case. Thus, the evidence of the defendants has been attacked as untrue and untrustworthy. If that be the fact then the plaintiff who seeks to use that evidence can gain nothing thereby. Again, it has been sought to show that the lands of which user has been spoken of by the defendants' witnesses have not been sufficiently identified with the lands in dispute. It may be, it has been suggested that the undisputed portions of the Char Balliadanga were the subject of some at least of the user of which the witnesses spoke. But if this be so then the evidence is irrelevant, because it is only on the assumption that the defendant's evidence relates to the disputed lands in suit that it can be of any use to the plaintiff. All that the plaintiff can consistently do as regards this matter is in my opinion to admit the general trustworthiness of the defendant's evidence as also that such evidence refers to the disputed land, but he may at the same time contend that the acts of user which are spoken to are not of such a character as to constitute adverse possession by reason of inadequacy in continuity, extent and so forth. I will discuss, shortly, the defendant's evidence when dealing with the question of adverse possession. I am now dealing with the question only whether the plaintiff has established his case the onus of which lies upon him, namely, possession and dispossession within 12 years of the suit. It is sufficient to say here that in my opinion it is not possible to say that the defendant's evidence establishes in the plaintiff's favour the fact that the lands in dispute were either not used or were incapable of user and that, therefore, the plaintiff had constructive possession within 12 years prior to the suit.

The next question is this : assuming that the plaintiff has established his case, then the onus is on the defendants to show that they had adverse possession during the period of 1904 to 1906. We must consider whether they have, as the learned Judge has held, discharged that onus.

Before entering into this question it is necessary to advert to an objection by the respondents, namely, the position of the chaks which the plaintiff claims has not been in some cases delineated and in others the chaks have not been numbered. In reply to this objection we were asked by the plaintiff to direct the Commissioner in this case to appear and to re-lay and number all the chaks of Kabi-rappore upon the map of the disputed lands prepared and submitted by him. The learned Vakil for the respondents objected to this on the ground that the appellant should not be allowed to amend his case in appeal. The view, however, which we took with regard to this matter was that the appellant's case should not fail on such ground if it were possible for the Commissioner to do what the plaintiff asked without calling any further evidence ; in other words, if it was a question of numbering and (if necessary) plotting the chaks from the maps already in evidence in the case and without taking further evidence. We accordingly directed the Commissioner to appear and on his appearance and our making the order in terms of the plaintiff's petition the learned Vakil for the respondent (without prejudice to his contention above-mentioned) asked us also to direct the Commissioner to plot on his map the Government Settlement Chittas of 1880, 1890 and the dags of the Partition Commissioner. This prayer we also acceded to.

The Commissioner's report finds that the chaks and residue claimed in the appeal fall within the disputed area. His report, however, raises a question whether only six chaks and not fifteen form part of the appellant's patni. These statements in the report upon this point are objected to on the ground that they raise a new case, the title to these chaks having been found by the first Court to be with the plaintiff and the only question, therefore, which, it is said, was left open on our order was the identification of the chaks and their numbering. It is to be observed that the statements to which exceptions are taken are not statements by the Commissioner himself but are taken from the thak statement which was already on the record before the direction was given by the Court to the Commissioner. It is denied, on the other hand, that it is a new case. Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal for defendant No. 1 as also the learned Vakil who support the same interest state that they argued that the appellant could not claim all the 15 chaks because the plaintiff's estate only comprised six chaks. Accepting this statement of the learned Vakil it is not, in my view of the case as regards limitation, necessary to determine this question because I think that the appeal fails on other grounds than that of title. Re-laying of the Government chittas of 1880 and 1890 and the partition plots of 1899 show that whatever be the title the lands are covered in part by these chittas. The report identifies the plaintiff's lands and the lands covered by the chittas.

Upon the question whether the defendants have proved adverse possession it is to be remembered, in the first place, that adverse possession for ten years prior to the suit is admitted. No doubt if (as the plaintiff alleges in the plaint) the land only appeared and became culturable ten years before the suit there is an answer to the objection as regards limitation. But when we find that that story is untrue and that in fact the land commenced to re-appear at, to go to no earlier date, 1880 that is, 26 years before the suit, it seems prima facie likely that the adverse possession which is admitted for ten years existed for the additional two years prior to 1906. On the one hand, there is nothing to prevent such an inference, seeing that the lands did not re-form and become first culturable about 1906, and, on the other hand, we have the fact of the re-formation of the land in 1880, 1890 and subsequent years. It is not to be supposed that the land was allowed to remain for so many years without any possession having been taken.

We must distinguish, doubtless, between the question of possession and the nature of possession. It may be that in any particular case acts of possession may be shown which are not adequate to establish adverse possession by reason of continuity, limited extent, or other reason. That some possession was exercised over the land indisputable I have no doubt. We have it noted upon the Government map made in the proceedings of 1903 that the defendants were then in possession. If that statement is correct and the possession amounted to adverse possession then the suit is barred. We also have the fact that Settlements have been made with the defendants from the year 1880 in respect of which revenue has been paid by them. It is to be noted that the defendants, thus, are not in the position of mere trespassers but they are persons who entered into possession under colour of title. As regards this it has been said that where a man enters upon a land claiming title his entry into possession refers to such title. Where he enters without title the seisin is confined to possession by metes and bounds, it being a well known rule that mere trespassers and squatters must, in order to establish adverse possession, show actual and not merely a constructive possession. So where there is, as here, an entry into possession of a tract of land under a deed of settlement containing specific boundaries the possession may be referred to the boundaries given in such title-deed. I do not say that this is anything more than a rule of evidence. As such, it must be applied with reference to the facts of each particular case. Thus, as I have said during the course of argument, if under a deed giving title to a tract of 100 square miles, actual possession is taken only of a very small portion of it and nothing further is done it may be that such possession would be insufficient to constitute adverse possession of the whole tract to which there was a colour of title. I think, however, that as a rule of evidence in judging whether adverse possession has been established or not we may take into account the fact that the party is not a mere trespasser but is acting under a colour of title. But, however this be, my conclusion would be the same, namely, that the appellant has not shown that the decree should be reversed. In this case the defendants held under a Settlement from the Government. In addition to the fact that the defendant's possession was noted in a map of the Settlement Proceedings of 1903 we have the fact that the land was partitioned between the defendants in 1899 under a decree of the High Court and boundary pillars were set up denoting the parties' respective possession. It seems to me, under the circumstances of this case, unlikely that persons would for years pay Government revenue without making any user of the land.

As to the actual user, the learned Judge says that the defendants have examined certain witnesses whom he names to prove possession of the Char lands. He says: "I think this part of the defendant's evidence is not at all satisfactory. Such evidence can be manufactured by a powerful man like the defendant without much difficulty. But there is no doubt that this evidence, coupled with the documentary evidence referred to above, unmistakably show that the defendants adversely possessed by far the greater portions of the disputed Char since 1903." It has been argued that the learned Judge has discredited the oral evidence. But I do not read his judgment in this way. Evidently what the learned Judge meant to say was, that without the documentary evidence the oral evidence to which he refers would not have been enough, as it might have been got up. For if it had been in his opinion unreliable in the sense of untrue he could not have said "coupled with the documentary evidence." By so coupling it the Judge in effect says that he does accept it when associated with the documentary evidence in the case. I may observe here that there is no presumption that evidence is manufactured even when given by "a powerful landlord." It must be shown by cross-examination of witnesses or other evidence in the case that there are reasons for disbelieving the evidence on this or on any other ground. It is to be observed in this connection that the defendant's witnesses are corroborated by the plaintiff's own witnesses so far as the period of ten years is concerned extending up to the year 1906. I see no sufficient reason to doubt the evidence given that the defendants had possession for more than two years before that date. One of the defendants has given his own evidence which is more than the plaintiff has done, who, on the other hand, set up an untrue case and has not appeared to support it.

It is to be observed also in this connection that amongst the witnesses whom the learned Judge mentions the name of the Amin witness, Rajani Nath Dey, D. W. No. 7, is not included. Prima facie he is a disinterested witness, although the contrary has been suggested on the ground that when he went to test the measurement he put up in the defendant's house. He says that in 1890 Shiba Das Babu, the father of defendant Shiti Kantha Bannerjee, was in possession of the Char which he then saw for the first time. He saw it again in 1903. In 1903 he found the major portion of the Char under cultivation. About 2 to 2½ rashis wide lands above the water was sandy. Above that all lands were culturable. There were some trees and Shiti Kantha grew Kalai on the culturable portion of the Char. It has been suggested that the cross-examination establishes that this gentleman refers to the undisputed area. But I am unable to read his evidence in this way. Because he refers in cross-examination to certain plots Nos. 11 of Touji No. 2460 and 26 and 29 of Touji No. 824 it does not follow that he meant thereby to limit the general statement which he made in his examination in chief. Otherwise, for what reason was he called?

As regards the documentary evidence to which the learned Judge has referred, it consists of partition proceedings of 1899, a note of possession on the map of 1903, rent-receipts and chittas as regards four of which at least the Commissioner compared them with the locality. The first mentioned proceedings are of course not binding as a judgment not having been given in proceedings to which the appellant was a party. But they are evidence to show the origin of the defendants' possession and relevant in connection with the obtaining of possession and demarcation of lands by metes and bounds under those proceedings. In my opinion the note on the Settlement map of 1903 is of great importance.

The learned Judge comes to the conclusion that the tract of lands which are shown as unculturable in the Partition Map of 1899 were in the actual occupation of the defendants in that year and also in 1903. That being so, he comes to the conclusion that the defendants have succeeded in establishing their adverse title to all the re-formed lands of Kabirajpore which fall within the Settlement Map of 1903 and the Partition map of 1899.

Doubtless, in a case of admitted title one is disposed to regard with strictness evidence of adverse possession and to call for satisfactory proof before deciding against the title. In the present case there was entry under colour of title from the Government and on a fair reading of the evidence, which in my opinion sufficiently establishes both the fact and nature of the possession necessary, I agree with the Subordinate Judge that it does dispose of the plaintiff's case. In my opinion there is no sufficient ground for disturbing the judgment under appeal and the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

A cross-objection has been made with respect to costs. The lower Court has directed that each of the parties should bear and pay their own costs on account of the Commissioner, and as regards other costs, half costs have been disallowed. It has been contended in the cross-objection that these orders are incorrect and that they should be reversed having regard to the small area of the land which has been granted to the plaintiff. No doubt the plaintiff has claimed a great deal more than what was given by the Court. But he did succeed in part and I am unable to hold that the question of costs in this case raises such a matter of principle as would justify this Court in interfering in appeal.

We have already given our order as regards costs of the Commissioner in this Court. But to avoid any further question I may record our order that the cost of the Commissioner in this Court is to be borne by the parties in equal shares. This cost has already been paid to the Commissioner according to the shares stated.

As there is a difference of opinion and there is no majority varying or reversing the decree appealed from, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Cuming, J.:—The suit out of which this appeal arises is a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession. The plaintiff's case was that he took a patni Settlement of a certain lot Madhusudhanpore and that within the lot was a certain Mouza called Kabirajpore, and that by virtue of this patni title and also by adverse possession he had acquired a good title and was in possession of the property in suit. In his plaint he does not state when he took the patni Settlement of which his adverse possession began. His Vakil stated that he took the patni Settlement in 1857 shortly after the Revenue Survey. The superior landlord is the Maharajah of Burdwan. The northern boundary of the Mouza Kabirajpore was the river Bhagirathi. In the year 1880 the river Bhagirathi began to wash away the Char, north of Kabirajpore, and from the year 1890 it began to wash away the main lands of village Kabirajpore and a Char appeared on the north side of the river adjoining Char Balia-danga which is a Char on the Nadia or north side of the river.

From the year 1902 the land of Kabirajpore began to re-form on the Nadia side of the river Bhagirathi which is one of the many names for the river Ganges. It may be noted here that at the time of the Revenue Survey the river Bhagirathi formed the boundary at this place between the Districts of Burdwan and Nadia.

The Bhagirathi continued to move towards the south and the land of the Mouza Kabirajpore began to be re-formed in situ from 1902 and the said land began to be fit for cultivation at the end of the rainy season of 1313 (1906).

In 1904 the Collector of Nadia made a temporary settlement of the Char called Balia-danga in the District of Nadia with defendants 1 and 2 which Char is recorded as Settlement

SURESH CHANDRA MUKERJI v. SHITIKANTA BANERJEE

Mahal Nos. 824 and 2460. At the time of the temporary Settlement in 1904 a map was prepared and the Collector found that some 665 odd bighas of land which had been measured as forming part of Char Baliadanga were really a reformation in situ of village Kabirajpore and so he excluded them from the Settlement. These lands were then unfit for cultivations. The Bhagirathi then moved further south and a further tract of land of village Kabirajpore re-formed, in extent some 334 bighas odd.

The plaintiff in 1913 sent his Amin to measure the lands. The defendants 1 and 2 resisted him and would not allow the plaintiff to measure the land. Hence, the suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession on the ground that these lands are re-formation in in situ the land of village Kabirajpore which is included within his Patni Taluk lot 10 Madhusudanpur. The defendants denied the title of the plaintiff. They contended that the plaintiff did not hold a 16-annas share in lot Madhusudanpore, that he had only a fractional interest in Mahal Kabirajpore. They denied that the lands in suit were a re-formation in situ of the land of Mouza Kaporajpore. They contended that they were accretions to Char Baliadanga recorded as belonging to Touji Mahal 824 and 2460 of the Nadia Collectorate, which had been settled with them. Further, that the land in dispute had become fit for cultivation more than 12 years before the date of the suit and the defendants had themselves possessed the lands for more than 12 years before the date of the suit and so the plaintiff had lost his title, if any, by adverse possession.

They traversed all the allegations of fact in the plaint. Briefly, then, their case was that the plaintiff had no title and that the defendant had acquired a title by adverse possession. The trial Court found that the land in suit was a re-formation in suit of the land of Mouza Kabirajpore. The trial Court then dealt with the plaintiff's two titles to the land in dispute, namely, his claim to so much of the land of Kabirajpore as falls within lot Madhusudanpore under Estate No. 10 and also his title by adverse possession to the other land of the Mouza. He found that the plaintiff was sole owner of lot Madhusudanpore. Further, that plaintiff had title to Mouza Kabirajpore to the extent of 15 chaks and the residuary portion before the lands were diluviated. He found that the plaintiff had not established his title by adverse possession to the rest of the village. He found, however, that defendant had acquired a title by adverse possession to all the re-formed lands which fall between the boundary line of the Char as shown in the Partition Map of 1899 and the Settlement Map of 1903 and that the plaintiff was only entitled to so much of the 15 chaks and the residuary parts of Mouza Kabirajpore which are bounded on the south by the River Ganges and on the north by the lines 24-24, 24-15 (western part of the southern boundary line of the Char in Ex. D) and the southern boundary line of the Settlement Map of 1903 up to the point where it runs towards the east and also of the disputed land which are bounded by the river, the lines Nos. 33, 35 to 36, 36 to 7 and the eastern boundary lines of the Settlement Map of 1903 up to the point Q and he was further entitled to mesne profits for these lands.

The plaintiff has appealed with regard to the land to which his title has been declared but of which it has been found that he has lost title by adverse possession. There was also an appeal regarding the land to which the title was found not to have been established but this part of the appeal has not been pressed. The case which he wishes to establish is as follows: It has been found that he had title to these lands and that these lands were washed away. So long as the lands remained under water and when they again appeared as a re-formation his title subsisted and as the lands were not fit for possession or use when they appeared again he must be considered to be in constructive possession. The defendants have not shown that they have continuous possession for more than 12 years before the date of suit. The lands are inundated from time to time and even if the defendant had any possession, as soon as the lands were inundated again the title and possession went back to the true owner for the defendants as tort-feasors can not be held to be in constructive possession during the period that the land in suit went under water, for the doctrine of constructive possession does not apply to a tort-feasor. Further, that to establish their title by adverse possession the defendants must prove their actual possession of every parcel of land to which they allege they have acquired a title by adverse possession. The doctrine of constructive possession is not available to a tort-feasor and it cannot be held that if he is proved to be in actual possession of a certain portion that he is in constructive possession of the rest of the land having regard to the nature of the land: Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Gopinath Mandal (1).

The first question which requires decision is, what Article of the Limitation Act applies.

Now, the plaintiff sues for recovery of possession on establishment of his title. Clearly, therefore, Art. 142 applies and the plaintiff must sue within 12 years of the date of dispossession. This point had been discussed at length in the case of Bakhal Chundra Ghose v. Durga Das Samata (2), in which all the authorities on the question have been collected and fully discussed, and I entirely agree with the decision arrived at. The plaintiff in his case dates the commencement of his dispossession from the year 1904, October, when he says the land became fit for cultivation and further states that when his men went in 1913 to measure the land they were resisted and turned out.

It is contended that the plaintiff must show that he is in possession within 12 years of the date of suit. This contention no doubt is correct. The plaintiff-appellant answers that argument by contending that he has been all along in constructive possession. That the land was sand and incapable of actual possession and that, therefore, it is sufficient for him to show that he has title and that then the defendant must show that he has had adverse possession for more than the statutory period. He argued that as the property was not capable of actual possession the presumption is that legal possession continued with him the rightful owner and it is sufficient for him to prove that the property remained in this state to within 12 years of the suit: [Mirza Shamsher Bahadur v. Munshi Kunj Behari Lal (3)].

(1) 6 Ind. Cas. 892; 13 C. L. J. 625.

(2) 87 Ind. Cas. 678; 26 C. W. N. 724; (1922) A. I. R. (C) 557.

(3) 7 C. L. J. 414; 12 C. W. N. 278; 3 M. L. T. 219.

Further, that where land has been shown to have been in a condition unfitting it for actual enjoyment in the usual modes at such a time and under such circumstances, that that state naturally would and probably did continue till within 12 years of suit it may properly be presumed that it did so continue and that the plaintiff's possession continued also until the contrary is shown: [Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (4)].

Now, a careful consideration of these cases (2) (3) (4) referred to shows that there is no deviation from the rule that in an action in ejectment the onus is on the plaintiff to show that he was in possession and was dispossessed within the statutory period. This principle the learned Judges re-affirm. What they do, however, consider, and that is of importance in this case is, what is necessary, looking at the particular circumstances of the case, for the plaintiff to prove in order to establish his possession within 12 years of the suit.

In the present case it has been proved that before division the title and possession of the 15 Chaks and residuary land was with the plaintiff and the finding has not been challenged by the respondent in appeal. An attempt was made, after the argument had been concluded and the case has been sent to the Commissioner to relay certain plots, to argue that the plaintiff had not established his title to some 9 of these Chaks. The case was already concluded and it clearly was not open to the respondent to raise this point at that stage. The material on which he relied was really on the record before the case was sent by us to the Commissioner for he wished to base his argument on Ex. H H. We have now to see what was the condition of the land and the manner of possession. If the plaintiff can show he has title, that the land was washed away and after re-formation was unfit for possession and continued so up to or near a time within 12 years of the date of suit the plaintiffs would be entitled to the benefit of the presumption that they had constructive possession as rightful owner at the time of dispossession in 1906. If the plaintiffs are entitled to this presumption then the onus will be on the defendants to show the plaintiffs lost their title by adverse possession. The period with which we are mainly concerned so far as adverse possession is concerned is the period two or three years immediately before 1906. Admittedly, the land is a Char a re-formation in situ of the village Kabirajpore. The plaintiff's case was that it was not washed away till 1880. The evidence in the case shows that it was in or before 1880 that the land began to re-form and continued the process up to the present time. To this extent obviously the plaintiff's case is not in accordance with the facts found. How far his case is affected by this will be discussed later on. When the process of diluvion began it is not possible to say but it was apparently some time after 1857 when the plaintiff purchased.

What has then been the condition of the land after re-formation?

To deal first with the defendants' evidence.

In considering all the evidence one fact must be borne in mind that these disputed lands form an accretion to another Char, Char Baliadanga which admittedly belongs to the defendants. The importance of this is obvious when we see in what a vague way the witnesses have deposed because it is not easy as a rule to say whether any particular statement refers to the Char as a whole or to the land in dispute.

Taking, first of all, the evidence of defendant No. 1.

He says that from 1301 to 1305 (1894-98) they possessed the Char partly in Khas and partly through tenants. He also sold Babla trees growing on the Char and fishermen used to catch fish and spawn.

To what extent Kalai was grown he does not state. He does not produce any of his papers to show that he received any money from any tenant or from any one for the sale of his Kalai or in case when the Kalai was grown by himself his expense of growing it.

The fact that fishermen used to catch spawn and fish on the Char would show it was liable to inundation. He then goes on to refer to the partition proceedings in 1899 and says 200 bighas were unculturable and the rest culturable. This apparently refers to the land in dispute as he says it was the southern portion of the Char. The mere statement by an interested party that the lands were culturable is perhaps of little value. The only real test is whether they were cultivated. The witness, however, gives us no indication how much of the Char was cultivated. Further on he states that sand is now being deposited in culturable lands and that some 400 or 500 bighas have recently been covered with sand and the lands are again being washed away. Carefully examined, this witness's evidence would show that the land or portions of it were liable to submergence and had actually been submerged from time to time, otherwise sand would not be deposited on it or fish caught on it. Accepted at its highest, it would prove that Kalai had been grown on the land but it gives no indication how much land was sown with Kalai and the failure to produce any papers in support of these statements makes the bare statement of little or no value. His next witness is Gobinda Biswas. This witness is the Dewan of defendant No. 2 who has been disputing with defendant No. 1 for a long time for the possession of Char Baliadanga. He visited the Char in 1899. He states that the Char was followed from 1899-1901 and that in these years there were no tenants there. He states that the southern portion of the Char was sandy. His evidence proved little or nothing as to the state of the Char except to show that in 1899 some 275 bighas were sandy. His evidence is rather vaguely recorded. It is difficult to say whether he refers to the whole Char Baliadanga of which the disputed land formed a part or the disputed land only. He, however, speaks to deposit of silt which would show the Char was inundated from time to time.

The next witness relied on is Rajani Kanta Das (page 169) and the statement on which reliance is placed is his statement "I saw Baliadanga Char even after 1903. In 1903 I found the major portion of the Char under cultivation." He, however, here refers to the whole Char Baliadanga of which admittedly the northern portion belongs to the defendants and so possibly the major portion under cultivation refers to the northern portion. He states there were here and there Babla trees. It is not possible to say from his statement that he was referring to the disputed land as being under cultivation and this same remark applies to all his evidence. His statements would apply to the undisputed as well as to the disputed portion of the Char.

The next witness to whose evidence our attention has been drawn is Kali Prasanna Chukerbutty (page 172). This witness took an ijara lease of the Char in 1902-1903 and he cannot say whether any part of the land was tenanted then. He simply grew Kalai but has no papers to support his statement. Further, that at the time of the partition of the Char Baliadanga (1899) it was partly culturable and partly full of sand. He again is speaking of the whole Char and not only of the disputed portion. So it is not possible to say from his evidence whether any portion of the culturable land was in the disputed land or not. He says north of the sand were Babla trees and north of the Babla trees cultivation but where the cultivation began is not clear and that is the important point in this case. Whether any act he refers to took place on the disputed or undisputed portion of the Char it is impossible to say. Lastly, we have Alef Sheik (p. 182). His evidence helps very little for it is impossible to say whether he refers to the disputed or undisputed part of Char Baliadanga. His evidence would show that a part of the Char was sandy and silt was deposited from time to time which would show that the lands were liable to inundation and were inundated from time to time. The evidence of these witnesses would seem to show that the land was sandy and liable to inundations and was inundated from time to time, a condition often found in re-formed Char lands.

The plaintiff's own evidence would go to show that the land did not become culturable till some 10 or 12 years before the date they were deposing, viz., 6 or 8 years before the date of suit. This evidence really only deals with the condition of the land after 1902 where it is alleged by him the land re-appeared and does not deal with the period between 1880 and 1902. It is his case before 1902 the land was under water although this is not a fact he may well have been grievously mistaken not realising, as apparently no one else did, that the land accreting to Char Baliadanga were really re-formation in situ of Kabirajpore. His evidence as to the time of re-formation in view of the documentary evidence on this point is obviously incorrect. The defendant has further relied on certain documentary evidence. First, of the two Settlements of 1880 and 1890. In these two Settlements one for ten years and one for fourteen the disputed land was settled with the defendant as part of Char Baliadanga which admittedly belongs to the defendants. The disputed land which increased at each Settlement was treated as an accretion to Char Baliadanga which is in the Nadia District and it was not known till the Settlement of 1904 that the disputed lands were really a re-formation of village Kabirajpore which belongs to the District of Burdwan. The mere fact that defendants took Settlement of these accretions does not prove that they were then fit for cultivation and capable of being effectively possessed. The Zemindar would naturally take Settlement of an accretion to his land at a low rate of rent in the hope that it would improve in value and to prevent any rival Zemindar taking it. Such Settlements are often in the nature of a speculation.

In the Settlement Map of 1903 when it was discovered that the disputed lands were a re-formation in situ of Kabirajpore a note is made that they are in possession of the defendants. But there is nothing to show what the nature of that possession was. Possibly this entry was made because the former Settlement had been with the defendant. It had been contended by the defendants-respondents that the appellant must have known of these Settlements with the defendants. There is no reason why he should. The Settlement was made by the Collector of Nadia. The appellant's land is in the District of Burdwan and they are now on the opposite side of the river. The operation of measuring them need attract no attention. Neither would Settlement be offered to the appellant as the Collector of Nadia did not know till 1903 that these lands belonged to Kabirajpore in the District of Burdwan. He treated them as being accretion to Char Baliadanga in the District of Nadia.

The documentary evidence proved nothing about the state of the lands. No doubt the land has been in existence some 40 years but Char land may in some cases never become fit for cultivation or possession. It certainly cannot be presumed that it must have. The conclusion to which I have come is that the land in suit after re-formation remained incapable of possession in the ordinary way by cultivation until 1906 when defendants began to cultivate it and that in this case we may fairly presume that constructive possession remained with the true owner up till 1906. Char lands are cases to which the doctrine laid down in Mirza Shamsler Bahadur v. Munshi Kunj Behari Lal, (3) Mahmed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (4) Raj Kumar Roy v. Gobind Chunder Roy (5) is applicable. These lands appear often after many years when the whole configuration of the country due to the shifting of a big river is changed the lands appearing sometimes, as in the present case, in a different district and only a careful Survey showed to what district they belonged. In such circumstance, every presumption should be made in favour of the true owner. The case may be viewed as from another standpoint. The plaintiff having shown by the evidence on the record that neither party had exercised any act of possession a presumption can be raised in his favour as to the question of possession of the land prior to his dispossession by the defendant-Rakhal Chandra Ghose v. Durga Das Samanta (2).

The respondents have contended that the case now set up by the appellant in appeal differs from the case he made out in his plaint and the case found on the facts. He argues that in the plaint the plaintiff-appellant's case was that the lands began to be diluviated in 1880 and the process continued in 1890 that they began to re-form from 1902 and began to be fit for cultivation in 1906. Further, the appellant's case in his plaint was that he was dispossessed in 1913 when an Amin went to measure the land, whilst his own evidence would show that he was dispossessed in 1906 and onwards.

Now, undoubtedly, the documentary evidence has shown clearly that the lands had begun to re-form in 1880 and obviously, therefore, the plaintiff's case is here incorrect. But it cannot be said that plaintiff has changed in any way the relief he asked for. The relief asked for is the same and it is still his case that the cause of action arose in 1906. He does not seem to date his cause of action from 1913 when the Amin was prevented from going on the land, but his plaint states (para. 10) that the cause of action has gradually arisen from the date when a portion of the land became fit for cultivation in 1906.

Then we must bear in mind the peculiar circumstances of the case. It is a case of land re-forming after diluviation in a big river which has largely shifted its course. A mere inspection of the land would tell no one whether they were a re-formation in situ of any particular land. The District Authorities until 1904 treated them as belonging to Char Baliadanga in Nadia District and it was after the Collector of Nadia had released the lands in 1904 that the appellant realised they were a re-formation in situ of his village Kabirajpore. In the particular circumstances of the case I do not think the plaintiff should be non-suited because he was inaccurate in giving the date when the land re-formed. The whole evidence is before the Court, and so it cannot be said that either party has been taken by surprise.

Further, the respondent has contended the case now argued by the appellant that there was an interruption of the adverse possession of the respondent by inundation, is a new case which was never raised in the lower Court. I do not think there is any substance in this objection.

The respondent raised the defence of adverse possession and the appellant is obviously entitled to show that one of the elements necessary for adverse possession, viz., continuity is absent and this he can show by arguing that the evidence shows the land was under water from time to time.

It is then necessary to deal with the question of adverse possession and to consider whether the respondent has made out a title by adverse possession. It will be seen that the evidence dealing with this point is practically the same as the evidence which has been dealt with in considering what was the state of the land up to 1906 and the finding I have already come to really disposes of this point. I, however, propose to deal with it separately. The plaintiff's evidence admits that the defendants began taking possession of their land in

(5) 19 C. 660 (P. C.); 19 I. A. 140; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 140; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 888 (P. C.).

1906. The suit was instituted in 1916 and there would thus remain at least two years during which the respondent-defendant must prove that he held the lands in adverse possession.

Now the respondent to succeed must prove actual continuous possession of the lands to which he alleges he has acquired a right by adverse possession for the statutory period. No doubt, acts of possession over a part of immoveable property may in certain cases be evidence of de facto possession of the whole. This rule, however, operates with full force in favour only of the true owner and should be applied with caution, if at all, in favour of the wrong-doer: Mohini Mohan Roy v. Promoda Nath Roy (6) The possession of the wrong-doer should be held to be confined to what he is in actual possession of: See also Mirza Shumser Bahadur v. Munshi Kunj Behari Lal, (3) and Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta (7).

The same question has been discussed in the case of Baroda Prosad Roy v. Anmoda Mohan Ray, (8). Mookerjee, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, points out that to establish adverse possession it is not sufficient to show that some adverse acts of possession have been done but the possession must be adequate in continuity, in publicity and in extent of area to establish that it is possession adverse to the true owner and, further, that the doctrine of constructive possession applies only in favour of the rightful owner and cannot as a rule be extended in favour of a wrong-doer whose possession must be confined to the land of which he is in actual occupation. The learned Judge gives, as an instance, that where the party relies on possession through their tenants evidence must be given to show the tenants were in actual possession and such possession covered the whole of the disputed land. Further, it must be proved that with regard to any particular portion that it has been continuously in the possession of the party claiming adverse possession visible, exclusive and hostile for the statutory period.

(8) 6 Ind. Cas. 859; 13 C. L. J. 80.

It is pointed out that, as soon as the land became unfit or incapable of use or occupation, the title of the true owner revived. The respondent has argued that he was not a wrong-doer but entered under a bona fide claim of title and so his position is different from a mere trespasser and that he is in the position of a true owner. I am not aware that what is obviously a dangerous doctrine has ever been accepted by this Court.

Examined in the light of these principles, the defendants have clearly failed to make out any title by adverse possession.

In considering the probability or improbability of the defendant's case we must remember that up to 1899 the two defendants were fighting each other for the possession of the Char Bahadanga and this fact might render it highly problematical whether either of them ever had effective possession of the land in dispute. The evidence they rely on is documentary and oral. With regard to the oral evidence the learned Subordinate Judge says it is unsatisfactory and can easily be manufactured but coupling it with the documentary evidence he held that the defendants adversely possessed the greater portion of the disputed Char since 1903. The documentary evidence is mainly the evidence of Settlement by the Collector and it is not easy to see how this substantiates the oral evidence which is directed to prove actual possession. To deal with the documentary evidence first.

The respondents rely for this on the three Settlements of 1880, 1890, 1904 and the partition proceedings of 1899.

To take first the two Settlements of 1880 and 1890.

They prove that so much of the land as was re-formed at the time of the Settlement was together with a tract of land which admittedly belongs to the defendants settled with the defendants. But this does not prove that the defendants actually occupied or used the land or that it was capable of user. It may well have suited the defendants to take Settlement of these Char lands in the hope they would some day become capable of use. But this does not by itself show that the land was actually used and occupied. Then we have the partition proceedings of 1899. These proceedings show that these lands were partitioned together with other lands which admittedly belong to the defendants. It has been argued that the defendants would not fight over lands of which they had not possession and were not in occupation. Here, again, it is to be remembered that the partition suit also included the rest of Char Baliadanga which admittedly belongs to them. That, again, does not prove that the lands were used or occupied. The Settlement Map of 1903 has on it the remark that these lands are in the possession of the defendants but that, again, does not show what the nature of the possession was. Lastly, there are certain chittas which cover a small portion of the disputed land. They are for the year 1306 and there are also the counterfoils which it is alleged show receipt of rent from tenants. Their genuineness is very doubtful. They contain the names of some 18 tenants only one of whom is examined, Pachouri, and he says his receipts have been burnt. Of the others it is a remarkable fact that during the space of some 16 years there has been no change in any of the tenants. Exactly the same tenants were holding the holdings in 1322 as in 1306. Some of these tenants must be available. The Commissioner re-laid chittas of four of the plots and then using them as a starting point re-laid the others on the plan not on the ground. This evidence obviously would not show actual occupation of these plots nor that tenants were ever actually settled there in the absence of the tenants themselves. It would show that when the Commissioner visited the spot in 1916 that certain plots were pointed out on the chitta plots and four were identified by him.

Next, we have the oral evidence which has already been dealt with in considering the question of the condition of the land and which it is unnecessary to recapitulate in detail. It shows, even if believed, though I may say I share the learned Subordinate Judge's doubt as to its genuineness, that at some time or other some Kali was grown and some Babla trees cut. It is obviously evidence which is not sufficient to prove adverse possession and could be manufactured without difficulty. It does not appear how much was Kali grown, whether on one riyha or on the whole of the disputed land, whether the was Kalai grown always in the same place or on different plots or whether it was grown for the statutory period.

The defendants are Zemindars who presumably keep accounts. Their account-books would have shown the money expended in cultivating Kalai and the money realised from the sale of it and also the money realised from the sale of Babla trees. There is no documentary evidence to support the story that Kalai was grown or Babla trees cut from the disputed land.

The area in dispute is some 1000 bighas. Obviously, if there had been any real attempt to cultivate any appreciable portion of the land there must have been a considerable expenditure and receipt.

Defendant No. 1, Sib Kanta Banerjee, in his examination gives no suggestion how much land was cultivated or for what period, whether it was the same portion or different portions.

Kali Prasanna Chuckerbutty took a lease of Char Baliadanga from defendant No. 2, the 12-annas proprietor, from April 10th, 1902 to April 14th, 1904. He states that during this period, which ends at a date within the statutory period, he cannot say if there were any tenants on the land. Obviously, if there had been he must have known it as he was the ijaradar and so clearly the statement is equivalent to an admission that during the period there were no tenant on the land. Therefore, from 1902 to a period within 1904 there were no tenants in the 12-annas share. His possession consisted of growing Kalai, where he grew Kalai is not proved whether on the disputed or undisputed portion of Char Baliadanga. He produced no papers to support the bare statement that he grew Kalai. It has been argued that he paid Rs. 500 as a yearly rent for the 12-annas share of the Char. But though he paid rent it does not necessarily follow that he occupied or used any portion of the Char still less that he actually occupied the disputed portion of the Char. After him Sib Kanta Banerjee, defendant 1; the 4-annas share-holder took a lease of the 12-annas share. This, however, was from April 14th, 1904 which is within the statutory period the suit being instituted on 25th February 1906. Further, the witness does not produce the rent receipt which he alleges he got for the payment of the rent. Then the evidence of Rajani Kanta Dey, witness No. 7 for the defendant, shows that he measured the land in 1903 on which there were tenants. He states which were the tenanted plots and admitted none of the plots he has described as tenanted fall within the disputed area. Then his evidence goes to show that in 1903 there were no tenants in the disputed area. Further, he states that in 1903 there was nothing on the lands in Sib Kanta Babu, the 4-annas Zemindar's khas possession. His evidence would show that in 1903 there were no tenants on the disputed portion of the Baliadanga Char.

Boloram Ghose, witness No. 3 for defendant, proves that in 1900 he went to the Char and that there were then some 25 or 30 bighas of land sown with Kalai. Whether these 25 or 30 bighas were in the disputed land or not does not appear. Even if they were, the growing of Kalai on some 25 or 30 bighas out of an area of about 1000 bighas could not obviously amount to adverse possession of the 1000 bighas. His evidence, at the highest, would show the cultivation of some 25 or 30 bighas.

Then there is the evidence of Dole Gobinda Biswas, the Dewan of defendant No. 2. He apparently last went to the Char in 1899 and has not been there since. Then he knows nothing about the period from 1899 up to 1906.

He, however, states that the disputed Char remained uncultivated from 1899 to 1901 and that between these years it was not let out to tenants.

Defendants 1 and 2 were fighting and it is perhaps improbable that either could really effectively possess the land.

Taking all the facts and circumstances of the case into consideration, and even accepting for the sake of argument the oral evidence of the defendants' witnesses, the evidence is not sufficient to establish a title by adverse possession. The defendants cannot avail themselves of the doctrine of possession of a part being constructive possession of the whole. They are tort-feasors and must prove actual continuous possession of the land for which they seek to establish a title by adverse possession: [Nawab Bhadur of Marshidahad v. Gopinath Mandal (1)].

In the present case we have an area of some 1000 bighas of Char land which adjoins the defendants' lands and the only evidence of possession is that some Kalai has been grown from time to time and some Babla trees cut. Even if this were proved, which I do not think it has, it would amount at the most to isolated acts of trespass. Neither need the true owner necessarily know that such acts were being done when we take into consideration the extent, nature and situation of the property. The taking of Settlement from Government cannot be considered as an act of possession. The deputing of an Amin to demarcate the land in the partition suit and the planting of one or two pillars would be an isolated act of trespass.

There is in the present case no possession adequate in continuity, publicity and extent of area to destroy the title of the true owner.

Rejecting, however, as I do the defendants' evidence of actual possession, their case entirely fails for if the oral evidence is disbelieved there is no evidence at all to support a story of adverse possession.

The defendants have failed to make out any title by adverse possession.

The respondents have argued that the appellants have failed to identify the land they claim because the numbers of the chak have been omitted from the Commissioner's map. What, however, has happened then? The plaintiff-appellant has established his title to some 15 chaks of which the numbers are given, viz., 5, 7, 15, 17, 61, 64, 69, 70, 73, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104 and the residuary lands. There are other chaks to which he had not established his title. The numbers of these chaks are also known.

Under the orders of this Court the same Commissioner who had made the local investigation re-plotted on his map all the chaks putting the correct chak number in each chak. It now appears that these 15 chaks of which the numbers have been given above actually fall within the disputed land.

No difficulty would be experienced in granting to the appellant-plaintiff a decree capable of execution. He is clearly entitled, on the findings I have come to, to so much of the disputed land as falls within the 15 chaks and the residue portion of village Kabirajpore which falls within Estate No. 10.

This residue will be found by deducting the chaks of which the title had been found not to be with the appellant.

A cross-objection has been filed by the respondent regarding the costs in the lower Court.

In view of the finding to which I have come the cross-objection must fail as I would hold the appellants are entitled to proportionate costs of the suit throughout I would decree the appeal so far as the disputed land to which the plaintiff-appellant has proved his title, viz., the 15 chaks and the residuary portion of Kabirajpur with proportionate costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

Newbould, J.—The plaintiff brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for declaration of his title and also recovery of possession of about 1000 bighas of land. He succeeded in obtaining a decree for a part only of the land claimed and appealed to this Court. His appeal was heard by a Divisional Bench of this Court consisting of Woodroffe and Cuming, JJ. There was a difference of opinion, Woodroffe, J., holding that the appeal should be dismissed while Cuming, J., was in favour of allowing the appeal in part. They held that as there was a difference of opinion and there was no majority varying or reversing the decree appealed from the appeal should be dismissed. Against this decision the plaintiff has preferred an appeal under section 15 of the Letters Patent. A preliminary objection has been taken that no appeal lies. This objection we overruled at the commencement of the hearing of the appeal. Though we accept the contention of the learned Vakil for the respondents that the decision of the Judicial Committee in Bhaidas Shiv Das v. Bai Gulab (9) shows that the procedure laid down in section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code was wrongly applied in the present case, that is immaterial. Had the provisions of clause 36 of the Letters Patent been followed the result would have been the same since the opinion of Woodroffe, J., who is the senior Judge, would prevail. Under clause 15 of the Letters Patent this appeal is clearly competent.

The present suit is due to events primarily caused by the movements of the river Ganges at a part where-under the name of Bhagirathi, it flowed between the Nadia district on its north and the Burdwan district on its south. At the time of the Revenue Survey by Government of 1855 there were Chars on both sides of the river. On the north side was Char Baliadanga which was temporarily settled with the defendant's predecessors in two estates bearing Touzi Nos. 824 and 2460 of the Nadia Collectorate. On the South side was a Char adjoining Mouza Kavirajpur which is a part of the Estate bearing Touzi No. 10 of the Burdwan Collectorate and in this village the plaintiff has putni right to certain plots. The river moved gradually in a southerly direction causing accretions to Char Baliadanga and diluviating first the Char adjoining Kavirajpur and subsequently also part of the Kavirajpur Mouza. This alluvion and diluvion continued until the accretions to Char Baliadanga became re-formations in situ of Kavirajpur land. While this was going on Government made three Surveys and Settlements of the land which accreted to Char Baliadanga in the years 1880, 1890 and 1903. Even in 1880, some land of Kavirajpur was settled with the defendants as proprietors of estate Nos. 824 and 2460, and in 1890 still more land of that Mouza was settled with the defendants. During the Survey and Settlement of 1903 the mistake was discovered and the land found to be re-formation in situ of Mouza Kavirajpur was excluded from the Settlement. The temporarily settled estates Nos. 824 and 2460 were originally undivided four-annas and twelve-annas shares of Char Baliadanga. In 1893 a partition suit was brought which after protracted litigation ended in a division of the land after Survey by a Commissioner in 1899. The plaintiff instituted the suit, out of which the appeal arises, on the 25th February 1916. He originally claimed approximately 1000 bighas of land. In the trial Court he gave up his claim to a large tract on the east and at the hearing of the first appeal to this Court he no longer claimed the land which had been settled with defendants after the 1903 Survey. He originally based his title both on his putni right and adverse possession. The finding that he has no title other than his putni right has not been disputed. He is content to rely on the finding of the trial Court that he has established his putni title to 15 specific Chaks and the abasista Chak or unnumbered residue. The learned Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiff a decree for the land within these Chaks that was south of the lines of the south boundary of the Char shown in the Settlement Map of 1903 and the Partition Map of 1899. He held that the plaintiff's title to land north of this line had been barred by limitation.

The case made in the plaint was that diluvion took place in 1890 and re-formation in 1902. It was further alleged that the land first began to be fit for cultivation in October 1906 and the defendant No. 1 then proposed to take a Settlement from the plaintiff. As there was undue delay, the plaintiff in 1913 attempted to have the lands surveyed and was prevented by defendant No. 1. This case has admittedly failed. The correctness of the various maps as showing the re-formations is not questioned and the map of 1880 shows that re-formation in situ had commenced before that year. The plaintiff's case now is that he was in possession of the Chaks to which he has proved title until they were diluviated to and his possession must be presumed have continued and that he is entitled to succeed unless the defendants can prove that they have destroyed his title by adverse possession. This contention raises the issue as to the party on whom the burden of proof lies in the present case. On this issue I find myself in entire agreement with the finding of Woodroffe, J. The reasoning in his judgment appears to me clear and logical and in accordance with the principle laid down in previous decisions of this Court and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. He points out that the plaintiff sued for possession on the allegation of dispossession. Article 142 of the first Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, is, therefore, applicable and he is bound to prove possession within twelve years before suit. Admittedly, he has not had any actual possession since the lands became submerged and it is also admitted that the defendants have been in possession since 1906, ten years before the institution of the suit. In order to prove possession within twelve years the plaintiff may rely on the presumption that possession of the lawful owner continues as long as the land is incapable of actual possession. But in a case like the present where Article 142 applies the plaintiff, if he relies on this presumption, must prove that the land was incapable of actual possession within twelve years before suit. For the appellant, it was strongly contested before us that it lay on the defendants to prove their adverse possession for twelve years before the suit. It was urged that the presumption of possession in favour of the real owner would continue until it is shown that the presumption does not apply by reason of the defendant having been in adverse possession. It was also urged that the presumption would continue as long as the land continued incapable of ordinary possession, and it is for the defendants to show when this change took place. These contentions ignore the difficulty in the appellant's way arising from the fact that he has so framed his suit that the initial burden lies on him to prove dispossession within twelve years. Relying, as he does, on a presumption to discharge this burden he must prove the facts necessary to establish this presumption, that is to say, not only that he was the legal owner but also that the land was incapable of possession in the ordinary way. Of the cases cited, the Full Bench decision of this Court in Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (1), is the most favourable to the appellants. The rule laid down at page 752, if read apart from the context, seems to support his contentions. It is as follows:—"The true rule appears to be this: That where land has been shown to have been in a condition unfitting it for actual enjoyment in the usual modes at such a time and under such circumstances that that state naturally would, and probably did, continue till within twelve years before suit it may properly be presumed that it did so continue and that the plaintiff's possession continued also, until the contrary is shown." But the rule is qualified by the preceding remarks on p. 751 which require the plaintiff to show such acts of ownership as are natural under the existing condition of the land before he can claim the benefit of the presumption that his possession continued. It is not necessary to discuss all the decisions that have been cited on behalf of the appellant. Several of them, as, for instance, Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State for India (10), can be distinguished on the broad ground that they were cases where Article 144 and not Article 142 was applicable. The head-note of the Indian Report wrongly states that the High Court decided that case on limitation alone holding that the suit was barred by Article 142. The English report of the same case quotes the High Court judgment, which clearly states that the case "must be governed by Article 144." Other cases that were cited follow the decision in Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny, (4) and give no greater support to the appellant's contention than that Full Bench decision. I would, therefore, hold that in the present case it lay on the plaintiff to prove that the lands were incapable of user within twelve years prior to the suit.

For the appellant it was further urged as an alternative plea that if it was necessary for him to prove that the land was incapable of user, he has proved this at any rate as regards the land south of the Survey line of 1890. In order to prove this he relies on the defendant's evidence, oral and documentary. The case made out by the plaintiff's witnesses was entirely abandoned at the hearing of the appeal and their evidence was not even read to us. The first piece of evidence on which reliance is placed is that of Gurudas Biswas, defence witness No. 2. He was the Gomasta of the second defendant in respect of the Char lands from 1306-1308 B. S. In cross-examination he stated, "I found the sandy tract of the Char in the same condition during the period of my service. There was no alteration in its area during that period." It is contended that this proves that no extra land became culturable after the Survey of 1890. But if his examination-in-chief be also read, it is clear that what he meant was that during this period, as the river receded there remained a fringe about $1\frac{1}{2}$ or 2 rashis wide of unculturable sandy land and that though the nature and area of this fringe remained unchanged, its position altered as the Char extended towards the south. The only other oral evidence to which reference is made in this connection is that of defence witness No. 7, Rajani Kanta Dey. He was a Collectorate Amin and took part in the Settlement Surveys of 1890 and 1903. His evidence-in-chief is strongly in favour of the defendants since he says that he saw the Char after 1903 and found the major portion of the Char under cultivation. It is contended that this evidence refers to the land which was settled with the defendants in 1904 and not to the land now in dispute. But this cannot be, since he was speaking of the land down to the water's edge and the map of the 1903 Survey shows the water edge far south of the land settled with the defendants as part of their estates Nos. 824 and 2460. A similar argument to that based on the evidence of defence witness No. 2 is based on this witness's statement: "About 50 to 60 bigha lands must have accreted to the Char between 1890 and 1903. In 1903, I found the area of the sandy portion of the Char to be 60 to 80 bighas." But this does not mean that the only accretion during these years was sandy land. Our attention has also been drawn to a statement in the Settlement Report of the 8th March 1904 Ext. P.: "The estate consists of a low tract of Char land liable to annual inundation." It is urged that as these remarks refer to the land settled with the defendants, the disputed land to the south would be still more liable to inundation. But the expression "liable to annual inundation" does not mean that the land was actually inundated every year. The same paragraph of the report shows that though aus paddy could not be grown in normal years, Kalai and Musuri were extensively grown and this supports the defendant's case that the land was capable of possession. Another argument is based on the map and report of the Commissioner who executed the partition decree in 1899. It is contended that as the south line of the Commissioner's Map and of the Settlement map of 1903 are almost identical, there could have been little alteration in the Char during the interval between the two Surveys. It appears from the Commissioner's report that in 1899 there was practically no culturable land south of the land settled in 1890. But the Commissioner's Map does not show the true position of the river in 1899. At the wish of the parties to the partition suit, the defendants in this suit, he included land which was still part of the bed of the river in his map and divided it between them. It follows, therefore, that there was considerable accretion of culturable land, to the south of the Char between 1890 and 1908. The defendants' evidence does not show that that any land north of the line, which has been given as the south boundary in the decree, was unfit for cultivation within twelve years of the institution of the suit.

These findings are sufficient for the disposal of the appeal, but even if I had held that the burden of proof lay on the defendants to prove twelve years' adverse possession, I should decide in their favour. That the defendants did exercise acts of possession on the land as it re-formed and became capable of possession, there can be no doubt. Further, these acts of possession were all done in the assertion of the claim of the defendants to the land by virtue of the settlements made by Government. This case is distinguishable from Basanta Kumar Roy's case (10) cited above, since there are "circumstances to link together various portions of ground so as to make the possession of a part as it emerged amount constructively to possession of the whole".

We all agree that the appeal fails and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

B. B. Ghose, J.—It is unnecessary for me to recapitulate the facts of this case as they have been sufficiently stated in the judgment of my learned brother Newbould which I had the advantage of reading. I agree that there is no substance in the preliminary objection taken on behalf of the respondents that the appeal is not maintainable.

The only question argued on behalf of the appellant is one of limitation. The allegation in the plaint is that the plaintiff was in possession of the land in suit before diluvion, which commenced to re-form in 1902 and that he has been dispossessed by the defendants in 1906. That appears to be the proper meaning of the plaint and this was sought to be established by the evidence led by the plaintiff. The story, however, that the land began to re-form in 1902 is untrue, as it is beyond dispute that it re-formed long prior to that date; and this has not been contested by the appellant. The suit then being for possession on the allegation of dispossession falls within Article 142 of the Limitation Act as has been held by both the learned Judges of this Court who heard the appeal in the first instance. This is also not seriously disputed by the appellant. The burden of proof in such a case is without doubt on the plaintiff to show that he had been dispossessed within 12 years of the date of suit. The plaintiff-appellant admits that he has been dispossessed for about ten years, the suit having been brought in 1916. The difference between the admitted possession of the respondents and the period of limitation is within the narrow limit of about two years, during which the appellant must establish his possession in order to succeed in the suit. In the case of Mahirajah Koowar Baboo Nitrasur Singh v. Baboo Nand Lal Singh (11) Turner, L. J., in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, said.—"The appellant is seeking to disturb the possession admitted to have existed for about eleven years, of defendants, who insist on a possession of much longer duration as a statutory bar to the suit. It clearly lies on him to remove that bar by satisfactory proof that the cause of action accrued to him..... on a dispossession within twelve years next before the commencement of the suit..... No proof of anterior title such as would be involved in the decision of the boundary question in his favour can relieve him from this burden, or shift it upon his adversaries by compelling them to prove the time and manner of dispossession." The law is the same under the present Limitation Act where the dispossession from which limitation is declared to run should have taken place within twelve years of the suit. The nature and quality of the possession of the respondents in this case during the period after the admitted dispossession of the appellant need not require any discussion. The appellant may establish his possession within the disputed period of two years, by showing that his possession was either actual or constructive. There is no evidence of actual possession or the exercise of any act of possession, however trivial, by the appellant during that period, for the title being in him such acts might have preserved his title. Constructive possession may also be shown by the fact that the land being under water was incapable of possession, or although it was capable of being possessed no one had actually taken possession during the period in question. The appellant cannot, by proving possession at any period anterior to twelve years before suit, shift the onus on the respondents to prove their possession.

Much stress was laid by the appellant on the observations of Wilson, J., who delivered the judgment of the majority of the Full Bench, in Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (4), and it was contended that as the land in this case did probably continue to have been in such a condition as not to be fit for the usual modes of enjoyment within twelve years before suit, it should be presumed that his possession continued until the contrary is shown. It is urged that it is incumbent on the respondents to show that they had dispossessed the appellant during the two intervening years. The meaning of the observations relied on will be clear when read with the preceding remarks in the judgment of that case. What the learned Judge laid down was that so long as the state of the land remained unchanged, the possession of the rightful owner should be presumed to continue unless he is shown to have been dispossessed. Dealing with the case of diluvion by a river, Wilson, J., says (at page 751): "In such a case, if the plaintiff shows his possession down to the time of diluvion, his possession is presumed to continue as long as the lands continue to be submerged." It has been established in this case that the condition of the land had changed a considerable number of years prior to the period in dispute, and there is no reason why the ordinary rule that the plaintiff should prove his possession within the period of limitation should be departed from. The appellant has not succeeded in proving that the land was incapable of possession on account of its remaining submerged, or that no one else was in possession during the disputed period although the land had emerged from the water.

It is next submitted that the Settlement

Report of 1904 shows that the land was liable to annual inundation and plaintiff's possession should be held to have constructively revived during such inundation and the suit is, therefore, not barred. The appellant strongly relies on the case of Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State for India (10) as bearing a close resemblance to this case. There are, however, distinctions between that case and the present one in important particulars. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observe, in following the case of Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta, (7), "No rational distinction can be drawn between that case and the present one, where the re-flooding was seasonal and occurred for several months in each year. It was held that when the land was re-submerged, the possession of the Government determined, and that, while it remained submerged, no possession could be deemed to continue so as to be available towards the ultimate acquisition of title against the true owner." Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State for India (10). In that case the plaintiff did not come to Court on the allegation that he had been dispossessed. It was held that the suit was one to which Article 144 of the Limitation Act was applicable and it was, therefore, for the defendant to show that plaintiff's title had been extinguished by reason of the adverse possession of the defendant. In the present case it is for the plaintiff to establish a subsisting title. There is no evidence that the land was inundated during the two years in question and that there was a cessation of the dispossession by the defendants by reason of the submergence of the land. The principle on which the cases of Krishnamoni Gupta (7) and Basanta Roy (10) was decided was that the possession of the defendant was in fact determined by the submergence of the land, when it became derelict and, as was observed in the former case, on the dispossession of the defendant (Government) by the vis major of the floods the constructive possession of the land was (if anywhere) in the true owners [See Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta (7).] In the present case there is no suggestion that the inundation had the effect of dispossessing the defendants or rendering the land derelict, and in my judgment that principle does not, therefore, apply in the present case. The case of

Kuthali Moothavar v. Peringati Kunharankutty (12) was also a case falling within Article 144 of Limitation Act and, moreover, the plaintiff there had proved the exercise of various acts of possession during the currency of his title and is, therefore, different from the present case.

It is next urged that the respondents only cultivated small areas during the period of their possession and their possession of a part did not amount to possession of the whole. But assuming the fact to be so, in this case there is the connecting link of claim of title and close connection and interdependence between the part and the whole, as the respondents were in possession by virtue of Settlements obtained from Government of the entire land, which was surveyed at intervals and depicted in maps, and on the whole of which revenue was assessed. Then, again, the respondents partitioned the entire land among themselves in 1899 when it was again surveyed and masonry pillars erected in order to demarcate the portion of each co-sharer. The circumstances contemplated as operating in favour of a wrong-doer in the case of Mohini Mohan Roy v. Fromoda Nath Roy, (6) which has been approved by the Privy Council in Basanta Roy's case (10) are established in this case. This argument of the appellant also fails.

Lastly, it is urged that plaintiff should, at any rate, be given a decree for that portion of the land which lies south of the Settlement boundary line of 1890, as it was found by the Partition Commissioner in 1899 to be sandy and almost in the bed of the river and could not, therefore, be the subject of effective possession by the defendants. It does not, however, appear that the portion was in the same condition in 1904. Rajani Kanta De, Amin of the Collectorate, who is an independent witness, says: "In 1903 I found the major portion of the Char under cultivation. About 2 to 2½ rashis wide lands from the water edge was sandy. Above that all lands were cultivable." The sandy portion in 1903 would appear to be the portion for which the appellant was given a decree by the trial Court. In any case, the respondents having erected pillars on this portion during the partition proceedings and included it within the rest of the land, the possession of this portion cannot be distinguished from the rest. Thus, all the contentions of the appellant fail.

In this view, it is unnecessary to discuss the question as to what would have been the effect of the possession by the respondents if the case fell within Article 144 of the Limitation Act. It is sufficient to say that, under the circumstances of the present case, the possession of the respondents cannot be held to be surreptitious or occasional acts of trespass and that it had not the qualities of adequacy, continuity and exclusiveness. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Page, J. --I agree that this appeal should be dismissed. In my opinion, it is not incumbent upon the Court in this appeal to consider upon whom lies the burden of proving the dispossession of the appellant because "as their Lordships find the evidence sufficient to establish a clear conclusion of fact it cannot matter now by which party it was given." [per Lord Sumner in Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State for India (10)]. The only inference which, in my judgment, can reasonably be drawn from the facts proved at the trial, and set out in the judgment of my brother Newbould, is that the appellant was dispossessed of the lands in dispute more than twelve years prior to the institution of the present proceedings. If that be so, this appeal must fail, because it was undoubtedly incumbent upon the appellant, having regard to the form of his claim, and the provisions of Article 142 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act, 1908, to establish the fact that he was dispossessed within 12 years prior to the date upon which he launched this suit.

I desire, however, to state that I am unable to concur in the view which has found favour with Woodroffe and Newbould, JJ., as to where the burden of proof lies in circumstances such as those obtaining in this case. While they accept the appellant's contention that, inasmuch as both the title to and the possession of the lands in dispute were vested in the appellant before the river Bhagirathi changed its course and the lands became submerged, the said lands are deemed to have remained in the constructive possession of the appellant so long as they continued to be inundated, the learned Judges are of opinion, that "it lay upon the plaintiff to prove that the lands were incapable of user within 12 years prior to the suit" (per Newbould, J.) and that the plaintiff "must show that his constructive possession continued on account of diluvion, and on account of the land being incapable of possession within 12 years of the suit" (per Woodroffe, J.). With great respect, I am unable to agree that the burden which lay upon the appellant was of this nature. In my opinion, the true rule was laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as follows: "The Limitation Act of 1877 does not define the term 'dispossession,' but its meaning is well settled. A man may cease to use his land because he cannot use it, since it is under water. He does not thereby discontinue his possession: constructively, it continues until he is dispossessed; and, upon the cessation of the dispossession before the lapse of the statutory period, constructively it revives. 'There can be no discontinuance by absence of use and enjoyment when the land is not capable of use and enjoyment.' (per Cotton, L. J.) in Leigh v. Jack (13). It seems to follow that there can be no continuance of adverse possession where the land is not capable of use and enjoyment, so long as such adverse possession must rest on de facto use and occupation. When sufficient time has elapsed to extinguish the old title and start a new one, the new owner's possession of course continues until there is fresh dispossession and revives as it ceases." Mr. Justice Wilson intended, I think, to lay down the same rule when he observed: "The true rule appears to us to be this: That where land has been shown to have been in a condition unfitting it for actual enjoyment in the usual modes at such a time, and under such circumstances that that state naturally would, and probably did continue till within twelve years before suit, it may properly be presumed that it did so continue and that the plaintiff's possession continued also, until the contrary is shown. This presumption seems to us to be reasonable in itself, and in accordance with the legal principles now embodied in section 114 of the Evidence Act:" Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (4)

The rule of constructive possession does not create a new title to or interest in the lands; it merely operates to maintain the continuance of an existing right or interest. Further acts of possession after the waters have subsided are not required to prove possession by the true owner for in law such possession is deemed to have been throughout continuous and unbroken. The occasion and the necessity for further acts of possession by the true owner arises when, and only when, his right to possess the lands is challenged. So long as his possession is neither threatened nor disturbed what need is there of further witness?

I find myself in agreement with the following observations of Melville, J., on the subject. "The burden of proof being upon the plaintiff, what is he required to prove? Simply, that the cause of action accrued within the period of limitation made applicable to the suit. This is by no means equivalent to saying that a plaintiff in an action of ejectment must prove that he has been in possession within 12 years. He may not have been in possession within twelve years, and yet the cause of action may have accrued within that period. If a man buy a piece of open ground, he is not bound to enclose it or to build upon it, or formally to take possession of it; nor, if he do formally take possession of it, is he bound by subsequent acts to proclaim the continuance of his possession. So long as the land remains unoccupied his rights are not interfered with, and he is not called upon to assert them. He has no cause of action, and there is no person whom he could sue. His cause of action accrues when another person takes possession of the land": Pandurang Govind Now Bal Krishna Hari (14). Now, while the doctrine of constructive possession, in my opinion, is equally applicable to cases where the plaintiff seeks to obtain possession of land in the possession of another, and to cases where the plaintiff claims to recover possession of lands of which he alleges that he has been dispossessed, a plaintiff who frames his suit to recover possession of lands of which he has been dispossessed must needs prove that he has been in possession, and that he has been dispossessed within 12 years prior to commencing proceedings to recover possession of the land. He must, further, prove, unless it is admitted, the time when, and the mode in which such dispossession was effected. Having regard to the evidence adduced at the hearing so far as I from being satisfied that the plaintiff in this case has proved that he has been dispossessed of the lands in dispute within 12 years prior to the institution of the suit, in my judgment, the true conclusion to be drawn from the evidence is that the respondents have been in possession of the lands in a manner adverse to the plaintiff's title for more than 12 years before the present proceedings were commenced. In my opinion no question of law is involved in this appeal, which depends solely upon the determination of an issue of fact. For these reasons, it appears to me to be a matter of indifference whether Article 142 or Article 144 of the Limitation Act is applicable in the circumstances of this case, or upon whom the burden of proof lies, for in any event the appeal fails and should be dismissed.

(14) 6 Bom. H. C. R. A. C. J. 125 at p. 128.

CIVIL REVISION NO. 98 OF 1924.

March 11, 1924.

Present :—Justice Sir Jwala Prasad, Kt., and Mr. Justice Kulwant Sahay.

DAHO KUER AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS *versus*TURAL DEI AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), ss. 8, 51—Bengal N. W. P. and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), s. 8—Additional District Judge, jurisdiction of, extent of—Probate cases transferred to Additional Judge—Jurisdiction to revoke probate granted by District Judge.

By virtue of the provisions contained in section 8 of the Bengal N.-W. P. and Assam Civil Courts Act, an Additional District Judge exercises with respect to the cases transferred to him by the District Judge the same powers as the District Judge. Where, therefore, cases under the Probate and Administration Act have been transferred to an Additional District Judge by the District Judge, the Additional District Judge becomes the Judge of the principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction within the meaning of section 8 of the Act and has jurisdiction to revoke a probate granted by the District Judge.

Case law discussed.

Revision from the order of the Additional District Judge, Patna, dated the 22nd February 1924.

Messrs. Rai Gurusaran Prasad and Anand Prasad, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Gangadhar Das and S. N. Roy, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners in this case appealed to the District Judge for revocation of a Probate granted some time ago by that Court.

The District Judge, by his order of the 5th February 1924, transferred the case to the Additional District Judge for disposal under the following order:—

“Under section 8 (2) of the Bengal N.W.P. and Assam Civil Courts Act, the functions of the District Judge under the Probate and Administration Act and Indian Succession Act relating to grant and revocation of probate have been assigned to the Additional District Judge. Let this suit accordingly be sent to the Additional District Judge for disposal.”

The petitioners objected to the trial of the case by the Additional District Judge upon the ground that the order passed by the District Judge transferring the case to the Additional District Judge was ultra vires and that the Additional District Judge had no jurisdiction to try the case. This application was refused by the Additional District Judge, and consequently the petitioners moved this Court in revision.

The question before us is, whether the Additional District Judge has power to deal with the application for revocation of the Probate in question. Under section 51 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881) jurisdiction is conferred on the District Judge as regards the granting and revoking of Probates and Letters of Administration in all cases within his District. Section 3 of the Act defines “District Judge” to mean

"the Judge of a Principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction." The Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1837) deals with the constitution of Civil Courts in Chapter II. As regards Additional Judges, provision is made in section 8, clauses (1) and (2) of the Act, which says :—

"When the business pending before any District Judge requires the aid of Additional Judges for its speedy disposal, Local Government may, upon the recommendation of the High Court appoint such Additional Judges as may be requisite."

"Additional Judges so appointed shall discharge any of the functions of a District Judge which the District Judge may assign to them, and, in the discharge of those functions, they shall exercise the same powers as the District Judge."

It is clear from the aforesaid provision that the Additional District Judge exercises with respect to the cases transferred to him by the District Judge the same powers as the District Judge. Now, a class of cases or a particular case may be transferred to the Additional District Judge for the reason that he is to relieve the District Judge of the burden on account of accumulation of cases. When the Additional District Judge takes seizin of a case upon a transfer made to him he becomes the "Principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction." Therefore, the Additional District Judge exercises the same powers and in fact occupies the position of a District Judge in the sense that it is defined in the Probate and Administration Act referred to above. When the function of a District Judge under the Probate and Administration Act is transferred to an Additional District Judge he has the same jurisdiction as the District Judge with respect to the grant and revocation of Probates and Letters of Administration. This is not seriously disputed, and in face of the statutory provisions and the authorities on the subject it cannot be seriously disputed.

Mr. Rai Gurusaran Prasad, however, contends that, although the Additional District Judge had jurisdiction in the matter of grants and revocation of Probates and Letters of Administration, he had no jurisdiction as regards the revocation of Probates granted by the District Judge. The foundation of this argument is that the District Judge who grants Probates and Letters of Administration should alone have power to revoke the same. There is no authority to support this proposition. The authorities cited go only to show that Probates and Letters of Administration should not be allowed to be disputed in any other forum but in the Court which granted it. Now, the Probate in the present case was granted by the District Judge, and the District Judge had power to revoke it. It is not the personnel of the District Judge, but the presiding officer of the Court of the District Judge who will have power to revoke it. By virtue of the transfer made by the District Judge to the Additional District Judge in the present case under section 8 of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, the Additional Judge becomes the District Judge for the purpose of exercising functions under the Probate and Letters of Administration Act. Therefore, the contention of Mr. Rai Gurusaran Prasad must fail.

The following cases :—

Lal Behari Basak v. Akhil Chandra Santra, (1) (2) Jogesh Chundra Sanyal v. Rasik Lal Saha, (2) and Makhan Lal v. Sri Lal, (8) show that in other statutes, such as, the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Land Acquisition Act and the Insolvency Act, the Additional District Judge exercises the powers of a District Judge in respect of cases transferred to him although the provisions in the particular Act state that the particular function should be exercised by the District Judge. It appears to us that the question raised by Mr. Rai Gurusaran Prasad can be answered by a reference to the reasons given in the order of reference in the Full Bench Case of Rup Kishore Lal v. Neman Bibi (4). Those reasons were accepted by the Full Bench, the judgment of which was delivered by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J. The cases referred to by Mr. Rai Gurusaran Prasad, Mayho v. Williams (5), Komolochun Dutt v. Nitruttun Mundle (6), and the goods of Mohendra Narain Roy (7), only show, as has already been said, that the Court which grants a Probate should have power to revoke it. The order in the present case passed by the District Judge and quoted above shows that the functions of the District Judge with respect to the Probate and Administration Act were generally transferred to the Additional District Judge, and as a part of that arrangement the present case was also sent to the Additional District Judge for disposal. The order purports to have been passed under section 2 of the Act and is a valid order.

We, therefore, dismiss this application with costs : hearing fee two gold mohurs.

Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870) S 17—Distinct claims—Suit to recover possession from one defendant or refund of consideration from other defendant—Court-fees, separate ; whether payable.

Plaintiff sued defendant No. 2 for possession of certain land on the ground that the land had been surrendered to him by defendant No. 1 and in the alternative claimed to recover from the defendant No. 1 the amount of consideration for the surrender paid to the latter as on a failure of consideration :

Held, that the suit embraced two distinct claims within the meaning of section 17 of the Court-Fees Act and separate Court-fees must be paid on each part of the claim

Case-law discussed.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, dated the 22nd February 1923, in Civil Appeal No. 10 of 1923.

Mr. M. R. Dixit, for the Appellants.

Messrs S B. Gokhale and M. B. Niyogi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary point in this case is that an objection is taken on behalf of the respondents that proper Court-fees have not been paid on the memorandum of appeal in the lower Appellate Court. The plaintiffs, who are the Malguzars of the village, sued the defendant Ramchand, alleging that he had executed a registered deed of surrender to them in respect of the land in dispute for a consideration of Rs. 300, and when they went to take possession of the land they found it was in possession of defendant No. 2 Kishendas and defendant No. 1 had no right to effect a surrender, as had already been decided by the Revenue Court, a fact which the defendant No. 1 had concealed. Hence they being unable to get possession brought a suit for possession of the land, or in an alternative for the return of the consideration with interest. The suit was valued at Rs. 300 and Rs. 30 interest, and Court-fee was paid on that amount only.

It is argued in second appeal that the memorandum of appeal is improperly stamped because there are two causes of action ; one for possession against defendant No. 2 and the other for refund against defendant No. 1. Reference is made to the case of Neelakandhan Nambudripad v. Tirunilai Ananthkrishna Ayyar (1) and Dharamchand v. Gorelal, (2) of this Court, decided on 28th January 1918).

On the allegation in the plaint the defendant No. 1 had nothing to do with the land and the fact that he had executed a surrender of it to the plaintiffs would not entitle the plaintiffs to dispossess defendant No. 2. It was stated in Kashinath Narayan v. Govinda, (3) that where the plaintiff sues, in the alternative, for one of two reliefs, the larger of the two reliefs sought determines the amount of the stamp. Section 17 of the Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870) does not apply to such a case. That section is applicable only to a case of cumulative relief sought by the plaintiff. In the present case there is only one cause of action, namely, the surrender executed by defendant No. 1; no suit lies against defendant No. 2 for the surrender executed by defendant.

In Neelakandhan Nambudripad v. Tirumalai Ananthakrishna Ayyar (1), relied on by the learned pleader for the respondents it is said at page 64: "The phrase 'two or more distinct subjects' in section 17 may not admit of precise definition applicable to all cases, and it may be that where reliefs are claimed in the alternative with reference to the same cause of action, section 17 would not govern the case. That may also be so where the relief claimed is one and the same, though the claim is sought to be made out on distinct or alternative grounds. It is, however, different in the present case. The claim for redemption is based upon the alleged right of the plaintiff as mortgagor, while the alternative relief is based on a contract for a further mortgage which is distinct from the earlier mortgage right, though both are evidenced by the same instrument.

In Dharamchand v. Gorelal (2), an unreported case of this Court, referred to above, reference is made to the Madras case (above cited), and it was held: "The present seems to be a case of alternative reliefs being claimed with reference to causes of action of which the plaintiff's loss of the house bought from the defendant Gorelal forms part. The foundations of the claims are not, however, precisely the same. As pointed out by the trial Judge, the relief against Duli Chand was based on the plaintiff's right as vendee to stand in Gorelal's shoes, whereas refund of the purchase-money was asked for on the ground that the sale had failed owing to a defect in Gorelal's title." Although in the present case the plaintiffs rely on the surrender, they ask for possession of the land which is admittedly in possession of defendant No. 2, and it may, therefore be fairly, argued that the suit embraces two distinct subject-matters, namely, the possession of the land from defendant No. 2 on the basis of the surrender, and, secondly, refund of the amount paid on the surrender on the ground of failure of consideration, a relief against defendant No. 1 alone. The fact that if defendant No. 2 is the owner he could not be affected by a surrender executed by defendant No. 1, makes no difference as the plaintiffs claim possession.

The point is not without difficulty, but on the whole I am of opinion that the case falls under the ruling in Hashmat-un-Nissa Begam v. Muhammad Abdul Karim (4), where the plaintiff sued for specific performance of an alleged agreement to sell to him certain immoveable property, and, secondly, in the alternative, for the enforcement of a pre-emptive right in respect of a mortgage of the same property executed by one of the defendants in favour of the other. It was held there that these were distinct claims; the claim for specific performance being a claim in respect of the proprietary interest in the land, whereas under the claim for pre-emption the plaintiff could only obtain such interest as the mortgagees of the defendant possessed, and their claim in the shoes of the mortgagees. So also, in the present case, the claim for possession of the land is a claim in respect of the proprietary interest in the land, whereas the claim in respect of the refund of the money is a suit based on failure of consideration.

In the circumstances, I think the memorandum of appeal and also the plaint in the first Court were insufficiently stamped and separate Court-fees must be paid on each part of the claim.

Fifteen day's time given for payment of deficient Court-fees.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—There is no substance in First Appeal No. 111 of 1920 presented on behalf of the defendants Nos. 1 to 7 and I must dismiss that appeal with costs.

In this appeal three questions have been argued before us ; first, whether Kishun Dutt is the son of Jasoda Kuer ; second, whether Kamala Kant Pande, through whom the plaintiff's claim, separated from his brothers before his death which took place sometime in June, 1860, and, thirdly, whether Kamala Kant left a son who died shortly after him. The first question raises a point whether Kishun Dutt has the right to sue. The case of the plaintiffs is that Kamala Kant was separate from his brothers Nand Kumar and Raj Kumar, defendants Nos. 1 to 7 represent the interest of Nand Kumar and Raj Kumar, and their case is, that Kamala Kant was joint with his brothers. Kamala Kant died leaving a widow Badamo Kuer and five daughters including Umeda Kuer (plaintiff No. 1) and Jasoda Kuer. Badamo Kuer died in 1906 and Jasoda Kuer died in 1907. Umeda Kuer was the only surviving daughter of Kamala Kant at the date of the institution of the suit. She is now dead and Kishun Dutt claims to be the son of Jasoda and the only heir of Kamala Kant. The defendants resist the claim and their case is that Kishun Dutt is the son, not of Jasoda, but of Jasoda's husband's brother. In my opinion, the case of the defendants on this point is manifestly false. Jasoda was married to one Brijbhukhan. Brijbhukhan had three brothers—Tirjugi Narain, Gangasebak and Ramsebak. Gangasebak and Ramsebak have been examined on behalf of the plaintiffs, and there is no reason to disbelieve their testimony supported as it is by ample documentary evidence. Exhibit 4 is a deed of assignment, dated the 6th of October 1898. That deed was executed by Brijbhukhan in respect of certain debts due to him in favour of his wife Jasoda Kuer. There is satisfactory evidence that Kishun Dutt sued to recover these debts. Exhibits 34-A, 34-B, and 34-C prove satisfactorily that proceedings were taken by Kishun Dutt and in all these proceedings Kishun Dutt was described as the son of Brijbhukhan. There are two other documents, Exhibits 32-B and 41. These documents are in respect of rent which Brijbhukhan owed to one Surajbuksh Singh. Kishun Dutt executed an instalment-bond in respect of the money due, and there were suits upon the bond in which Kishun Dutt was described as the son of Brijbhukhan.

The argument on behalf of the defendants is that Tirjugi Narain, Gangasebak and Ramsebak had their eyes on this property all along, and that they entered into a conspiracy to defeat the claim of the defendants; and with that view they began to create evidence in their favour at a very early period. I am unable to accept this argument. I hold that Kishun Dutt is the son of Jasoda and is entitled to maintain the action.

The third point raised on behalf of the defendants is a short one and may be disposed of at once. It is necessary to remember in this connection that Kishun Dutt claims as the daughter's son of Kamala Kant, and it is obvious that his claim must fail if it is proved that Kamala Kant had a son who survived him. The case of the defendants on this point is equally false and only shows to what lengths they were prepared to go in order to defeat the claim of the plaintiffs. The learned Subordinate Judge has referred to the documentary evidence on this point and in my opinion that evidence completely destroys the case of the defendants. The first document to which I shall refer is Ex. 22. That is a deed of relinquishment executed on the 12th of February 1871 by Badamo Kuer in favour of Raj Kumar and Nand Kumar. In that document Badamo Kuer states as follows: "Now Kamala Kant Pande died lawald" on the 5th Asarh, 1275 Fasli. Raj Kumar Pandey and Nand Kumar Pandey, brothers of Kamla Kant Pandey, are entitled to his estate in equal moiety. I, the executant, have no other right to the estate of my husband which was his ancestral Milkial property, except that of maintenance. The marriage and Gowna ceremonies of my two unmarried daughters will be performed under the management of Raj Kumar Pandey and Nand Kumar Pandey and both these heirs will themselves perform the marriage and Gowna ceremonies of both the daughters." In my opinion this document establishes that Kamala Kant did not leave a son. The argument before us is that dying "lawald" does not mean dying without male issue, but that it means dying without issue. That may be so. But in order to understand in what sense the executant understood the expression "lawald" we must read the whole document. Now Badamo Kuer herself says that her husband left at least two unmarried daughters. She could not, by the expression "lawald" have meant that her husband died without leaving any issue. It is obvious that, reading that expression in connection with the context, it means that her husband died without leaving any male heir. This is undoubtedly the sense in which Badamo

Kuer understood the expression. Exhibit 26 which is the Ekrarnama executed by Nand Kumar and Raj Kumar in favour of Badamo Kuer, is to the same effect. Rajkumar and Nandkumar, who were the predecessors-in-title of defendants Nos. 1 to 7 say as follows:—"Our youngest brother Kamala Kant Pande died leaving behind him his widow Musummat Badamo Pandain and three unmarried daughters. We have performed the marriage and Gowna ceremonies of one of the three daughters meeting the expenses in cash and kind, etc., in connection therewith, out of our own funds, and have been maintaining and supporting the said Musummat and the two daughters." The argument is that, as a matter of fact, Kamala Kant left four daughters; but, in my opinion, that argument cannot have any effect on the point before us, namely, whether Kamala Kant left a son. There is no suggestion in the Ekrarnama by Nand Kumar and Raj Kumar that he left a son. Exhibit 19 also supports the case of the plaintiffs on this point. In my opinion the defendants have failed to establish that Kamala Kant was survived by a son.

The only substantial question in this case is, whether Kamala Kant was joint with his brothers at the time of his death. The learned Vakil for the defendants has referred to evidence showing that Lachmi Narain was joint with Kamala Kant and his brothers. Kamala Kant, Raj Kumar and Nand Kumar were the sons of Uma Dutt. Lachmi Narain was the brother of Uma Dutt. After the death of Lachmi Narain a question arose as to whether the family was joint. In the litigation which ensued it was determined in 1864 that the family was joint. In my opinion the history of that litigation throws no light on the present dispute between the parties which is, whether in 1868 the family was joint. Kamala Kant died on the 25th of June 1868 and Badamo Kuer was recorded in the mutation register in respect of some of the properties as the owner of the shares held by Kamala Kant. This was followed by the deed of relinquishment executed on the 12th of February 1871; and it is argued on behalf of the defendants, that the statement of Badamo Kuer on this point is entitled to very great weight, as he must have known whether his husband was or was not joint with his brothers. I am unable to take that view. It is certainly remarkable that this lady says that the brothers of Kamala Kant were entitled to the estate in equal moities. Now, obviously, if the family was joint, Rajkumar and Nand Kumar were not entitled to any specific shares in the joint family property. Nor do I find any unqualified admission in this document to the effect that the family was joint at the time of the death of Kamala Kant. In one place the lady says that Nand Kumar and Raj Kumar were the heirs of her husband. It is quite true, that, in another place, she says that she was only entitled to maintenance and nothing more. But if the family was joint, Raj Kumar and Nand Kumar could not have been described as the heirs of Kamala Kant Pandey. I am unable to give so much importance to the statement made in Ex. 22 as the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellants would like me to give.

The deed of relinquishment was executed, as I have said, on the 12th of February 1871. On the 23rd of February 1872 Jasoda Kuer instituted a suit to have her right declared in the property which belonged to her father. The primary Court as well as the first Court of Appeal gave Jasoda Kuer a decree for possession on the hypothesis that her father was separate from her uncle. But the High Court pointed out that Badamo Kuer having relinquished her interest Jasoda was not entitled to maintain a suit for possession during the life time of the widow. The judgment of the High Court is a short one and may be set out in full. It runs as follows: "The decree in this case is not drawn in the proper form. The decree according to the modern practice ought to be that the widow was entitled, as the heiress of her husband, to an interest for her life in her husband's property and that the interest under the Buzenamah has passed to the defendant. On that ground the suit for present possession will be dismissed. Each party to pay their own costs of this appeal." This judgment, in my opinion, establishes that the family was separate and that Badamo Kuer, but for the deed of relinquishment, was entitled to succeed to the estate of her husband. Badamo died in 1906 and the present suit was instituted on the 16th of March 1916. As I entirely agree with the view which has been taken by the learned Subordinate Judge on this point, I do not think that it is necessary to refer to all the evidence in the case. In order to succeed, the plaintiffs must establish that the parties altered and intended to alter their title to the property, and that there was a definite and unambiguous indication by the members of the family to separate and to enjoy their respective shares in severalty. In my opinion the evidence shows that the parties did intend to alter their title to the property. The learned Subordinate Judge has referred to a mass of evidence and although I have considered all that evidence, I will refer only to two documents. The first is the judgment of the High Court (Ex. 30), to which I have already referred, which establishes that the parties were separate. The other document is Ex. 23A. This is a bond executed by Nand Kumar in favour of Raj Kumar in order to raise money for the expenses of the marriage ceremony of his own daughter. This document was executed on the 25th of April 1865. I quite agree that separate transactions by members of a joint family do not by themselves establish separation, but mutual transactions between two members of a family stand on an entirely different footing if the family were joint, as is contended by the defendants, it would be impossible for one brother to borrow money from another brother, for the fund would be a common fund. In my opinion Ex. 23A. furnishes a very strong, if not conclusive, evidence of the fact that there was a separation between the parties. This document, taken with all the evidence in the case, shows that the parties intended to alter their title to the property. I hold that Kamala Kant was separate from his brothers and that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed in this action.

First Appeal No. 111 of 1920 must be dismissed with costs.

First Appeal No. 125 of 1920 is by the plaintiffs. There are two points in this appeal; first, whether the learned Subordinate Judge was right in disallowing the plaintiffs' claim for mesne profits in regard to the period prior to the deed of gift dated the 21st of February 1916; and, secondly, whether the learned Judge was right in deciding a portion of issue No. 12 against the plaintiffs. Now, it appears that some of the properties in dispute are in possession of persons who are not members of the joint family. They are defendants Nos. 8 to 12, defendant No. 13 and defendants Nos. 14 to 16. Some of them claim under mortgages executed in their favour by the predecessors-in-title of defendants Nos. 1 to 7 and some claim under sale-deeds executed by them. The learned Subordinate Judge says as follows: "I do not think that the properties which have passed to third persons can be recovered by plaintiffs. They are apparently innocent purchasers for value from ostensible owners. Besides, both Umeda Kuer and Kishun Dutt Missir had the right to sue for setting aside the sale-deeds within three years of the date of execution of such deeds. This none of them did. The prayer for setting aside the sale-deeds becomes time-barred and plaintiffs cannot recover possession of properties covered by the sale-deeds unless they clear the ground by first getting the sale-deeds set aside which they cannot do." I am unable to agree with this view. These deeds of sale were executed by the predecessors-in-title of defendants Nos. 1 to 7. There is no privity between them and the plaintiffs and I know of no authority which lays down that a person who is entitled to possession of property has, as a preliminary to that, to set aside a document which may have been executed by somebody else in order to defeat his title. Nor do I think it can be considered that defendants Nos. 8 to 16 are bona fide purchasers. They have taken the title from a person who had no right whatever to convey that title. In my opinion the plaintiffs are entitled to recover possession of the properties claimed in the suit.

There is a question as to whether defendant No. 13 was actually in possession of three of the properties alleged by the plaintiffs to be in her possession in the plaint. These properties are mauza Sohng, mauza Babhouli and mauza Sarkauli. It was the plaintiffs' case that the defendant No. 13 is in possession of these properties by virtue of a conveyance executed in his favour by the predecessors-in-title of the principal defendants. Defendant No. 13, however, filed a written statement stating that she was not in possession of those properties. Thereupon the plaintiffs filed a petition after the judgment was pronounced, but before the decree was drawn up, bringing the facts to the notice of the Court, and asking the Court to pass a proper direction in regard to those properties. The Court, however, has not passed any order upon this petition except to say, 'Petition as required by order No. 162 stating separation shares of the defendants filed. Let the decree be prepared now.' The decree as drawn up, however, did not give effect to the petition of Kishun Dutt, dated the 27th of March, 1919. The question is now important only in regard to the claim for mesne profits. Defendants Nos. 1 to 7 maintain that they are not in possession of any of these mauzas and that defendant No. 13 is in fact in possession of these mauzas. The question as between defendant No. 13 and defendants Nos. 1 to 7 has not been tried by the Court below; and we direct that this question should be tried at the time of the ascertainment of mesne profits.

The next question is, whether the learned Subordinate Judge's decision on the question of mesne profits is right. In order to understand this point it is necessary to remember the following facts. At the time when the suit was instituted Kishun Dutt had no interest whatever in the properties. Umeda Kuer was the only surviving daughter of Kamala Kant and she was entitled to maintain the action. On the 21st of February 1916 Umeda made a gift of 12-annas interest in the properties in dispute to Kishun Dutt. The question is, whether at the same time she made a gift of the mesne profits which had already accrued due to her, and, whether, if she purported to do so, it conferred any right upon Kishun Dutt to sue for mesne profits which had accrued due to Umeda Kuer on the 21st of February, 1916. The suit was instituted on the 16th of March, 1916; Umeda Kuer died on the 25th of August, 1918. Thereupon Kishun Dutt became entitled to the remaining 4-annas interest in the properties as heir. The direction of the learned Subordinate Judge on the question of mesne profits is as follows: "So long as Musammnat Umeda Kuer was alive she and not Kishun Dutt Missir was entitled to recover mesne profits; Kishun Dutt Missir is, therefore, entitled to recover mesne profits in his own right from the date of Umeda Kuer's death. The question is, if the deed of gift, dated the 21st February 1916 conferred on him the right to recover mesne profits to the extent of 12-annas share. As under the deed he was entitled to immediate possession to the extent of 12-annas share, he is entitled to recover mesne profits from the said date to the extent of such share. Musammnat Umeda Kuer is now dead and the mesne profits which accrued due to her before the deed of gift cannot be recovered by anybody. The result, therefore, is that the plaintiffs shall recover mesne profits to the extent of 12-annas share in the properties decreed from the 21st of February 1916 till the date of Umeda Kuer's death which took place according to the plaintiff's petition on the 25th August 1918, and full mesne profits for the properties decreed from the date of Umeda Kuer's death till recovery of possession. Plaintiffs may get the same determined by a separate petition." In my opinion the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point is right and must be affirmed.

The solution of the problem must, in my opinion, depend on whether, in regard to the mesne profits which had already accrued due to Umeda Kuer, the assignment of the 21st February 1916 was an assignment of an actionable claim or an assignment of a mere right to sue. In England, ordinarily, choses in action were not assignable at law, but were, speaking generally, assignable in equity. The general rule formulated by the Courts of Equity has been adopted in the Transfer of Property Act which defines "an actionable claim" and provides how such a claim can be transferred. This is the general rule; but an exception was engrafted on this rule. Equity, on the ground of public policy, did not give validity to the assignment of what is in the English cases referred to as a bare right of action. Our own statute has accepted this view of Equity in section 6 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act which provides that "a mere right to sue cannot be transferred." As was pointed out in Glegg v. Bromley (1), "there is no doubt in the cases about the rule, and there is no doubt in the cases with regard to the exception, but difficulties often arose in deciding whether a particular right was within the exception or was within the rule." Having considered the whole subject with care, the learned Judges came to the conclusion that "the question was whether the subject-matter of the assignment was, in the view of the Court, property with an incidental remedy for its recovery, or was a bare right to bring an action either at law or in equity."

(1) (1912) 3 K. B. 474; 81 L. J. K. B. 1031; 106 L. T. 825.

I think we may usefully apply that principle to this case, and the question at once arises what exactly was assigned by Umeda Kuer to the plaintiffs on the 21st February, 1916. There was undoubtedly an assignment of property and with regard to that, there is no question before us. But there was also an assignment of mesne profits which had accrued due to her at the date of the assignment. The property was in her at the date of the assignment, and she says in effect to the plaintiffs, "I am transferring by the deed a share of the property which is in me but of which I am not in possession. But, in addition to the property, I am assigning to you my claim in regard to the mesne profits which have accrued due to me by right of my title to the property, which title vests in you as from the 21st February 1916". Can it be said that the subject-matter of the assignment in regard to the mesne profits was property with an incidental remedy for its recovery? Mesne profits are unliquidated damages. A claim to mesne profits is not a claim to any debt, it is not a claim to any beneficial interest in moveable property, not in the possession, either actual or constructive, of the claimant. How can it then be suggested that the subject-matter of the assignment is property falling within the definition of "actionable claim" in the Transfer of Property Act? In my opinion, the subject-matter of the assignment was "a mere right to sue", and the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point must be affirmed.

The result is that F. A. No. 125 of 1920 succeeds in part. The decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge must be varied in the manner indicated in this judgment, and the appellants must have the general costs of the appeal, but will not be entitled to a separate hearing fee.

TULARAM BHUTUNIA—APPELLANT

versus

PURNENDRA NARAIN RAI DEB VERMA AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Execution of decree—Auction-sale—Bidder, whether can withdraw offer—Bid, whether open for any length of time.

A bidder at an auction-sale can withdraw his bid before it is knocked down. A bidder at an auction-sale must be presumed to make his offer on the condition that it would be accepted or rejected within the period during which such sales ordinarily last, and the offer cannot be treated as open beyond a reasonable period of time.

Appeals against the orders of the Subordinate Judge, Dinajpur, dated the 18th February, 1922.

Babu Girija Prosanna Sanyal, (with him Bahu Indu Prokash Chatterji), for the Appellant.

Babu Assti Ranjan Ghose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Walmsley, J.—These two appeals arise from an order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Dinajpur in the following circumstances. The decree-holder-respondent obtained a decree and put it into execution. The property against which he proceeded consisted of 24 lots, and the sale began on the 16th February 1921. On the application of the judgment-debtor, the Court ordered that the sale would be continued until the 18th February 1921. On the 18th the Judge made this order: "The bid will be accepted on 30th March 1921 on return from Jalpaiguri as prayed for by the judgment-debtor in today's petition. Decree-holder also consented." The Judge returned from Jalpaiguri on the 30th March and made this order: "There is no reason for allowing further time to the judgment-debtor, direct that the sale be concluded and the parties concerned be directed to deposit the sums due for price by tomorrow." On the following day, his order was: "the bids may be accepted and the sales concluded. Absent bidders be served with notices that their bids have been accepted and others be informed of the acceptance of bid". The Nazir on the same day reported that Tularam Bhutur'a (appellant in appeal No. 177) had retracted his offer in respect of 5 lots before the bid was knocked down and that Satish Chandra Das, bidder in respect of 3 lots, Baidya Nath Das and Kissori Mohan Das, bidders for 2 lots, and Basant Kumar Guha, bidder for one lot, were absent. The last four persons are the appellants in appeal No. 287. Thereafter, at the instance of the decree-holder, the Court proceeded to sell these lots afresh. The bids in the second sale were considerably lower and, at the instance of the decree-holder, the Court issued notices on the defaulting bidders to pay the differences. They objected and the judgment against which these appeals are preferred is the judgment disposing of their objections.

So far as Tularam is concerned, very little need be said. As I have mentioned, the Nazir reported on the 31st March 1921 that Tularam retracted his offer before the bid was knocked down. On the authorities it is clear that Tularam had the right to withdraw his bid. It is urged, however, for the respondent that his bid had actually been accepted before it was withdrawn. For that view, I can find no support. The Nazir was the officer conducting the sale and his report is quite clear that the withdrawal was made before the hammer fell. Consequently, Tularam's appeal must be allowed and the Judge's order reversed so far as he is concerned.

With regard to the others, they were absent on the 31st March. The first point in their favour is this that they were not consulted about the adjournment of the sale from the 18th February to the 30th March. It is suggested that they probably knew and did not object. But that is not enough. There is nothing on the record to show that they gave their consent. That being so, the position is that these men who bid for the various lots expecting that the auction-sale would be concluded with reasonable expedition either the very day on which the offer was made or at any rate the following day, found to their surprise six weeks later that the sale was not concluded on the day the offer was made but that it was kept open for this abnormal length of time. It appears to me that the reasonable view is that each of these bidders made his offer on the condition that it would be accepted or rejected within the period during which such sales ordinarily last, and that, in the absence of anything to show that he consented to the period being protracted to the extraordinary length of six weeks, we ought to hold that his offer was not intended by him to be open for that unusual length of time. I think, therefore, that the appeal of Satish Chandra Das and others should also be allowed on this ground.

The result is that the judgment of the lower Court is reversed and the order directing the appellants in both these appeals to pay to the decree-holder the deficits on sums by which their offers exceeded the amounts realised at the second sale is set aside with costs in both Courts the hearing fee in each of these appeals being assessed at two gold mohurs.

Mukerji, J. :—I agree.

Hindu Law—Joint Family—Alienation by father—Antecedent debt—Necessity—Mortgage—Damdupat rule of applicability of—Interest pendente lite, whether can be allowed—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 34, applicability of.

MOTILAL RAMLAL v. RENI

A Hindu father who is manager of the joint family is competent to mortgage the family property for payment of antecedent debts or raise money for legal necessity on the security of the larger interest including the shares of his sons. [p. 714, col. 2.]

Where the rule of Damdapat recognised in Hindu Law is in force, it applies to simple money debts as also to mortgage-debts. The consequence of this is that in case of a mortgage as soon as the maximum limit of interest is reached the contractual obligation comes to an end, and this may take place before the date of suit. In such a case the rule of Damdapat intervenes and precludes the Court from allowing the uniform contractual rate of interest down to the date fixed for redemption. The matter ceases to be any longer within the realm of contract and passes into the domain of judgment as soon as the suit is instituted, and it is here that the discretion which s. 84 of the Civil Procedure Code vests in Courts to decree interest pendente lite comes into play. [p. 716, cols. 1 and 2.]

Case-law discussed.

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, East Borar, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 197 of 1921, dated the 28th March 1922.

Mr. M. R. Dixit, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Murathe, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Daulat was 'the husband of the present respondent No. 1 and father of the respondents Nos. 2 and 3. He is said to have given himself up to drinking and thus led a life of extravagance. On 23rd April 1915 he executed a vyavasthapatra (Exh. 2 D-1) in the name of his wife Reni and mother Tulsabai. After the execution of this vyavasthapatra he, in consideration of Rs. 1,200, mortgaged the property in suit with plaintiff as per Exh. P-1 dated 1st June 1916 and Reni also joined him in the execution of this mortgage-deed. Subsequently, on 2nd February 1918 Daulat along with his wife Reni and mother Tulsabai acting for himself and as guardian of his minor sons defendants Nos. 2 and 3 executed a sale-deed Exh. 5 D-5 in respect of the property in suit in favour of Kesheorao, the father of defendant No. 4 and husband of defendant No. 5, for a consideration of Rs. 3,000. Daulat died on 9th December 1918. The mortgagee instituted the suit to enforce the mortgage on 30th October 1919 against defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 to recover Rs. 2,400 on its basis subject to the rule of Damdapat. The mortgage is dated 1st June 1916 and provides for payment of interest at Rs. 1-8-0 with a stipulation for payment of 2 rupees compound interest on the amount, and provides for the foreclosure of the mortgaged property. The mortgage-debt is said to have been advanced for payment of antecedent debts of Daulat and for agricultural and household expenses.

The defendant No. 1 did not make appearance while defendants Nos. 2 and 3 contested the claim and similarly did also the defendants Nos. 4 and 5. The defence of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was a denial of the mortgage and of its consideration and attestation, and of its being binding as against them, on the ground that it was not for legal necessity or for their benefit. They also pleaded that their father Daulat being addicted to drinking and other vices, the consideration, if any, received by him, must have been spent in these vices. They also relied upon the registered vyavasthapatra dated 23rd April 1915 (Exh. 2 D-1) executed by their father evidently for their benefit in the name of their mother defendant No. 1 and grand-mother Tulsabai; their contention raised on its basis was that Daulat had ceased to be interested in the property from before the date of the mortgage Exhibit P-1. The defence of defendants Nos. 4 and 5, so far as it is relevant to this appeal, was almost similar to that of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The necessary issues were framed. The first Court found that by reason of vyavasthapatra (Exh. 2 D-1) Daulat had ceased to be interested in the property and, therefore, the mortgage by him was incompetent. As regards the question of legal necessity that Court found that the consideration of the mortgage was not proved to be for legal necessity, and, consequently, it held that in the interest of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 could not be validly mortgaged for the same. On the point of Daulat being addicted to drinking and other vices, the Court accepted the story of the defendants and concluded that it was not proved that the mortgage-debt was incurred for any legal necessity and held that it was possible that he might have borrowed money for his immoral purposes. On these findings the Court refused to pass a decree against the mortgaged property held by defendants Nos. 4 and 5 under the sale-deed, dated 2nd February 1918 (Exh. 5 D-5) although that deed clearly recited that the payment of the mortgage-debt formed part of its consideration,

MOTILAL RAMLAL v. RENI

The Court, however, passed a money-decree against defendant No. 1 for a sum of Rs. 3,316-12-0 which it found was due at the date of suit although plaintiff claimed Rs. 2,400, as due to him at that date. The defendant No. 1 was by the judgment ordered to pay proportionate costs of the suit. But in drawing up the decree the plaintiff's pleader's fee was calculated on Rs. 3,316-12-0 instead of on Rs. 2,400 claimed as due at the date of the suit; this amount together with the other full costs of the suit making an aggregate of Rs. 334-12-9 is shown in the decree as costs of the suit payable by defendant No. 1 to plaintiff. The Moharrir who drew up the decree calculated defendants' costs in two sets, but here it must be said to his credit that he did not commit the further mistake of calculating pleader's fee on Rs. 3,316. He carefully calculated it on Rs. 2,400 only. The Judge, Mr. Jawahirlal, signed the decree without any scrutiny, so did also the pleaders who initialled the same.

The matter came up in appeal at the instance of the plaintiff before Mr. Staples, District Judge, Amraoti. The value of the relief in appeal was put down at Rs. 3,316-12-0. Of course, it was not the plaintiff's interest to point out that the first Court granted him a decree for an amount far in excess of what was claimed by him at the date of the suit. The District Judge who simply confirmed the findings and dismissed the appeal also did not care to notice the excessive amount of claim and of pleader's fee awarded in the first Court; he also allowed two sets of costs to the two sets of respondents although their defence was common. The pleader's fee was, however, calculated in his Court on Rs. 3,316 for both parties. It was I think the duty of the District Judge to draw the attention of the lower Court to the mistakes apparent on the face of the record, and to warn the Muharrir who was responsible for the drawing up of the decree of the District Judge's Court is equally to blame for not having drawn the attention of the District Judge to the mistakes in the lower Court's decree. The District Judge might then, at least have called upon the plaintiff's pleader to correct the valuation in the memorandum of appeal and put down the claim in appeal at Rs. 2,400 and thus the same mistakes would have been avoided in the decree of the Appellate Court. Although there are grounds Nos. 6 and 9 in the memo of appeal the attention of the Court does not appear to have been directed to them. The District Judge's judgment, at least, does not show that they were present to his mind when he disposed of the appeal. He concludes his judgment by the usual order that the costs of the appeal will be borne by the appellant, and the costs of the lower Court will be borne as ordered by that Court. The case has come up before me in such unsatisfactory state and I am bound to say that I am not at all pleased with either the manner of its trial by Mr. Jawahirlal, or the mode of its disposal by him in the first Court, and by Mr. Staples at the stage of appeal.

I will now deal with the main appeal. It is contended that the lower Courts have committed a horrible mistake in looking upon the vyavasthapatta as having put an end to Daulat's interest in the property covered by it with effect from its date whereas, as a matter of fact, it does not purport to do anything of that kind. The document seems to have been misread by both the Courts. There is not a single word of a present demise of any interest in the land in favour of the executors, or of the sons who were the beneficiaries thereunder. It simply hands over or transfers the right of management, but does not in any way transfer Daulat's ownership in presento. It says that Reni and Tulsabai were to manage the property till their death, and that after their death, the property will go to his heirs the sons. He delegates to them only the function of management of the property including the one of payment of assessment. It is contended by the plaintiff-respondent that mere proof of execution of the deed is not sufficient. There must be evidence to prove that it was acted upon and given effect to. My attention has been drawn to the evidence both oral and documentary which shows that the field continued, in spite of the deed, in the actual possession, management and enjoyment of Daulat. It was he who paid the assessment and leased out the land to lessees. See Ex. P-4 and P-5 which show the field in the name of Daulat as the person who held actual possession and paid the assessment. The Exhibit P-2 is an extract from the Record of Rights. It does not show any transfer of ownership from Daulat in 1915-16-17 in pursuance of the vyavasthapatra, but records the mortgage incumbrance dated 1st June 1916 (Ex. P-1) and the sale as per Ex. 5 D-5. This clearly shows that the Revenue or Settlement authorities were never informed of the existence of this vyavasthapatra. So far as I can see, the document was a waste-paper and was not given effect to, because we find Daulat, in spite of it, had created the mortgage over the property within 14 months of its execution and he went on letting out the land and paying assessment, and enjoyed its income, and, further, sold the same to Kashirao for a consideration of Rs. 3,000 on 2nd February 1918. Of course, the mortgagee, as also the vendee, knew about the existence of the vyavasthapatra and, therefore, like careful business men, the mortgagee got the obligee Reni to execute the mortgage Ex. P-1, and the purchaser got Reni and Tulsabai also to join in the execution of the sale-deed along with Daulat, who in his turn signed it for himself as also as guardian of his minor sons defendants 2 and 3. The vyavasthapatra restricts the right of the two ladies to transfer the property either by sale or mortgage, and yet the ladies have sold the property to Kesheorao for satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. All these circumstances coupled with the oral evidence, clearly establish the appellant's contention that it was not Daulat's intention to give effect to this vyavasthapatra to any extent, much less to divest himself, by means of it, of his own ownership over the property covered by it. I am not, under such circumstances, prepared to accept the erroneous construction put upon that deed by both the lower Courts, without carefully scrutinizing the terms and conditions thereof. This would show that, in spite of the execution of the said document, he retained his ownership over the property and was competent to alienate the property for payment of antecedent debts or for cash debts incurred by him, if any, for legal necessity.

The property is put down in the mortgage-deed itself as being ancestral, so the interest which Daulat had in it was not that of a sole owner, but only, of a joint co-parcener, and the extent of his individual interest did not exceed $1/3$ rd. But as a father and manager of the joint family he was competent to mortgage the family property for payment of antecedent debts, or raise money for legal necessity, on the security of the larger interest including the shares of his two minor sons. This takes us to the next point which deals with the question how far the alienation binds the minor sons' interests. So far as the alienation of his own $1/3$ rd share is concerned, the question is not at all difficult or material. The question of the consideration of the mortgage-debt being required to pay off antecedent debts, or for other legal purposes binding on the minor sons depends upon proof of the existence of debts and of the fact of their satisfaction out of the consideration, as also upon the existence or otherwise of circumstances amounting to legal necessity for the borrowing of cash.

The mortgage-deed recites that Rs. 200 were borrowed to pay off one Rama or Ramji. But who he was and where he lived is not satisfactorily proved. Consequently, the item of Rs. 200 cannot be strictly held proved to have been utilized towards liquidation of the antecedent debts of the father. The evidence of one Anyaj, P.W. 3, has been rightly discarded, unsupported or uncorroborated as it is by any documentary evidence. The lower Courts have discarded the evidence of P.W. 7 as insufficient or unsatisfactory. I am not, however, prepared to agree with them in the appreciation of this piece of evidence. P. W. 7's evidence is corroborated by entries in Exh. P-3 which prove the existence of the antecedent debts to the extent of Rs. 327. There is no valid reason for holding the repayment of Rs. 327 out of the consideration of the mortgage-deed as not proved. There is absolutely no reliable evidence to show how the rest of the consideration was utilized and the conclusion of the first Court that it has not been proved to have been taken by Daulat for legal necessity seems correct. That Daulat was a confirmed drunkard is amply proved by the evidence on record on both sides, and it is likely he may have spent the same or major portion thereof to meet his expenses in connection with his immoral pursuits. The Patwari's report shows that he died of hard drinking. The document Exh. 2 D-1 is drawn up on the very basis of his being a drunkard and as such incompetent to look after and protect his minor sons' interests adequately. I am, therefore, not prepared to hold that the balance of Rs. 873 out of Rs. 1,200 was borrowed for legal necessity or for purposes binding on his minor sons. The alienation is not, therefore, binding on the minor defendants Nos. 2 and 3's 2/3rd share so far as Rs. 873 is concerned. Their shares could be legally alienated by him for payment of Rs. 327 only. So far as Daulat's 1/3rd share is concerned, it would of course be bound in whose-so-ever's hands it may go to the full extent of the mortgage-debt and I hold accordingly. The defendants Nos. 4 and 5 who have taken the sale with full knowledge of the mortgage cannot avoid the liability of Daulat's interest in the property in their hands, for the debt in suit, to the extent indicated above.

The next question is about the interest to be awarded. The plaintiff claimed Rs. 2,400 made up of Rs. 1,200 principal + Rs. 1,200 for interest up to the date of the suit subject to the rule of the Damdupat. His calculations as given in the plaint show that the amount due to him up to 29th September 1919 came to Rs. 2,403-9-0 but that as the rule of Damdupat stopped the running of interest as soon as it reached its maximum the mortgagees' right to demand interest after that date under the terms of the contract ceased and the matter, therefore, passed from the domain of contract to the domain of judgment. Here in this case this contingency having happened sometime before the date of the suit, the Court's power to award interest under the statutory provisions contained in section 209 of the old Code, which correspond to section 34 of the new Code, came into operation with effect from the date of the suit. I am fortified in this view by the ruling of the Bombay High Court as also by an unreported decision of Sir Henry Stanyon. In Amboo Bai v. Ragho, F. A. No. 64/07 decided on 19th March 1908, Sir Henry Stanyon, Additional Judicial Commissioner, has put it very tersely in the following words which have my entire approval :—

"The very fact that it is within the discretion of the Court to award interest or not, and to fix the rate of interest, makes it manifest that it is a statutory power which does not relate back to the contract nor comprise the enforcement of any part of the contract between the parties. The law recognizes that in claims for money there may be considerable delay between the institution of the suit and the realization of his money for which delay the plaintiff may not be responsible. If the money is carrying interest by contract the till date of payment then probably no interest under section 209 (new section 34) will be allotted but merely interest under the contract. But if the money carried no interest ab initio or for any reason had ceased to carry interest from and after the date of suit or some earlier date, then the Court may in a proper case apply section 209 (new section 34) aforesaid.

- (1) If A lent money to B payable without interest in one year ; (2) if A lent Rs. 500 on which prospective interest to date fixed for payment was calculated and added and no further interest stipulated for ; (3) if A lent B money repayable with interest at Rs. 24% p. a. in 5 years in a case governed by the rule of damdupat, so that all the recoverable interest under the contract had accrued due before date of suit, in all these cases, section 209 (new section 34) of the Civil Procedure Code, could be brought into operation to compensate A for the delay involved by B's failure to pay and the resulting necessity of a suit."

Reliance is placed on behalf of the respondents on the case of Nandalal Roy v. Dharendra Nath Chakravarti (1), and it is urged that in view of that ruling no interest pendente lite should be allowed. Looking to the sound reasoning in Amboo Bai v. Ragho, F. A. 64/07, which followed Dhondshet v. Rauji (2), which also was a case of foreclosure, as also looking to the fact that, in Narain v. Nathmal (3), the actual decree passed allowed interest from the date of suit to the date fixed for redemption by the second Appellate Court, (although the head-note does not clearly show it), I think I should not follow the Calcutta decision in preference to the local rulings above referred to. It appears that the question which the Calcutta High Court had to decide was whether the rule of Damdupat operates as a bar to the Court's power to award interest after the date fixed for redemption until realization. While the question I have to decide is whether interest from date of suit to the due date fixed for redemption is allowable or not. Instead of the Calcutta ruling militating against the view taken by our High Court it really proceeds upon and recognizes the very principles which are taken as the basis for the local decisions, and I may even say that the Calcutta ruling in fact supports the view taken by our High Court. If Courts can award interest after the date of the decree, I do not see why after the application of the rule of damdupat at the date of suit, and the consequent stoppage of interest under the terms of the contract, the Court's power should not be exercisable in respect of the period which intervenes between the institution and the date fixed for redemption. It might be argued that the general principles which make section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code applicable to all claims for money do not justify the view that that section was meant to be applied to mortgage decrees or to decrees for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge. There is a very simple answer to this. The scheme of the Transfer of Property Act, as also of the provisions of O. XXXIV, which have now incorporated the corresponding provisions of the Transfer of Property Act into the Civil Procedure Code, shows that the underlying idea is that in all mortgage-suits interest is calculated at the contract rate specified in the mortgage, up to the date to be fixed for redemption consequently there is no room or necessity ordinarily for applying the provisions of section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code to such suits. But where the rule of damdupat recognized under Hindu Law is in force it applies to simple money-debts as also to the mortgage-debts. The consequence of this is that as soon as the maximum limit of interest is reached the contractual obligation comes to an end, and this very often takes place before the date of suit. The rule intervenes and precludes the Court from allowing the uniform contractual rate of interest down to the date fixed for redemption in the mortgage suit. The matter of allowing interest from the date of suit until the date fixed for redemption in such cases thus ceases to be any longer within the realm of contract and passes into the domain of judgment as soon as the suit is instituted. And here the discretion which section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code vests in Courts to decree interest pendente lite comes into play. That the matter of allowing interest is entirely a discretionary matter with Courts, is clearly established in Hiralal Ichhalal Majumdar v. Narsilal Chaturbhuj Das, (4) which was affirmed by the Privy Council in appeal in Hiralal Ichhalal Majumdar v. Desai Narsilal Chaturbhuj (5). Examining the facts of this case in the light of these principles, it will be seen that in the plaint in this suit plaintiff himself has struck off a portion of his claim on the ground that it is not claimable by him as being in excess of that allowable under the rule of damdupat. The plaintiff, however, had charged interest at two rates; first up to the date of the first default he has charged interest at Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem from the date of the bond on Rs. 1,200 and then after that date, he has charged interest at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem compound until the date of suit, and thus arrived at a sum in excess of Rs. 2,400 as payable up to the date of suit. He thus wants to take advantage of both the stipulations one for an enhancement of the rate of interest, and another for compounding the same with yearly rests. This he cannot legally do. In my opinion he should get interest at Rs. 1-8 per cent. per mensem compound with the first rest at the due date of the first kist, and subsequent annual rests thereafter up to a day when the maximum limit of Rs. 2,400 would be reached. If on making calculations on these lines Rs. 2,400 become payable to plaintiff before the date of suit, then interest will cease to run from that date up to the date of the suit, but if at the date of suit the amount is less than Rs. 2,400 further interest will be added to that amount from the date of suit up to such date as will make it Rs. 2,400 at the above rate. Similarly, interest on Rs. 327 from the date of bond at the rate of Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem compound with yearly rests as before, will be calculated, and if the interest so calculated amounts to Rs. 327 before the date of the suit, further interest will be stopped with effect from that date until the date of suit. If it does not come to Rs. 327 further interest will be added until the maximum is reached as in the case of Rs. 2,400 stated above. The disposal of this suit has been delayed by reason of the defence based on the effect of vyavasthapatra which ultimately failed. I, therefore, consider that this a very fit case for the exercise of my discretion under section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code, to award interest during the pendency of the suit and down to the date which I am going to fix as the date for redemption. The first Court had given a provisional finding in para. 7 of the judgment that if a mortgage-decree were to be passed the rate of interest to be awarded will be Rs. 1 per cent. per mensem from date of suit until six months after the date of the decree. I have not heard anything against the propriety of awarding interest pendente lite at the rate specified in the first Court's judgment. I, therefore, direct that an account be made on the lines laid down above, and calculations of interest be made up to 31st of July, 1924 the date which I propose to fix as the date for redemption. Two prices for redemption thus fixed will be payable for the redemption respectively of the entire property of the 2/3rds share thereof as the case may be. The consequential directions will be embodied in the final judgment which I will pass on the 31st of this month. The parties will, in the meantime, examine the accounts which the office will make as stated above and point out inaccuracies, if any, in the same, on the 31st, when I will confirm the account and declare the amounts due and payable.

As regards costs, I direct that as defendants Nos. 2 and 3's Counsel's fees in this Court have been paid by plaintiff, the same shall be shown in the appellant's schedule of costs of this Court. They shall have no other costs in this Court. Similarly, respondent Renu will have no costs in this as also in the two lower Courts. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 shall bear their own costs in three Courts. As regards the costs of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in the two lower Courts I direct that only half their proportionate costs calculated on Rs. 1,829-8-0 (Rs. 2,400-570-8), in each of the two Courts, will be paid to them by plaintiff.

Hindu Law—Widow or daughter, powers of alienation of—Alienation by daughter—Reversioner, after born, whether can challenge—Custom v. Personal law—Succession—Banas of Mauza Devi Nagar, Tahsil Kharar, Ambala District.

The limitations imposed upon the estate of a Hindu widow or daughter are not imposed upon her for the benefit of reversioners. They are inseparable from her estate, so that even if there be no reversioners, she cannot alienate the corpus of the property except for legal necessity. If she does alienate it without legal necessity, then, if there be no reversioners in existence at the time, the alienation can be challenged by subsequently born reversioners. [p. 719, col. 2.]

Semle :—The banias of mauza Devi Nagar, Tahsil Kharar, Ambala District, are governed by Hindu Law in matters of succession.

Appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, 1st class, Ambala, dated the 31st March, 1919, dismissing the plaintiffs' suit.

Dr. G. C. Narang, and Messrs. R. C. Seni and Balwant Rai, for Pandit Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The three plaintiffs in this case are the sons of one of the two daughters of one Ballu Mall who was a bania by caste and owned, besides other property, $\frac{1}{2}$ share in the village Devi Nagar, District Ambala. On his death, which occurred in 1857, his widow, Musammatt Dhan Kaur succeeded to his share in the estate and later on obtained separate possession thereof by partition in spite of the opposition of the other two co-sharers Mutsaddi Mal and Shibbu Mal who claimed to be near collaterals of Ballu Mal and asserted that the widow was entitled only to maintenance. The litigation on this point ended in 1876, and in 1881 the widow gifted in equal shares the whole of her property to her two daughters by Ballu Mal, Mutsaddi Mal and the sons of Shibbu Mal again sued to obtain a declaration that the gift was invalid and inoperative as against them; but this was refused on the ground that they had failed to establish that they were agnates or near agnates of Ballu Mal. The final judgment of the Chief Court in the said case is dated the 14th November 1889 and in 1894 one of the donees, i.e., Musammât Sobhi, gifted her share of the property to her husband Bishambar. Later on, in 1898, her sister Musammât Naraini followed suit and gifted her share to her husband Basant Rai (father of the plaintiffs). Before these gifts to their husbands the two sisters had made certain alienations and a sale was effected by Bishambar after the gift to him. The sisters died in 1911 and 1912, respectively. Musammât Sobhi, who died first, had only one child a daughter, named, Musammât Tulsan, who died in her lifetime leaving a daughter Musammât Manohri who figures as defendant No. 1 in this case and has succeeded to the property left by Musammât Sobhi or her husband Bishambar.

The plaintiffs' who are the sons of the other sister (Musammât Naraini), sued for possession of all the immoveable property left by Ballu Mal including that alienated by the two sisters and Bishambar, stating that the widow, Musammât Dhan Kaur, and after her death, her daughters succeeded to a limited estate and not as absolute owners; that they as male heirs of Ballu Mal were entitled to succeed to the whole of his estate after the death of his last surviving daughter and that the alienations were inoperative as against them because there was no legal necessity for any of them.

A number of pleas were raised in defence and it was stated that the widow succeeded as full owner and that her daughters became absolute owners by virtue of the gift made in their favour but it was nowhere stated that in matters of inheritance the family followed the general custom of agriculturists and was not governed by Hindu Law. On the other hand, the principal defendant, i.e., Musammât

Manohri stated in paragraph 2 of her written statement that "the parties were bound by the Hindu Law." As no custom was directly or indirectly pleaded no issue could be struck about custom though, on the pleas of the parties, the nature of the rights to which the widow and the daughters succeeded formed the subject of two of the issues framed. The suit was instituted on the 29th November, 1916, evidence on a number of important issues was closed on the 10th June, 1918, final arguments were heard on the 12th July, 1918, and the 22nd July was fixed for judgment, but instead of delivering judgment on that date the Court below recorded an order to the effect that the plaintiffs relied upon Hindu Law but that the defendants did not specifically state what they relied upon; that according to the wajib-ul-arz (of the village Devi Nagar) widows succeed as full owners and that, therefore, the plaintiffs should be given an opportunity to rebut the presumption raised by the wajib-ul-arz with regard to the widow's title as absolute owner. After this order the parties in the course of about nine months examined a few more witnesses -- almost all on questions of necessity improvements, etc. No evidence whatsoever was adduced about the alleged custom, and the plaintiffs did not even produce a copy of the wajib-ul-arz which had been relied upon by the Court. On the basis of a translation of a passage in the wajib-ul-arz relied on and quoted in a judgment in another case the lower Court decided that the widow Musammât Dhan Kaur was the absolute owner and that the family of Ballu Mal was governed by the custom stated in the wajib-ul-arz and not by Hindu Law, and dismissed the plaintiffs suit.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs appellants that the wajib-ul-arz was not produced in evidence at all and could not be referred to, and that even if a quotation of it in the judgment of some other case to which the plaintiffs were not parties could be treated as evidence, it was in the absence of all other evidence quite insufficient to establish the alleged custom. Counsel for the defendants-respondents states that the defendants filed an application in the Court below to call for the record No. 14 which contained a copy of paragraph 8 of the wajib-ul-arz which recited the custom in question and that the record was accordingly called for and was in the Court below. But it appears from the following passage which occurs in the judgment of that Court that the copy in this record was never referred to before it, and that no other copy was produced and exhibited :—

"No copy of the wajib-ul-arz entry on which the defendants rely has been filed by them; but I have been referred to page 8 of the printed paper-book in Civil Appeal No. 545 of 1885 (Mutsaddi Mal v. Musammât Dhan Kuar). Therein the copy of paragraph 3 of the wajib-ul-arz appears and the last two sentences are to this effect * * *".

But even the printed paper-book referred to above was not placed on the record and is not before us. It is, therefore, clear that the wajib-ul-arz was neither produced nor proved in this case. There being, therefore, no evidence in support of the plea which was not taken, we find that the parties are governed by Hindu Law.

On the point of necessity there is no evidence worth the name on the record. It is argued on behalf of the alienees that no better evidence could be produced at this distance of time. If they had produced some evidence it might have been considered sufficient on account of lapse of time but as no evidence is produced it cannot be presumed that the alienations were made for legal necessity.

Some of the alienees claimed compensation for improvements but neither the existence nor value of these alleged improvements was proved by any satisfactory evidence. The oral evidence of the witnesses examined is vague and worthless.

Lastly may be noticed the argument that as the plaintiffs were born after the alienations they could not contest the same. But this contention does not appear to have been raised in the Court below and is quite untenable. The plaintiffs are entitled to succeed as full owners to all the property left by Ballu Mal, being his male heirs according to Hindu Law. The widow and daughters who were limited heirs could not alienate any property without legal necessity even in the absence of reversioners because the property goes to the Crown by escheat in default of reversioners and the Crown is entitled to impugn such alienations. See The Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavalry Venkata Narrainapah (1) "(6) The limitations imposed upon her estate are not imposed upon her for the benefit of reversioners. They are inseparable from her estate, so that even if there be no reversioners, she cannot alienate the corpus of the property except for a legal necessity. If she does alienate it without legal necessity, then, if there be no reversioners, the alienation may be set aside by the Crown taking the property by escheat." (Mulla's Hindu Law, III Edition, page 159).

For all these reasons we accept the appeal and reversing the judgment and decree of the Court below, decree the plaintiffs, suit with costs throughout.

PROSANNA KUMAR SAHA—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 91 (1), 92, 95, 79, 114 (a) —Bengal Regulation (VIII of 1799), s. 48—Bengal Regulation VII of 1798, s. 15 — Return filed by Zemindar, with Collector, admissibility of—Certified copy—Presumption—Admission, value of.

A return filed by a zemindar in the Collector's Office under section 48 of Bengal Regulation VIII of 1798 and section 15 (8) of Bengal Regulation VII of 1798 does not fall within the purview of section 85 of the Evidence Act. [p. 721, col. 2.]

The presumptions contained in sections 79 and 114 (a) of the Evidence Act would, however, apply to a certified copy of such a document. [p. 722, col. 1.]

TARAK CHANDRA CHAKRABURTY v. PROSANNA KUMAR SAHA

The legal effect of such a document or the weight to be attached to it would have to be determined by the application of such tests as have to be applied to all other statements. If it is sought to be used as an admission against the party making it, its probative value would be considerable. Where it is sought to be used in favor of the party who made it, it must fulfil the requirements of section 21 (1), read with section 32, of the Evidence Act, or it must be relevant otherwise than as an admission. In either case its value would be slight. [p. 722, col. 1].

JUDGMENT.

Walmsley, J.—This appeal is preferred by the defendants. They are the owners of a Sikmi Taluk named Kasi Chandra Chukerburtty, and in the Record of Rights recently published the rent of the taluk was stated to be not liable to enhancement. The landlord, however, challenged the accuracy of this entry and made an application before the Settlement Officer for enhancement of the rent under the provisions of section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Settlement Officer found that the landlord had failed to rebut the presumptions arising from the entry in the Record of Rights and from payment of an unvarying rent for twenty years and dismissed the application. The landlord appealed and the learned Judge reversed the decision of the first Court; he based his finding on two pieces of evidence; first, the absence of the taluk in a return submitted by the Zemindar in 1242 B. S. and, second, the name of the taluk, the name being that of the father of the appellants.

So far as the Zemindar's return is concerned, the position is rather obscure. Returns were prescribed by section 48 of Regulation VIII of 1793 and also by section 15 of Regulation VII of 1799, and it is possible that the document produced in this case was prepared in accordance with one or other of those sections, though why it should have been prepared in 1242 B. S. is not explained. Assuming, however, that the return was made under one or other of those sections, other questions arise. The first is whether the return can be received in evidence at all; the second is whether the nature of the requirements warrants any inference based on the absence of the Sikmi in the return; and the third is whether, in any event, the defendant can be bound by such an inference.

In the absence of further information about this particular return, I feel unwilling to come to any decision as to whether it could properly be received in evidence and it is not necessary that I should do so. It is the same with the second objection. Regarding the third objection, however, I feel no doubt. Sanctity may attach to an old document but the return before us was prepared by the landlord alone without any opportunity being given to the tenants of admitting its correctness. It is possible, of course, that the defendant's taluk was not in existence then, so that the return could not contain an admission of accuracy by their predecessor, but that explanation cannot be accepted until it is shown that the return contains an exhaustive catalogue of the subordinate interests in the estate, and that the accuracy of the catalogue is admitted by the owners of those interests. It is not suggested that in this case the return can pass such a test. I think, therefore, that the absence of the taluk in the return certainly cannot bind the defendant, and that, if it is evidence at all, it is of very slight weight.

The other piece of evidence on which the learned Judge relies is also slight. He says that the taluk bears the name of Kasi Nath Chakraburty and he assumes that that must be the name of the first holder. That is quite possible. On the other hand, the defendant's case is that their father bought from a Dhobi, and it is quite possible that he at once proceeded to get the tenure known by a more pleasing name.

The learned Judge also explains away three comments made by the first Court. Two of them are of little importance, but the first is cogent. A Kobala of 1239 B. S. mentioned a taluk which is still existing under the same name; that taluk, however, was not mentioned in the return of 1242 B. S. and the Settlement Officer used this omission to show that the defendant's taluk might also have been omitted. The learned Judge misses the point of the argument when he disposes of it by saying that the land described in the kobala is not proved to lie within the taluk.

My conclusion is that the learned Judge is in error ; it is not a mere matter of appreciating evidence ; he has treated as binding on defendants what cannot be more than a slender piece of evidence. It is not necessary that there should be a remand, for all the evidence is before us, and it is clear that if the return of 1242 B. S. does not bind the defendant, the evidence adduced by the plaintiff is not nearly enough to rebut the presumption arising from the entry in the Record of Rights.

In my opinion, therefore, this appeal should be allowed, and the decision of the first Court restored with costs in this Court and the lower Appellate Court the hearing fee in this Court being assessed at two gold mohurs.

Mukerji, J.—This appeal arises out of a proceeding under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act wherein the plaintiff sought to enhance the rent of the defendants' taluk which had been recorded as not liable to enhancement in the finally published Record of Rights.

The rent of the taluk had admittedly been paid at a uniform rate for upwards of 20 years immediately before the institution of the proceeding the defendants relied upon a presumption that arose in their favor under section 50, clause (2) of the Act. The Assistant Settlement Officer held that that presumption had not been rebutted and dismissed the plaintiff's case. The Special Judge, on appeal, being of a contrary opinion remanded the case for settling a fair and equitable rent.

Against this decision the present appeal has been preferred by the defendants.

The learned Special Judge has observed in his judgment that the defendants are entitled to the presumption arising under section 50, clause (2), of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that the presumption afforded by the Khatians was also in their favor. He, however, thought that the said presumptions were rebutted by the document (Ext. 1) which had been filed on behalf of the plaintiffs and by the fact that the defendant Kashi Chandra Chakraburty who is said to have purchased the taluk from one Gobinda Dhupi and whose name the taluk bears did not offer himself for examination and the kobala by which the purchase was made was not produced.

The appellants urge that the document Ext. 1 is not admissible is evidence, that at any rate, its evidentiary value is very little as against him, that no adverse inference should have been drawn from the non-examination of Kashi Chandra Chakraburty who was a very old man at the time of the proceedings and who is now dead, and they have put in an application praying that the Kobala which they are now in a position to file may be taken as additional evidence in the case.

These contentions are opposed on behalf of the respondent on whose behalf reliance is placed on section 35 of the Evidence Act and the term of the Regulations under which the document (Ext. 1) in question was prepared.

Now, the document Exhibit 1 is a certified copy of a list which describes itself as follows:—Paper as per details under section 48 of Regulation VIII of 1793 and section 15 clause (8) of Regulation VII of 1799 relating to 10-annas 13-gandas 1-kara 1-krant share of Pergana Amarabad, District Bhulua, dated the 15 Pous 1242 B. S. (29th December, 1835)." It, therefore, is a certified copy of an extract from the books of the Collectorate in which the papers filed under the provisions of the aforesaid Regulations used to be kept or copied. We have not been referred to any Statute under which the books in question are kept. It has not been shown to us that the public servant, whoever he was, who made the entry in the books purported to state a fact in the entry in the discharge of his official duty. It does not also appear that the person who made the entry did so in the performance of a duty specially enjoined by the law. The paper, therefore, in my opinion does not come under section 35 of the Evidence Act at all. The section is based upon the circumstance that in the case of official documents entries are made in the discharge of public duty by an officer who is an authorised and accredited agent appointed for the purpose. The law reposes such a confidence in public officers that it presumes they will discharge their several trusts with accuracy and fidelity. The circumstances relating to this entry do not stand these tests. It is likely that the books were kept for the information of the Collector but that does not make them binding as official records of the facts contained in them. The probative value of this document is to be assessed first of all by the application of the presumption contained in section 79 of the Evidence Act which would go to prove that it is a correct copy of the entry in the Register of the Collectorate, then by the application of the presumption contained in section 114, Illustration (e), of the Evidence Act it may be held that it is a correct copy of the list filed in the Collectorate. We may perhaps go further and assume that the list was as a matter of fact filed by the party by whom it purports to have been filed. Even then it remains a statement made by a party, and its legal effect or the weight to attach to it would have to be determined by the applications of such test as such tests as have to be applied to all other statements. If it is sought to be used as an admission against the party making it, its probative value is considerable. Where it is sought to be used in favour of the party who made it, it must fulfil the requirements of section 21, clause (1), read with section 32, of the Evidence Act, or it must be relevant otherwise than as an admission. Taking it at its best it is a list filed by a Zemin-dar, independent talukdar or an actual proprietor of land containing a record of engagements made by him with dependent talukdars who would pay revenue to Government, through him. The defendant's taluk does not find mention in this list. We may assume that the plaintiffs' predecessors had entered into engagements with all his dependent talukdars, for the defendants do not claim to have ever paid revenue direct to Government; but still the question remains as to whether the omission of the defendant's taluk from that list can be taken as evidence of any value to show that the taluk did not exist at the date when the list was filed. In filing the list the plaintiff's predecessors were making a statement to which the defendant's predecessors were not parties; it does not appear that the statement was made in the latter's presence; nor does it appear that the latter were at all interested in seeing that the taluk was entered in the list. Under the circumstances, I am of opinion that the probative value attaching to the list must, if any at all, be of the slightest character, assuming that it is admissible in evidence as corroborative evidence of the plaintiff's denial of the existence of the taluk on the date the list was filed. The plaintiff did not produce the kobala of his purchase or his collection papers

Then as to the inference arising from the non-examination of the defendant Kashi Chandra Chhkraburty, I do not think the learned Special Judge was justified in the view that he took that in his old age he felt delicacy to state falsehood and so his son deposed in the case, nor again does the non-production of the kobala carry the matter any further.

In my opinion the plaintiff has failed to rebut the presumption which arises in favour of the defendant, and it must be given effect to. I, therefore, agree in the order which my learned brother has passed and reverse the judgment of the Special Judge and restore that of the Assistant Settlement Officer with costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 555 OF 1922.

February 18, 1924.

Present :—Mr. Hallifax, A. J. C.MAROTI KUNBI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT*versus*

SITARAM—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Possessory title—Suit to recover possession from trespasser—Plaintiff's title defective, effect of—Lambardar, one of two, whether can maintain suit for ejectment—Plaintiff ceasing to be Lambardar during pendency of suit—Decree, whether can be passed.

A person who is ousted from possession of land by another who has no title whatever to the land, is entitled to eject the latter, however defective his own title may be.

If a party has two agents fully accredited, either can bring a suit on behalf of the other without the concurrence of the other, and if in the course of the suit his powers are taken away, there is nothing to prevent a decree being passed in favour of his principal.

On the same principle one of two Lambardars of a mahal can bring a suit for ejectment on behalf of the proprietary body of the village without the concurrence of the other Lambardar, and a decree can be passed in the suit even after the plaintiff Lambardar has been relieved of his office.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Wardha, in Civil Suit No. 57 of 1922, dated 30th August 1922.

Mr. D. W. Kathalay, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent described himself in the plaint as the "Eight-anna Lambardar" of Bhayapur and stated that in the capacity of Lambardar he had taken a surrender of his holding from an occupancy tenant and gone into possession of it on the 21st of May 1920 but had been illegally ousted from possession by the defendant on the 20th of October 1920. It was casually mentioned in the plaint that the defendant is also a co-sharer in the village. The suit was filed on the 27th of October 1921, the interval being occupied with proceedings in Criminal Courts. These allegations of fact have all been found to be true.

The defendant not only admitted, but urged as the whole basis of his defence, that the plaintiff as Lambardar was entitled to accept surrenders and create tenancies. His case was that in pursuance of an agreement between himself and the plaintiff and the tenant, the plaintiff had accepted the surrender from the tenant and had then created a tenancy in him. It is idle to attempt to plead now that the plaintiff as one of two Lambardars had no right to accept a surrender or grant a lease. Even if the plea could be taken, it would destroy the whole case put forward by the defendant-appellant. The plaintiff was in peaceful possession in October 1920 when the defendant ousted him. As he had no title whatever he must be ejected on the suit of the plaintiff, however defective the title of the latter may be.

The same considerations apply to the plea that the plaintiff as one of two Lambardars had no right to sue alone on behalf of the proprietary body of the village, and to the further plea that he had ceased before the end of the suit to have any right at all to represent the other proprietors. The latter plea is based on the fact, mentioned for the first time in this Court, that before the decree was passed the plaintiff had been relieved of his office, as it was considered unnecessary to have two Lambardars for one Mahal.

If a party has two agents both fully accredited, either can bring a suit on behalf of the principal without the concurrence of the other. And if in the course of a suit brought by an agent his powers are taken away, there is nothing to prevent a decree being passed in favour of his principal; the decree in this suit is in favour of the proprietary body of the village and it makes no difference whose name appears on it as their Agent. In any case, as has been said already, the plaintiff was himself entitled to be restored to the possession which had been illegally disturbed. For these reasons the appeal will be dismissed, and the appellant will be ordered to pay all the costs in all three Courts.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—In Mauza Anantpur Kukaria Touzi No. 216 Jagarnath Choudhury had a share of 9-annas 11-kouris 4-bouris 12-phouris, Birjan Chaudhury had 4-annas 11-dams 4-kouris 5 kauris 8-phouris, Baijnath Chaudhury had 1-anna 12-dams 4-kouris 10-bouris making a total of 15-annas 4-dams. The remaining 16 dams belonged to Dodraj Mahto, Keshwar Mahto, and Musammat Koola Kuer, the last named having 3-dams share. On the 2nd October, 1900, Birjan Chundhury executed an ijara in respect of 1-anna 10-dams of his share in consideration of Rs. 4,000 in favour of one Radha Kishun. The plaintiff has acquired this ijara interest. The share of 15-annas 4-dams was sold in execution of a decree for money to one Pachkouri Lal who defaulted in payment of the Government revenue whereupon the share was brought to sale and purchased by Jung Lal, Khairuddin and Hulas Behargi, who in turn sold privately to Mukhund Lal, Janki Das and Wilayeti Begam in 1916. In the meantime, in 1914, Dodraj Mahton and Keshwar Mahton had applied for partition of their 13-dams share and this share became touzi No. 14394 while the remaining 15 annas 7-dams share become touzi No. 12039. The partition took place on the 2nd March 1917 and possession was delivered on the 1st June of that year. On the 7th September, 1917, Janki Das and Wilayeti Begam sold their interest to one Leaqat Hussain, Mukund Lal and Leaqat Hussain defaulted in payment of the September kist of the Government revenue in 1917 and touzi No. 12039 was sold on the 7th January 1918 for arrears of Government revenue and purchased by one Mohi-ud-din whose co-sharers were Jung Bahadur and Hafiz. The effect of the sale of touzi No. 12039 was to annul the plaintiff's encumbrance. He, therefore, brought this suit on the 22nd March 1919 to set aside the sale as fraudulent and also for a decree for Rs. 4,000 against such of the defendants as might be found liable for the same. Amongst the descendants, defendants Nos. 9 to 15 are defendants, direct or collateral, of the original mortgagor. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit and the plaintiff appeals.

Three points were taken by the learned Counsel for the appellant. In the first place, it was contended that the revenue sale was brought about by fraud; in the second place, that in touzi No. 216 separate accounts had been opened (1) for 9-annas and odd share of Jagarnath Chaudhury, (2) for the six-annas and odd share of Birjan and Baijnath Chaudhury and (3) an Ijmali account for the remaining share; that the partition did not affect these separate accounts and in fact at the time of the revenue sale in 1918 separate accounts were in existence. Consequently, under section 13 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act of 1859 only the separate account in default should have been sold and the encumbrance has consequently not been cancelled. And in the third place, that in any case there should be a decree against defendants Nos. 9 to 15 for Rs. 4,000.

The case of fraud was not argued very seriously. The allegation is that Mohi-ud-din was farsidur of Mukund and Leaqat and that these persons being aware of the encumbered nature of the property intentionally defaulted in order that the encumbrances might be got rid of by the sale for arrears of Government Revenue. The only substantial basis for this contention is a connection between Mohi-ud-din and Leaqat through Latif, the husband of Wilayeti Begam; but this in itself is obviously not sufficient.

Reference was also made to the evidence of some witnesses and in particular to the following. In the first place, the evidence of Ram Babu, plaintiff's witness No. 2, was referred to. This witness stated that he attended the sale but did not bid as Moulvi Latif told him that there was an encumbrance on the estate and so he should not purchase it. He also says that Janki Das, Mukunda and Latif paid the money. In his cross-examination he admits that he knew that "when an entire village is sold the encumbrance does not form a burden on it and that Anantpur Kukaria was sold as an entire Mahal and not a share in it" and consequently his evidence is self-contradictory and inconclusive. As to the payment being made by Janki and Mukunda, his cross-examination on this point shows that his evidence was without a basis of real knowledge. In the second place, reliance was placed on the evidence of Bansi Lal, plaintiff's witness No. 3, a Municipal Commissioner and Honorary Magistrate. The evidence of this witness was directed to show that Jung Bahadur was connected with Mukund. The learned Subordinate Judge has said that the story told by this witness is absurd and I do not think it can be described in any other way. The idea of carefully fixing a meeting between Jung Bahadur and Mangal Chand in order to consider terms of settlement, only to be told when the meeting took place that Jung Bahadur had no authority to settle, is not credible. Jung Bahadur in his evidence has given a credible account of the purchase. He says that he and Hafiz and Mohi-ud-din all intended to bid but having ascertained each other's intentions, they came to terms and purchased jointly. I see no reason to doubt this. The only comment that was made on the evidence of this witness is that he made a mistake about the name of Hafiz. It is possible for a Hindu to mistake a Muhammadan name and there seems to be no ground for suspicion in this. He denies expressly that he was a farsidar for the previous owners.

In my opinion, therefore, no case of fraud in connection with the revenue sale has been established.

The main argument is the argument relating to separate accounts. The argument is ingenious and although Mr. Hasan Imam, earnestly contended that it is to be found in the plaint and in the grounds of appeal to the Commissioner, after a careful perusal of these documents, I have been unable to discover it. Paragraph 28 of the plaint says: "That separate accounts Nos. 1 and 2 had been opened for 15-annas and 4-dams share only, and, as a matter of fact, the share which had been sold for the arrears of land revenue was 15-annas and 4-dams only." This is the principal reference in the plaint to the separate accounts and the point there taken is entirely different. In the grounds of appeal to the Commissioner it is clearly contemplated, although it is not expressly stated, in the first ground, that the separate accounts had been closed. The point is an entirely new point, and the result is that there is very little evidence to go upon.

With regard to the statement of the law that a partition does not destroy the separate accounts, there is nothing in the Statute to support it and no authority was cited for the proposition. The Statute law which was referred to was sections 15 and 16 of the Estate Partition Act. Section 15 has no application because the arrears in the present case accrued after the partition. Section 16 has no application either, for the same reason, and also because the present sale is not a sale of a share but the sale of an entire estate, section 74-A of the Land Registration Act contemplates the closing of a separate account by the Collector when the state of things no longer represents existing facts. The argument is that, even after the partition, the land revenue for which each of these proprietors was liable remained the same. That may be so, but the shares were in fact different. Thus, whereas before the partition Musammat Keola had 3-dams in the whole estate, after partition she had a larger interest in a smaller property. Sections 94 and 95 of the Estates Partition Act would seem to imply that the separate accounts can have no further existence after a partition, because section 94 provides for the separate liability of the separate estate for the amount of land revenue specified in the notice to be issued under that section and requires the proprietor to enter into a separate engagement for the payment of such land revenue; and section 95 enacts that from the date of the notice each separate estate shall be separately liable for the amount of land revenue assessed upon it under the Act. If any further protection is required by way of separate account, it would seem that a separate account must be freshly opened. And, as far as the facts can be discovered, that is what happened in the present case.

BANARSI PRASAD v. MOHI-UD-DIN AHMED

All that Mr. Hasan Imam had to rely upon was Ext. 15, Register D, in respect of Mauza Rukhai. Now it is admitted that in Touzi No. 216 separate account No 1 was the account of Jaganath Chaudhry, separate account No 2 was the account of Birajan and Baijnath while the remainder was an Ijmali account. That remainder included the share of Keola Kuer. After the partition we find a different state of affairs. Exhibit 15 shows that separate account No 1 was the account of Keola Kuer whereas the Ijmali account was the account of the remaining proprietors of the 16-annas. Moreover, it appears that this separate account No. 1 of Keola Kuer was opened in case No. 254 of 1917-18, evidently a fresh proceeding altogether. It is true that this document Ext. 15 does not show when that separate account was opened. But there is no reason to suppose that it was opened before the sale for the arrears of the September kist. So far as Ext. 15 goes, the account might have been opened between the date of the default and the date of the sale and the ordinary presumption would favour this view, because, if there has been a separate account in existence, presumably the Collector would have acted according to the provisions of section 13 of the Sale Law. I find, therefore, no illegality in the sale of the entire estate for the arrears of the September kist of 1917.

The only other point which remains to be considered is the claim against defendants 9 to 15. This claim is based upon the terms of the ijara. That instrument is a mortgage. There is a loan, and a security for the loan contained in the following terms: "If I fail to make payment of the entire Zerpeshgi to the Ijradar by the end of Jeth of 1314 Faslī, then until repayment of the entire Zerpeshgi this Ijara transaction shall continue to hold good with all the terms laid down above." The mortgage covenants as follows: "If the whole or portion of the lease-hold property be sold at auction by the Civil Court or the Collectorate on account of arrears of land revenue, road and public works cesses or of any other Government demand arising out of default on my part on the part of any of my co-sharers, or for any other reason, and if the Ijradar be thrown out of possession of the lease-hold property due to any act on the part of me, the executant, then the Ijradar shall be at full liberty to realize the full amount of Zerpeshgi together with interest at 1 per cent. per mensem out of the surplus sale proceeds of the lease-hold property or from the other Nami and Benami properties, or from the person of me, the executant to which I or my heirs and representatives shall not take any objection whatsoever." The learned Counsel for the appellant claims that under this covenant he is entitled to a decree for the principal sum of Rs. 4,000 with interest against the representatives of the mortgagor Birjan Chaudhury. Defendant No. 9 is the son and defendants Nos. 13 to 15 are the grand-sons of Birjan Chaudhury. Defendants Nos. 10 to 12 are the grand-sons of Baijnath Chaudhury. The plaint does not allege that Baijnath and Birjan were joint but, on the contrary, specifies their shares in the property and, therefore, they were presumably separate. The liability would, therefore be confined to the sons and grand-sons of Birjan. Various objections to this liability were urged by the learned Vakil for these respondents. First, it was suggested that the cause of action arose in 1907 when the loan became repayable and that the suit was barred by time. But by the terms of the Ijara the money became repayable in Jeth 1314 and every subsequent Jeth, and the cause of action under a usufructuary mortgage would arise only on dispossession. Secondly, it was said that after the interest of Birjan Chaudhury had been sold by the Civil Court on a date not specified in the plaint the covenants of the Ijara became impossible of performance and, therefore, these respondents are protected by section 56 of the Contract Act. Section 56, however, has no application to such circumstances as these where the impossibility, if any, is due to the default of the contracting party himself. Thirdly, it was said that under section 73 of the Transfer of Property Act, the plaintiff had a charge upon the surplus sale proceeds after the sale for arrears of Government revenue. This is true and he might have followed the surplus sale proceeds of the property. But he was not bound to do so and the existence of this statutory charge is no bar to his seeking a decree against the successors of Bir Jan Chaudhury. The decree, however, must be limited to the assets of Birjan Chaudhury in the hands of these defendants. Finally, it was said that there must be an account of the rent of Rs. 75 a year reserved in the Ijara and that unless it is proved by the plaintiff that this rent was regularly paid, he is not entitled to the full sum of Rs. 4,000. But this question does not arise on the pleading. Paragraph 10 of the written statement of the defendants 9 and 10 says: "The plaintiff has no right to obtain a decree for the Ijara money, inasmuch as he has failed to make any allegation about the payment of the rent reserved, and to produce any account for the period of Ijara."

There is no allegation that the rent was not paid. This question was not put in issue and no evidence was given about it and the point is not open to the respondents.

There must, therefore, be a decree against respondents Nos. 9 and 13 to 15 for a sum of Rs. 4,000 with interest at 1 per cent. per mensem from the 28th March 1918 until the date of the decree; the amount of the decree to carry future interest at 6 per cent. per annum and to be reliable only from the assets of Birjan Chaudhury, the mortgagor, which have come to the hands of these defendants. To this extent the appeal is decreed with costs against defendants Nos. 9 and 13 to 15 and is dismissed against the other defendants, which costs to defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. The costs will be in proportion to success.

JUDGMENT.

Walmsley, J.—This appeal is directed against an order setting aside a sale under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The circumstances are as follows: The landlord obtained a decree for arrears of rent in respect of a patni against five brothers and the widow of a sixth. The decree was for a sum of rather more than Rs. 12,000 with costs in addition. On June 22nd, 1921 the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree by the sale of the patni tenure and the Court ordered notices to be issued under O. XXI, r. 66, and fixed the case for July 12th. On that date the decree-holder filed an affidavit to the effect that these notices had been duly served. At the same time, he asked that by way of precaution registered post-cards should be sent to the judgment-debtors, as none of them had entered appearance. The Court ordered this step to be taken and the case was adjourned for a week. On July 19th decree-holder filed an affidavit to the effect that the value of the patni tenure was Rs. 4,000. As the judgment-debtors did not appear and there was no other evidence before the Court in regard to the value of the property, it was ordered that the approximate value of the property should be entered in the sale proclamation as Rs. 4,000 writ of attachment and sale proclamation were then issued, and an advertisement of the sale sent to the Calcutta Gazette for publication. September 15th was fixed as the date of sale. On that day one of the judgment-debtors (No. 2 not the contesting respondent) appeared and asked for an adjournment. The sale was put off to September 19th. On that date five of the judgment-debtors asked for an adjournment and the sale was again postponed but for one day only. On September 20th the sale took place and the property was sold for Rs. 5,200 to the appellant Debi Prasad Bhakat.

On November 3rd, 1921 the fourth judgment-debtor, Nagendra Kumar Naga applied under O. XXI, r. 90, to have the sale set aside. In his petition he alleged that the writ of attachment and the sale proclamation were not duly served, that the value of the property was at least Rs. 18,000, that the sale was the result of collusion between his brothers and the decree-holder, and the purchase was made for the benefit of his brothers, and that the inadequate value mentioned in the proclamation constituted a material irregularity.

The auction-purchaser opposed the application, but without success. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the value stated in the proclamation was less than half the real value, that this under-statement constituted a material irregularity, that the judgment-debtor had suffered material loss, that service of the notices under r. 66 had not been proved, and that the evidence as to the contents of the post-card was defective. On these findings he set aside the sale. In consequence, the auction-purchaser has preferred this appeal. The decree-holder who is entered as a respondent supports him. The petitioner Nagendra opposes the appeal.

With regard to the notices under rule 66 the peon reported that he could not effect personal service; he says that he learnt from a villager that the female debtor was a parda-nashin lady and that three male debtors were inside the house and that as the male debtors did not come out and no one appeared on behalf of the lady he affixed the notices on the main entrance of the petitioner's house and of the house occupied by the three others.

I am disposed to think that this service was sufficient. It is not necessary to discuss the point, however, because there is the post-card notice. The form of postal service by registered post-card with an acknowledgment slip to be signed by the addressee. In spite of Nagendra's denial I am satisfied that it is his signature on the acknowledgment slip; this view is the result of comparing the signature with the admitted signature on the vakalatnamah presented with the petition. The learned Judge appears also to think that the signature is Nagendra's, but he says that the evidence to show what message was written on the post card is defective. There is no doubt about the fact that the Court gave an order for the post-card notice to be issued, and the acknowledgment slip was returned to the Court. The decree-holder's agent was examined about the post cards: the record of his evidence is extremely meagre, but it seems impossible to think that it means anything less than that he wrote on the post-card that July 19th was fixed as the date for fixing details of the proclamation. There is further the fact that the petitioner did not produce any post-card to show that the one which he received contained a message of another kind. In my opinion, therefore, the learned Judge was wrong in holding that the service by post-card had not been properly proved. I hold that the petitioner did receive intimation by registered post-card that July 19th was fixed for settling details of the proclamation. That he received it in time for appearance to be possible is proved by the post-marks which show that the acknowledgment slip was back in Midnapur on July 18th. From evidence we know that petitioner's residence is only eight miles away from Midnapore. This finding alone would be enough to dispose of the appeal, but as all the evidence was placed before us I think I ought to deal with other arguments.

Regarding the petition for adjournment filed on September 19th it is curious that the order in the order sheet mentions that one of the debtors, the petitioner, did not join in it, for his name does appear in the petition. It is idle to speculate on why the order was recorded in such a form, for I think the petitioner should have the benefit of it.

DEBI PROSAD BHAKAT v. NAGENDRA KUMAR NAG

The value of the property was entered as Rs. 4,000. The learned Judge says that it should have been entered as at least as much as Rs. 10,000 and he relies upon the entry made in another execution case (No. 18 of 1918). The order ran as follows : " Let the properties sought to be sold be valued at Rs. 10,000 in the sale proclamation as stated by the judgment-debtor petitioner in his petition of objection, but the decree-holder will not be bound to bid the properties at Rs. 10,000." It is conceded that the property in that case was the patni tenure which forms the subject-matter of this appeal, but attention is drawn to the latter half of the order. I think the appellant's argument is correct : the Court did not in 1918 decide that the value of the tenure was Rs. 10,000 and it suggested that possibly the decree-holder would be allowed to buy it for less. I cannot, therefore, agree with the learned Judge that that order proves Rs. 4,000 to be inadequate.

There are other fragments of evidence on the record as to the value of the tenure. The petitioner's agent says that the patni includes 300 bighas of nij jote and he estimates the value of such lands at 50 to 60 rupees per bigha : he also says that the income from the rent paying lands is large enough to leave a profit of about 1,000 rupees after payment of the patni rent. The witness was not cross-examined about these statements but he is not a man on whom much reliance can be placed and it is obvious that if his statements as to the area of the nij jote lands and the gross profits from the jamai lands are correct, the property is worth at least double the value mentioned by the petitioner himself in 1918. On the other hand, it is an admitted fact that the selami paid at the creation of the patni was Rs. 4,000 and it is not unreasonable to find in that some indication of the value of the patni to a purchaser, while the fact that the landlord has had to sue for his rent more than once suggests that the margin of profit is not very large. There is also the fact that one Hem Chandra Santa, described by the petitioner's agent as a well-known physician of the town, (Midnapur), bid at the sale but would not go beyond the appellant's offer ; as the property is only eight miles from the town, this fact is against the petitioner's contention that the value of the property is as much as 10,000 rupees. This branch of the enquiry was conducted in rather a slovenly way, but I think the conclusion must be that the petitioner has failed to prove the true value of the patni to be much, if at all, in excess of the sum paid by appellant.

Granted, however, that the valuation of the tenure at 4,000 rupees was an under-statement, there is nothing to show that such under-statement was the cause of an inadequate price being offered. In some circumstances a connection of cause and effect may be presumed, but such circumstances have not been proved by the petitioner.

There remains for consideration the publication of the writ of attachment and the sale of proclamation. The learned Judge says in his judgment that he finds that "there was material irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale," but the remainder of his brief judgment shows that he came to no finding about the publication of the writ and the proclamation. On the one hand, evidence is given by witnesses whose names appear in the return, to the effect that they saw the publication of the processes : there are some slight discrepancies in their statements, but none of such a nature as to cast discredit on the witnesses : while, on the other hand, there is only negative testimony of an unconvincing character. I think, therefore, that the decree-holder's evidence should be accepted.

My conclusion is that the petitioner was duly apprised of the date fixed for the settling of details of the proclamation, and that by his failure to attend without explanation, he has debarred himself from urging successfully that the value entered was inadequate ; that the value is not proved to be inadequate, and that, even if it be assumed to be inadequate, such inadequacy is not proved to be a cause of the price bid being inadequate, and that the sale proclamation and writ of attachment were duly served.

I think, therefore, that the appeal should be allowed and the judgment of the lower Court setting aside the sale reversed, and orders passed directing that the sale be confirmed, with costs in all Courts to be paid by the judgment-debtor Nagendra, hearing-fee in this Court being assessed at five gold mohurs.

JUDGMENT.—One Ramdayal, the predecessor-in-interest of Nandkishore, the plaintiff, obtained by foreclosure of a mortgage a two-anna share in mouza Umaria belonging to one Uderaj. As the mortgage was without sanction to transfer cultivating rights in sir, Uderaj's sons became, on foreclosure, occupancy tenants of certain sir fields of which they were in possession. They surrendered the fields to the Lambardar Deochand who leased them out to the defendant Lal Singh. Nandkishore sues to eject Lal Singh on the ground that he was the landlord of the fields and the Lambardar had no right to accept the surrender or to grant the lease.

Lal Singh pleaded that the fields were not the exclusive property of Uderaj and that Ramdayal did not become exclusive proprietor of them. These pleadings were embodied in the 4th and 5th issues which were as follows :—

"4. Did the sons of Uderaj become the occupancy tenants of the plaintiff alone or of the entire proprietary body?"

"5. Had the Lambardar Deo Singh any right to take the surrender of the lands from the sons of Uderaj and lease the fields to defendants, or is defendant a trespasser on the lands?"

The trial Court found that Uderaj had a separate power of disposal over the fields and, relying upon Dhondha v. Vishwan (1), and Second Appeal No. 461 of 1919, held that the Lambardar had no right to take a surrender and that the defendant was a trespasser. The lower Appellate Court has relied upon clause 2 (a) of section 188 of the Land Revenue Act, 1917, and held that the Lambardar was competent to create a new tenancy over the field when the old tenants surrendered them. It has distinguished the two cases mainly on the ground that the sir in those cases was definitely distributed and was held in severalty by the co-sharers, whereas in the present case there was no evidence as to whether it was held in severalty by Uderaj and the other co-sharers when the mortgage was executed. It has dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

It was contended on behalf of the defendant that, assuming that the plaintiff was the landlord, the surrender to Deochand amounted to a transfer of the holding and Deochand being a relative of Uderaj's sons who would inherit the holding under section 11, proviso 2, of the Tenancy Act the transfer was valid and could not be impeached by the plaintiff. But as there is no evidence of the alleged relationship between Deochand and Uderaj's sons the contention must fail.

It seems to me that the question whether the sir was held in severalty or not is immaterial for section 49 of the Tenancy Act impliedly treats it as held in severalty. It is not disputed that, on foreclosure by Ramdayal, Uderaj's sons became his tenants and that Ramdayal was their landlord. Why should the land on surrender not have become the plaintiff's khudkasht instead of the proprietary body's and why should the plaintiff's interest be affected by the tenant choosing to surrender to the Lambardar?

DWARKADAS v. JUDUB CHANDRA GANGULI

It is not suggested that if Uderaj's sons had surrendered to the plaintiff that the Lambardar could have legally objected to the surrender. I do not think that section 182 (a) was meant to apply in a case like this so as to affect the rights of persons who already are landlords under the Tenancy Act.

In my opinion the decree of the first Court was correct. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the first Court restored. The plaintiff will get his costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 78—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 262—Rateable distribution, object of—Decree against partner in personal capacity—Decree against partnership—Order directing rateable distribution—Appeal, whether lies—Partner agreeing to share of other partner being sold, effect of.

J and A were two partners in a certain business. D obtained a decree for money against A in his personal capacity which was put into execution and certain moveable properties belonging to the partnership were attached upon which J preferred a claim and his half share was released on his agreeing to the other half being sold as the property of A. In the mean time, one S obtained a decree against J and A in respect of monies due from the partnership and attached and sold all the moveables belonging to the partnership including the half share already attached in execution of D's decree who then applied for rateable distribution. J objected to the rateable distribution and the executing Court overruling the objections ordered rateable distribution but the order was reversed by the District Judge on appeal;

Held Per Walmsley, J.—That no appeal lay to the District Judge as the addition of D, who was a stranger to the suit, to the proceedings had destroyed the sanctity of the element of identity which was a necessary ingredient of a proceeding under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and that that section was, therefore, inapplicable. [p. 732, col. 2.]

Per Mukerji, J.—(1) that the order of the executing Court was passed in a matter relating to the satisfaction of the decree between parties to the suit and was one falling within the purview of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and was, therefore, appealable; [p. 734, col. 2.]

(2) that the conduct of J in agreeing that the half share of moveables may be sold as A's property amounted to a declaration that the partnership had ceased and had the effect of divesting the said half share of moveables of its character as partnership property and that the provisions of section 262 of the Contract Act were, therefore, no longer applicable to such property; [p. 735, col. 1.]

(3) that, consequently, the property was liable to rateable distribution.

An order under section 78 of the Civil Procedure Code is not appealable unless it also comes under section 47 of the Code and satisfies all the requirements thereof. [p. 734, col. 1.]

Case law discussed.

One object of section 78 of the Civil Procedure Code is to prevent unnecessary multiplicity of execution proceedings, to obviate in a case where there are many decree-holders, each competent to execute his decree by attachment and sale of a particular property the necessity of each and every one attaching and separately getting the property sold. The other object of the section is to secure an equitable administration of the property by placing all the decree-holders upon the same footing and making the property rateably divisible among them instead of allowing one to exclude all the others merely because he happened to be the first who had attached and sold the property. [p. 735, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Walsmsley, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment which my learned brother is about to deliver, and I agree in the substance of the order that he proposes to make. If there is a right of appeal to this Court, that is, if the learned Judge was right in thinking that an appeal lay to him. I agree that his decision on the merits was wrong and should be reversed.

Personally, however, I do not think that an appeal lay and, consequently, I hold that we should interfere under the provisions of section 115, Civil Procedure Code. My reasons for thinking that no appeal lay are as follows. The view that the matter comes within the scope of section 47 Civil Procedure Code rests on the footing that the question has arisen between the parties to the suit brought by Sitaram. It must be that suit because Jadav was not a party to the other.

The parties to that suit are Sitaram on the one side and Jadab and Anil on the other side, and the order for rateable distribution can be treated as an order falling within the scope of section 47, Civil Procedure Code, only if it raised a question between the parties to that suit relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree. We have to see whether there was such a question. On behalf of Jadab it is argued that there was such a question, on the ground that but for the order of rateable distribution Rs. 2,932-15-0, would have been credited towards the satisfaction of Sitaram's decree, instead of Rs. 2,631-15-0. It is urged that in respect of the sum of Rs. 301 there is a question between Jadab and Sitaram relating to the discharge of Sitaram's decree. I agree that there is a question relating to the discharge of the decree but I cannot regard it as one between Jadab and Sitaram. The question is not whether Sitaram should relax his hold on any portion of the sale-proceeds, but whether Dwarka should be allowed by order of the Court to lay hands on that portion. If, however, it be conceded that the question has arisen between Sitaram and Jadab, it is obvious that it cannot be decided in the absence of Dwarka and Ram Kumar. That means that an outsider to the suit must be brought into the proceedings, and this addition destroys the element of identity which appears to be a necessary ingredient in proceedings under section 47, Civil Procedure Code.

As, however, I think that the Judge's order should be reversed, I see no reason to differ from the order proposed by my learned brother, and the appeal will be disposed of in accordance with his judgment.

Mukerji, J.—Jadab Chandra Ganguly and Pasupati Hazra were two partners in a certain business. Dwarka Das Marwari and Ram Kumar Marwari instituted a suit in the Small Cause Court at Assansol against Pasupati Hazra and one Umananda Hazra, and Pasupati Hazra having died during the pendency thereof, obtained a decree against Umananda Hazra and the heir of Pasupati Hazra, a minor named Anil Kumar Hazra. The decree was for money due from Pasupati Hazra and Umananda Hazra, in their personal capacities and had nothing to do with the partnership. The decree was put into execution against Anil Kumar Hazra in Execution Case No. 327 of 1920 of the Small Cause Court and certain moveable properties belonging to the partnership were attached, upon which Jadab Chandra Ganguly preferred a claim alleging that he had a half share therein and prayed for a release of the said half share from attachment in Claim Case No. 23 of 1920. To this Anil Kumar Hazra agreed on the understanding that his half share should be allowed to be sold in execution of the decree in the aforesaid Execution Case No. 327 of 1920. Orders to the said effect were passed on the 24th December 1920 and the sale was fixed for the 7th January 1921.

On the 7th January 1921, Jadab Chandra Ganguly preferred another claim in Claim Case No. 1 of 1921, objecting to the sale on the ground that the half share of Anil Kumar Hazra in the moveables, that is to say, the share that had been attached and was about to be sold was not saleable. The sale was accordingly put off, Jadav was called upon to submit accounts of the partnership business which he never did, and eventually the claim was dismissed.

DWARKADAS v. JUDUB CHANDRA GAGULLI

In the meantime, on the 3rd January 1921, one Sitaram Marwari obtained a decree against Jadab Chandra Ganguly and Anil Kumar Hazra in respect of monies due from the partnership, and on the 14th January 1921, in Execution Case No. 18 of 1921 of the Subordinate Judge's Court at Assansol, attached all the moveables, a half share of which had already been attached in Execution Case No. 327 of 1920 and the said moveables were sold on the 9th March 1921 for Rs. 3,025.

By petitions filed on the 1st March 1921 and 3rd March 1921 Dwarka Das Marwari and Ram Kumar Marwari tried to put off the sale impugning the bona fides of the decree obtained by Sitaram Marwari and also the conduct of Jadab Chandra Ganguly in at first consenting to the half share of Anil Kumar Hazra being attached and then getting the sale of that share put off by filing a further claim as aforesaid, and they prayed that that claim should be disposed of and the sale in execution of their decree might take place first. Eventually, on the 5th March 1921, they prayed for rateable distribution of the sale-proceeds of the share of Anil Kumar Hazra as between themselves and Sitaram Marwari. On the 19th March 1921, Sitaram Marwari put in a petition objecting to the rateable distribution on the ground that his decree was against the partnership and, therefore, the sale-proceeds must go to satisfy his decree but thereafter, on the 9th April 1921, he put in a further petition agreeing to the rateable distribution.

On the 30th July 1921, and again on the 7th December 1921, Jadab Chandra Ganguly put in petitions objecting to the rateable distribution mainly on the grounds that the sale-proceeds should go to satisfy the decree of Sitaram as that decree was for money due from the partnership, that the judgment-debtors in the two execution cases were different and, therefore, the prayer for rateable distribution was not maintainable.

The learned Subordinate Judge, by orders passed on the 22nd December 1921, held that the objection of Jadab Chandra Ganguly should be overruled on the ground of waiver and estoppel, and he ordered rateable distribution in the following way; that is to say, Sitaram Marwari was to get the costs Rs. 51-9 as. and poundage-fee Rs. 40-8 as. and out of the balance, that is to say, Rs. 3,025 less Rs. 92, 1-anna, a half viz., Rs. 1,496-7-6 representing the share of Jadab Chandra Ganguly, and that the other half share, viz., Rs. 1,466-7-6 representing the share of Anil Kumar Hazra was to be divided rateably between the two sets of decree-holders; that is to say, Sitaram Marwari to get Rs. 1,165-7-6 and Dwarka Das Marwari and Ram Kumar Marwari were to get Rs. 301.

Against this order Jadab Chandra Ganguly appealed to the District Judge, of Burdwan and the learned District Judge overruling an objection as to the competency of the appeal before him, allowed the appeal and ordered the whole of the sale-proceeds to be paid to Sitaram Marwari.

The present appeal and application in revision have been preferred by Dwarkadas Marwari and Ram Kumar Marwari against the aforesaid order of the learned District Judge.

Of the contentions put forward on behalf of the appellant, it is necessary to notice only two, viz., that no appeal lay against the order of the learned Subordinate Judge, and that Jadab Chandra having expressly consented to the attachment of the half share of Anil Kumar Hazra must be taken to have waived all objections to the rateable distribution of the sale-proceeds on the footing that they represented the proceeds of partnership property and must be availed of first to satisfy the debts of the partnership.

On behalf of the respondent it has been urged that the question decided by the learned Subordinate Judge was one between the parties to the suit and related to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree passed therein and, therefore, came within the purview of section 47, Civil Procedure Code and was appealable, that the whole of the sale-proceeds must, in view of section 262 of the Contract Act, go towards the payment of the partnership-debts and, further, that the application for rateable distribution was not maintainable, inasmuch as the judgment-debtors of the two decrees are not precisely the same. The respondent also supports the view which found favour with the learned District Judge that he was not precluded from objecting to the rate-able distribution by reason of his petition of consent releasing the half share of Anil Kumar Hazra in the moveables.

The first point for consideration, therefore, is whether an appeal lay to the District Judge against the order of the Subordinate Judge. Now, an order under section 73, Civil Procedure Code, is not appealable unless it also comes under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and satisfies all the requirements thereof. (Balmer Lawrie & Co. v. Jadu Nath Banerjee (1). In order to be appealable, the order must, therefore, decide a question arising between the decree-holder Sitaram Marwari on the one hand and the judgment-debtors Jadab Chandra Ganguly and Anil Kumar Hazra on the other. In determining whether the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge fulfilled these tests, the cases cited at the bar do not afford us any real assistance. In Jagadish Chandra Saha v. Kripa Nath Saha (2) the petitioners had a decree against certain judgment-debtors, the opposite party had a decree against certain judgment-debtors who were not exactly identical with the former set of judgment-debtors, the opposite party applied for rateable distribution, the application was refused by the Court of first instance; the opposite party appealed and an order for rateable distribution was passed by the Appellate Court. The petitioners then appealed to this Court and it was held that the order of the Court of first instance refusing rateable distributions did not come under section 244 of the old Code of Civil Procedure and, therefore, no appeal lay from it. This presumably was on the ground that this was no determination of any question relating to the execution, satisfaction or discharge of the decree which was under execution as between the parties to the suit in which it had been passed and the order only purported to decide a contest between two rival decree-holders.

In Balmer Lawrie & Co. v. Jadu Nath Banerjee (1) the petitioners had obtained a decree against a firm, while the opposite party had obtained a decree against one of the partners of the firm. During the pendency of a proceeding for rateable distribution as between the opposite party and certain other execution-creditors of the said partner the petitioner had made an application for rateable distribution which was refused. That order was held as being one between two rival decree-holders which did not effect the interest of the judgment-debtor and so did not come under section 47, Civil Procedure Code so as to confer a right of appeal.

In cases where, as between the parties to the suit, a question relating to the execution, satisfaction or discharge of the decree passed therein has been decided by the order for rateable distribution, it has always been held that an appeal lies. (Venkata Perumal v. Venkata Reddi (3), Sorabji Coovarji v. Kala Raghu Nath (4).

In the case of Kashi Ram v. Mani Ram (5), the Court held that the order which was passed in that case and by which rateable distribution was refused did not decide a question which arose between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed or their representatives within the meaning of section 244 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. In the case before us the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge determined, as between Sitaram Marwari on the one hand and the judgment-debtors Jadab Chandra Ganguly and Anil Kumar Hazra on the other, a question was decided, on the application of Dwarkadas Marwari and Ram Kumar Marwari, as to what extent the decree under execution was to be satisfied and, therefore, in my judgment, the order came under the purview of section 47, Civil Procedure Code and the learned District Judge was, in my judgment, right in his view of the competency of the appeal before him.

Coming now to the merits, the whole basis of the order of the learned District Judge is that the decree being for recovery of monies due from the partnership no rateable distribution could be made and the whole of the sale-proceeds should be available for its satisfaction. In my judgment, the petition of the respondent preferring a claim to a half share and consenting to a release of his half share only and agreeing to the sale of the half share of Anil Kumar Hazra in execution of the decree for the personal debts of the latter's father amounted to a declaration that the partnership had ceased and had the effect of divesting the said half share of the moveable property of its character as partnership property, and to such property the provisions of section 262 of the Contract Act relating to partnership would no longer apply. The Subordinate Judge was, perhaps, not right in the view that the conduct of Jadav Chandra Ganguly amounted to waiver or estoppel and it may be that the principle that where a party has elected to adopt a certain course of action he will be confined to that course which he has deliberately adopted may not apply in the present case. It is clear, however, that neither Sitaram Marwari nor Jadab Chandra Ganguli, until he applied on the ground that the said half share was not saleable in execution of the decree of Dwarkadas Marwari and Ram Kumar Marwari treated this half share as still clothed with the incidents of partnership assets. In my opinion, the learned District Judge was wrong in the view that he took of the matter and the principle underlying the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is the correct one to apply to the case.

As for the maintainability of the application for rateable distribution the contention of the respondent is based upon the amendment of the law due to the insertion of the word "passed" in section 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act. X of 1882). As observed by Strachey, C.J., in Bithal Das v. Nanda Kishore (6). "The object of the section is two-fold. The first object is to prevent unnecessary multiplicity of execution proceeding, to obviate in a case where there are many decree-holders, each competent to execute his decree by attachment and sale of a particular property the necessity of each and every one separately attaching and separately getting the property sold; the other object is to secure an equitable administration of the property by placing all the decree-holders in the position as I have described upon the same footing and making the property rateably divisible among them instead of allowing one to exclude all the others merely because he happened to be the first who had attached and sold the property. These objects would not be furthered but rather defeated by putting upon the rule the interpretation which the respondent asks us to adopt. In Balmer Lawrie & Co. v. Jadunath Banerjee (1) this Court declined to express any opinion on the question as to whether the principle enunciated in the Full Bench decision in the case Ganesh Das v. Shiva Lakshman (7) was affected by the alteration of the law. In my opinion, if the Legislature intended to effect any such alteration, it would have expressed it in terms more clear and specific. This contention put forward on behalf of the respondent must fail.

I, therefore, agree with my learned brother in reversing the order of the learned District Judge and restoring that of the learned Subordinate Judge with costs in all Courts—the hearing fee in this Court being assessed at three gold mohurs.

The rule is discharged.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), ss 77, 140—Claim against Railway—Notice to Manager or Agent, necessity of—Notice to Subordinate officer—Burden of proof.

Section 77 of the Railways Act, read with section 140 of that Act, does not absolutely require that a person making a claim against a Railway should himself give notice to the Manager or Agent of the Railway, but if he chooses to run the risk of giving the notice to any person other than the Manager or Agent, it is necessary for him to show that the notice was delivered on his behalf to the proper person, that is the Manager or the Agent of the Railway, as the case might be, within six months.

Mr. L. P. Ferro, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—In this case it appears from the statements in the plaint that certain merchants consigned through the B. B. & C. I. Railway at Vadhnagar a consignment of 25 tins ghee to the plaintiffs in Karachi. The goods were booked under Risk Note Form "H" which charges a smaller rate and exempts the Railway from all risks except those due to thefts from a running train and wilful neglect of their employees. The consignment was made on or about the 15th March and only two tins on account of this consignment were delivered over to the plaintiff. The plaintiff, as a matter of fact, asserted that these two tins formed no part of the consignment, but, however that might be, 23 tins were totally lost. At Marwar Junction, the B. B. & C. I. Railway meets the Jodhpur-Bikaner Railway, and the latter (J. B. Railway) at Hyderabad meets the North-Western Railway which is a State Railway. The plaintiff having failed to recover these tins or their value from either defendant has brought this suit both against the N.-W. Railway, i.e., the Secretary of State, and also against the B. B. & C. I. Railway for damages for the loss of that consignment.

I am of opinion that this suit must fail on the ground that the statutory notice required under section 77 of the Railways Act has not been given. Section 77 requires that a person making any such claim should prefer his claim in writing to the Railway Company or cause it to be preferred to the Railway Administration within six months from the date of delivery of the animals or the goods for carriage by the Railway. Section 140 prescribes that any notice so required to be served on the Railway Administration may be served in the case of a Government Railway on the Manager and in the case of a Railway Company on the Agent and prescribes the manner in which the notice is to be delivered. Now, it is admitted that the only notice given in this case was the notice given to the District Superintendent, N.-W. Railway, on the 13th May 1921.

It has been held that the law does not absolutely require that the claimant should himself give notice to the Agent but if he chooses to run the risk of giving the notice to any person other than the Agent, it is necessary for him to show that notice was delivered on his behalf to the proper person, i.e., the Manager in the case of a State Railway and the Agent in the case of a Limited Liability Company, within six months. There is no evidence at all in the present case that the claim reached the agent of the B. B. & C. I. Railway and it is very improbable that it would reach him. It is more probable that the notice given to the District Superintendent, Karachi, reached the Manager of the State Railway, but it is not shown that it so reached him within six months, and, that being so, I think there is a statutory bar to the suit proceeding.

It would also appear that the suit would be barred by limitation because the consignment was handed over to the Railway on the 15th March 1921. The two tins arrived on the 3rd April 1921, but the suit was not brought till 15th June 1922, whereas Article 30 of the Limitation Act requires that the suit should be brought within a year from the date on which the loss occurred, i.e., somewhere between 15th March and 3rd April 1921. I, therefore, have no option but to dismiss the suit with costs. There will be two separate sets of costs.

RANGRAO v. PANDURANG

Revisional jurisdiction is a discretionary jurisdiction, and the discretion should not ordinarily be exercised in favour of a negligent party. Where, however, an erroneous view of the lower Court has contributed to the bringing about of a result which requires to be redressed, the High Court would be failing in its duties if it were to refuse to exercise its revisional powers of supervision and correction which it exercises even suo motu for undoing any injustice which may have been done by decisions of lower Courts to litigants in cases in which no appeal lies to the High Court.

The High Court can deal with a case under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code or section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, without there being any application by any of the parties, and in special cases can apply the principle underlying the provisions of r.33 of O. XLI of the Code, to applications in revision.

ORDER.—This revision is by the defendant No. 2 who was impeached as the person through whom the money sued for was to reach the defendant No. 1. The entry, Exh. P-1, in plaintiff's books which he signed on the occasion of the handing over of the money to him by plaintiff and the letter, Exh. P-2, written by defendant No. 1 to plaintiff as also the plaintiff's own statement before the Court clearly exonerate the defendant No. 2 absolutely from all liability as a debtor. The lower Court could not, therefore, pass any decree against him, against the wishes of plaintiff who is dominus litis. No decree which he does not want could be forced on plaintiff. He wanted a decree against defendant No. 1 and the only question which the lower Court had, therefore, to consider was whether he had succeeded in establishing his claim as against defendant No. 1. The lower Court has held that defendant No. 1 had not authorized defendant No. 2 to procure the loan for him. This finding is against the evidence on record. The letter, Exh. P-2, clearly accepts liability for the repayment of the loan obtained through defendant No. 2. This necessarily establishes an authority and the defendant No. 1's consequent liability for the loan and it was for him to show that the money had not reached him. There is absolutely no suggestion in Exh. P-3 that the amount of Rs. 400 did not reach defendant No. 1. All what it says is that the said amount may be debited to the man who carried it away and as regards the future dealings the defendant No. 1 says that the plaintiff may, if he likes, deal with each of the defendants in his own name, i.e., individually. It will be seen that he asked for a reply to Exh. P-3. There is nothing to show that any reply was sent by plaintiff, and if any was sent what the contents thereof were. I have, therefore, no materials before me for holding that the plaintiff accepted the variation as regards the defendant No. 1's primary liability created by the loan, as proposed in Exh. P-3. If defendant No. 1's proposal had been accepted then, certainly, the plaintiff could have been bound by it and he could not proceed against the defendant No. 1. The liability of defendant No. 1 being thus clear, the claim ought to have been decreed against him. But the Court has dismissed it, and the plaintiff did not move this Court by filing an independent revision against the decision.

He has, however, now applied to this Court that, in the event of the Court setting aside the decree against the defendant No. 2, the claim may be decreed against defendant No. 1, as it would work great hardship on him to be deprived of the amount of the loan advanced by him. The prayer is opposed on the ground that this Court ought not to interfere in revision in favour of the plaintiff, as he omitted to move it within time and in conformity with the practice of this Court as the practice of the Court is the rule of the Court. It is also contended that, although in respect of appeals this Court has got jurisdiction to alter the decree in favour of a non appealing party, there is no jurisdiction for applying those provisions to revisions. That revisional jurisdiction is a discretionary jurisdiction and the discretion should not be exercised in favour of a negligent party. This is no doubt a plausible argument and, under ordinary circumstances, must prevail. But where, as I find, an erroneous view of the lower Court has contributed in no less degree to the bringing about of the result which requires to be redressed this Court would be failing in its duties if it were to refuse to exercise its revisional powers of supervision and correction which it exercised even suo motu for undoing any injustice which may have been done by decisions of the lower Court to litigants in cases in which no appeal lies to the High Court. Wrong done to a party would remain undone. The matter having come under my attention in connection with the Civil Revision filed by defendant No. 2, I do not think I could not alter the decision in favour of the non-applicant plaintiff of my own motion. I have no hesitation in applying the principle that underlies the provisions of O. XXI r. 33, Civil Procedure Code, to the facts of this case. Just as under old section 622 corresponding to the new section 115, Civil Procedure Code, the High Court can and may deal with a case under that section without there being any application by any of the parties, as held in Gulam Mohammad v. Sarada Mohan Maitra, (1) followed with approval in Puran Mal v. Janki Pershad Singh (2). Similarly, under section 25 of the Small Cause Court's Act, I think the High Court can and may in special circumstances pass such orders as it thinks fit if it is satisfied that the judgment of the Small Cause Court is not according to law. All the same, I have, however, taken a formal petition from the plaintiff praying for the alteration of the decree in his favour, I, therefore, direct that the decree passed by the Small Cause Court will be varied by ordering that the claim be decreed as against defendant No. 1 and dismissed as against defendant No. 2. In the circumstances of the case, I think I should allow plaintiff all costs except the pleaders-fee in the lower Court as it was the duty of his pleader to have pointed out that Court what the proper form of of relief should have been. The plaintiff will, however, have no costs of this Court. He will have, of course, to pay the costs of the applicant defendant No. 2 in both the Courts. Defendant No. 1 must pay his own costs in both the Courts.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 35 OF 1923.

April 4, 1924.

Present :—Mr. Kendall, A. J. C.COLLECTOR SINGH AND OTHERS—
PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS*versus*MADARI LAL AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 46—Mortgage—Amount left with mortgagee to pay off creditors of mortgagor—Period within which payment must be made—Reasonable time—Failure to make payment, effect of—Mortgagee, whether entitled to possession—Pre-emption—Pre-emptor, substitution of, in place of vendee, date of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 6—Suit to recover payment made to avoid sale of property belonging to another.

Where a portion of the consideration of a mortgage is left with the mortgagee in order to pay off the mortgagor's debts, and no time is fixed for the payment of the debts, the payment must be made within a reasonable time. Where it was found that the object of the mortgagor in executing the mortgage was to consolidate his debts and to prevent interest running at a high rate and the major portion of the consideration for the mortgage was left with the mortgagee to pay off those debts ;

Held (1) that the mortgagee was bound to pay off the debts as soon as possible ;

(2) that the debts not having been paid off by the mortgagee within a reasonable time he was guilty of a breach of the mortgage contract and was not entitled to possession of the mortgaged property under the terms of the mortgage-deeds ;

(3) that his security was, however, good to the extent of the amount actually advanced by him.

The right of pre-emption is " a right to the benefit of a contract," or a right of substitution entitling the pre-emptor, by reason of a legal incident to which the sale itself was subject, to stand in the shoes of the vendee, in respect of all the rights and obligations arising from the sale under which he has derived his title.

Jagan Nath v. Shoo Ratan Singh, 7 Ind. Cas. 295 ; 13 O. C. 219, followed.

A right of pre-emption is not a mere right of repurchase, either from the vendor or from the vendee involving a new contract of sale, but it is simply a right of substitution. It is, in effect, as if in a sale deed the vendee's name were rubbed out and the pre-emptor's name inserted in its place.

Gobind Dayal v. Inayatullah, 7 A. 775 at p. 815; A. W. N. (1888) 228; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 611, relied on.

The substitution of a pre-emptor in place of the vendee takes effect from the date of the sale in favour of the vendee. Where a person who has no interest in a property pays off a mortgage-deed against the property in order to save the property from sale, his claim to recover the amount paid by him is governed by Article 61 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act.

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Hardoi, dated the 29th May 1923.

Mr. Baseshar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Niamatulla and Mohd. Ayub, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises from a suit in which the plaintiffs-appellants, who claim under a mortgage-deed dated 1906 sued for mortgagee possession over the property mortgaged by that deed and also for a sum of Rs. 2,431-7-9, with interest, by sale of an area of 48 standard bighas of land in the village of Pandarwa, or, as an alternative to this latter relief, for a declaration that the said amount creates a charge on the property mortgaged by the deed of 1906. As there are some complications in the suit, on which little, if any, light has been thrown by the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, it will be convenient to say at the outset that there are four deeds of transfer with which the suit is mainly concerned, and that these are in chronological order:—

(A) 22nd March, 1882. Mortgage with possession to Deep Singh of a share in 6 villages.

(B) 5th September, 1889. Mortgage in favour of Rudra Singh of a share in Danpur, Madhopur, and of 48 bighas in Pandarwa.

(C) 3rd November, 1906. Mortgage to the plaintiff of shares in 7 villages, namely, those included in (A) with the addition of Bahadurnagar.

(D) 18th June, 1913. Sale to Munnoo Singh of a share in 4 of the villages included in (C).

In all these deeds, the transferors were the contesting respondents or their predecessors-in-interest. The plaintiff-appellant comes into Court as the mortgagee of the deed called (C), dated 1906. The nominal consideration for this deed was Rs. 6,658-8-0 of which only Rs. 2,000 was paid in cash to the mortgagors, carrying interest at 8 per cent, and the balance was to be paid by means of dihandis to prior creditors of the mortgagors, including the transferees of the deeds (A) and (B). The defence is, that these dihandis were never paid, that the plaintiff-appellant broke his contract, and that the mortgage-deed cannot be made the basis of the suit. The defence in regard to the second relief claimed will appear later. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit, and the plaintiff has appealed on various grounds, on the basis of which he contests the findings of the lower Court under four heads, which may be summed up as follows:—

(1) That the dihandis were not paid.

It is admitted that these were not paid, with possibly one exception, but it is claimed that this was not the appellant's fault.

(2) That the deed of 1906 (C) was extinguished by the plaintiff's pre-emption-deed.

It is pointed out that the pre-emption-deed in the plaintiff's favour by which he pre-empted the sale-deed numbered (D), related to only 4 of the 7 villages included in (C) and it is claimed that the mortgage in suit is still alive in regard to the three villages.

(3) That the suit is barred by section 11, Civil Procedure Code. It is argued that this is not so.

(4) That the amount claimed in regard to the land in Pandarwa is barred by limitation.

It is claimed that Article 32 of the Limitation Act applied to the case and that the claim is not barred. It will be convenient to take these four heads seriatim.

I have already said that the mortgage-deed on which the plaintiff-appellant sued, was executed in consideration of the payment of Rs. 2,000 in cash, and of Rs. 4,658-8-0 which was left with the mortgagee for payment of these dihandis. The dihandis in number were five, and not one of them was paid. In some cases a tender was made, but was refused, for the reason that a sufficient sum had not been tendered. The details of the dihandis are given in the pleadings and in the judgment of the Subordinate Court, and I need not perhaps refer to them seriatim. It is, however, necessary to state what happened as the result of the dihandis not being paid. On 18th June 1913 the defendants had to sell their shares in four of the villages which had been mortgaged to the plaintiff in 1906. They executed the sale-deed in favour of Munnoo Singh, and in it they left with the vendee a sum of Rs. 3,000 as a dihandi to be paid to the present plaintiff, in order to clear the charge which he had in virtue of his mortgage-deed of 1906. Again, on account of the failure of the plaintiff to pay Rs. 772 to Thakur Rudra Singh, on account of the mortgage-deed referred to in the first paragraph as (B), the mortgaged property was put up for sale in execution of a mortgage-decree obtained by the mortgagee. This was in 1916 and the mortgage-debt had then swelled to Rs. 3,555-15-9. In the case of the sale to Munnoo Singh, the plaintiff pre-empted, and in the case of the mortgage-sale of 1916, the plaintiff intervened and paid the decree-money. He, therefore, became the owner of the properties, which had been transferred in the deeds referred to as (B) and (D).

It has been argued that the plaintiff's failure to pay the dihandis was not his own fault. There was no clause in the mortgage-deed of 1906 enjoining that the dihandis should be paid on any particular date, but it was stipulated that interest should only run on these amounts from the date of payment, and not from the date of the mortgage-deed. These arguments, in my opinion, are of no avail. Under section 46 of the Indian Contract Act, the engagement had to be performed within a reasonable time. The circumstances of the case make it clear that a reasonable time was as soon as possible. The object of the execution of the mortgage-deed was to consolidate the debts of the mortgagors, and to prevent interest running at a high rate. The result of the failure to pay the dihandis was that interest continued to run at the old high rates, to the very serious disadvantage of the mortgagors. The amount to which these old debts swelled may be judged from the instances of Rudra Singh's and Kunwar Chandra Singh's deeds. Although the dihandis were made payable in 1906, the earliest tender for payment was made in 1910.

To take another instance, the first dihandi was of Rs. 1,200 due on the mortgage-deed referred to in paragraph 1 as (A). Under that deed, if the mortgage-money were not paid by 13-9 F. (1912), there was to be conditional sale. No tender for payment was made until 1918. In these circumstances, I agree with the lower Court that the plaintiff-mortgagee broke his contract, and is, therefore, not entitled to possession of the property mortgaged to him under that deed, though, I must admit that his mortgage-debt is still good security for the Rs. 2,000 cash that was paid when the deed was executed, unless it can be shown that payment has been made. The lower Court has decided that when the plaintiff pre-empted the sale-deed in favour of Munnoo Singh in 1913, the result was that his title as mortgagee in the deed of 1906, merged in his title as owner, but this is clearly not correct, because there were three villages mortgaged in 1906, which were not included in the pre-emption proceedings, and if any part of the mortgage is still alive, it might be held to be binding on those three villages.

It is now necessary to consider the effect of the plaintiff's action in pre-empting the sale to Munnoo Singh. I have said before, that in the sale-deed a dihandi of Rs. 3,000 was left with the vendee, for payment to the plaintiff, on account of the mortgage of 1906. It is admitted that this three thousand rupees would have been sufficient to settle the plaintiff's mortgage-debt of Rs. 2,000 with interest up to the date of the sale. The result, however, of the plaintiff pre-empting the sale was, that the dihandi was not paid over to him in cash, but allowance for it was made in the price paid by him to the vendee. It is urged on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that he did not receive this consideration until 1916, when the orders of the Appellate Court were issued in regard to the pre-emption decree. If this is the case, then the plaintiff's mortgage-debt was not paid by this dihandi and his mortgage is still alive to the extent of whatever balance may be found to be due. It is argued, on the other hand, that the effect of the pre-emption was that he stepped into the shoes of the vendee from the date of the sale. The question of the date, on which the pre-emption must be held to have taken effect, is, therefore, of considerable importance in this case, not only in connection with the effect of this dihandi of Rs. 3,000 on the mortgage-deed of 1906, but also, as will appear later, on the plaintiff's action, in regard to Rudra Singh's mortgage decree.

Neither side has been able to cite any authority to show from what date a pre-emption sale must be held to take effect. The procedure in pre-emption is laid down in Chapter II of the Oudh Laws Act, 1876. Under section 10 of that Act, where any person proposes to sell any property, he is bound to give notice to the persons concerned (i. e., the pre-emptor) and such persons under section 11 have a right to pre-empt within three months. The learned Counsel for the appellant had argued that the pre-emption does not take effect until the final Appellate Court has passed its order. I can find no authority for this. As a matter of ordinary common sense, it might be held that the pre-emption takes effect from the date on which the pre-emptor pays the purchase-money to the vendee. In Jagan Nath v. Sheo Ratan Singh (1), however, it was held that the right of pre-emption is "a right to the benefit of a contract" or a right of substitution entitling the pre-emptor, by reason of a legal incident to which the sale itself was subject, to stand in the shoes of the vendee, in respect of all the rights and obligations arising from the sale under which he has derived his title." The learned Judges who gave that decision have referred to an elaborate and authoritative ruling by Mr. Justice Mahmood, reported in Gobind Dayal v. Inayatullah (2). In this it has been clearly held that a right of pre-emption is not a mere right of purchase, either from the vendor or from the vendee, involving a new contract of sale, but it is simply a right of substitution. "It is, in effect, as if in a sale deed the vendee's name were rubbed out and the pre-emptor's name inserted in its place. Otherwise, because every sale of a pre-emptional tenement renders the right of pre-emption enforceable in respect thereof, every successful pre-emptor obtaining possession of the property, by the so-called 're-purchase' from the vendee would be subject to another pre-emptive claim, dating, not from the original sale, but from such "re-purchase" a state of things most easily conceivable where the new claimant is a pre-emptor of a higher degree than the pre-emptor who has already succeeded. The result would be that "pre-emptive litigation could never end." (809). Following this decision, I must hold that the plaintiff stepped into the vendee's shoes, and that this substitution must be held to have had effect from the date of the sale in favour of the vendee. On that date, therefore he received consideration in the form of the dihandi of Rs. 3,000 and on that date, it is admitted, that this sum was sufficient to discharge his mortgage-debt. The result of his pre-empting the sale in favour of Munnoo Singh, therefore, was to discharge the mortgage of 1906 completely.

It follows from this, that when the plaintiff paid Rs. 3 555-15-9 to liquidate the mortgage decree in favour of Rudra Singh, on the basis of the letters' mortgage of 1899 (B), he had no live interest in the property which was being sold. The respondent has in fact argued that his intervention was an officious act. The appellant contends that he intervened as a mortgagee, who had an interest in two out of the three properties which were the subjects of the mortgage-decree. The relief that the plaintiff claims in connection with this transaction is as follows:—

He admits that in regard to two of the properties, Danpur and Madhopur, his mortgagee-rights have merged in his rights as owner. With regard to the third property, however, Pandarwa, he claims a charge on account of the money he has paid. He has worked out the proportionate charge which may be held to be due on account of Pandarwa. I need not, however, go into this in further detail. I agree with the lower Court that the Article 61 of the Limitation Act must be held to apply to any payments that he made on behalf of the defendants, and that the claim is, therefore, barred by limitation.

There is no other point in this somewhat complicated case that it is necessary for me to decide. The result of the above finding is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement between the parties to a mortgage-deed that compound interest should be mentioned in the deed but that simple interest only would be realised and compound interest would never be claimed, is not admissible by virtue of the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act. Nor would the fact that only simple interest was, as a matter of fact, realised entitle the mortgagee to a variation of the written contract.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants against the decree in a suit on a mortgage-bond. The execution of the bond was admitted. The defences raised by the defendants were that the stipulation for compound interest was not enforceable, that it was penal and that certain payments made by them had not been credited.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that it was not necessary to take any evidence except as to the alleged payments. As these were found to be amounts the plaintiff raised no objection to these being credited against their claim. It is contended that the defendants should have been allowed to adduce evidence on the other issues. Referring to the defendants' written statement it is clear that no evidence would have been admissible in support of their pleas. The allegations amount to a contention that there was a contemporaneous oral agreement that compound interest should be mentioned in the bond but that interest would never be claimed according to it and that simple interest only would be realised. This section 92 of the Evidence Act bars the defendants from proving. There is, further, an allegation in the plaint that, as a matter of fact, only simple interest was realised. Even if this were so, this would not entitle the defendants to a variation of the written contract.

Our attention has been drawn to the cases of Pertap Chunder Ghose v. Mahendra Nath Purkait (1), a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and Nadia Chand Saha v. Birendra Chandra Dutt (2), a decision of a Divisional Bench of this Court. Both these cases are clearly distinguishable. In the former it was held that there was misrepresentation of the existing law which was sufficient to support the finding that the contract had been obtained fraudulently. In the second of these cases the question was not as to the effect of a written contract but as to the terms on which the defendant was holding the land after the termination of the period of the lease. We see no ground whatever for holding that the stipulation for compound interest which is in the ordinary terms was of a penal nature.

The appeal is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at ten gold mohurs.

C. P. Tenancy Act (I of 1920) s. 104, Sch. II, para. 1 —Suit to recover possession by tenant—Dispossession by person not claiming through landlord—Limitation.

The words "by any person" in paragraph 1 of Schedule II to the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1920, have their ordinary meaning and are not confined to a person claiming under the landlord, they are wide enough to include a trespasser.

For the purpose of construing an Act a Court may refer to the statement of objects and reasons.

Seth Gangabishan v. Balmukund, 8 N. L. R. 40 at
p. 45, followed.

Appeal from the decree of the District
Judge, Nimar, dated 8th January, 1923.

Messrs. S. B. Gokhale and K. K. Gandhi, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued the defendant to recover possession of some absolute occupancy land, alleging that in consideration of a debt due by the defendant to them an award was passed by the Conciliation Board on which a decree was obtained giving the plaintiffs possession of the land in suit.
The plaintiffs took possession through the Court on 3rd March 1909, but were forcibly dispossessed in July 1919. The present was brought in March 1922.

The defendant pleaded that by reason of an agreement between him and the plaintiffs, subsequent to the award, he was to get back the land and that a Settlement patta was granted to him.

The first Court, Subordinate Judge, Harda, passed a decree in the plaintiffs' favour but on appeal this was reversed by the District Judge, Nimar, on the ground that the suit was barred by limitation by Schedule II, paragraph 1, of the Tenancy Act of 1920, the suit not being brought within two years from the date of dispossession. The plaintiffs make this second appeal.

The learned pleader for the appellants has referred to a number of cases in which a limited meaning has been put on sections of the old Tenancy Act, but it is not necessary to go into these points for the determination of the present case. Rulings on other sections of the old Act can have no application to the section we are now concerned with, viz., section 104, read with schedule II. The whole law has been altered as regards limitation.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the dispossession referred to in Schedule II must be by the landlord or by some person claiming under him. This was the view taken under the old Act but is no longer applicable.
The wording of the second Schedule of the Tenancy Act paragraph 1, is: "For possession of a holding by a person claiming to be a tenant from which he has been dispossessed or excluded from possession by any person."
The wording of section 94 of the old Act of 1898 was: "The period of limitation for a suit instituted by a tenant other than an absolute occupancy tenant to recover possession of land from which he has been ejected, shall be two years from the date on which he is ejected," and it was held in a number of cases, of which the principal are Debidin Kalar
v. Hari (1), Sonsa Chamar v. Puran Singh Rajput (2), and Dinabandhu v. Dukhu Mirda
(3), that if a tenant was excluded from possession by another tenant without the intervention of the landlord, the limitation of two years would not apply. It was to meet this objection that the Law has been changed, and this will be clear from the statement of objects and reasons presented along with the new Act and printed as an appendix to Gokhale's commentary on the Central Provinces Tenancy Act. For the purpose of constructing the Act a Court may refer to the statement of objects and reasons. This has been held in Seth Gangabishan v. Balmukund
(4), in which the cases quoted to the contrary

GOUR KRISHNA SARKAR v. NILMADHAB SAHA

by the appellants' pleader have been considered. It is quite clear from the statement of objects and reasons that the Law has been intentionally altered in order to get over the effect of the above decisions, for it is stated that it is desirable that disputes regarding the right to hold tenancy land should be decided as early as possible, whether the dispute is between the tenant and the landlord or another person, and the clause has been amended accordingly.

It is clear, therefore, that the words "by any person" have their ordinary meaning and are not confined to a person claiming under the landlord, and, in my opinion, they are wide enough to include a trespasser. That point, however, does not really arise in the present case because the defendant in this case was admittedly originally an absolute occupancy tenant of the land, and he claims to be still such, the effect of the award and the decree having been nullified by an agreement between himself and the plaintiffs. This is, therefore, a dispute between two persons, each claiming to be the absolute occupancy tenant of the land. As such, it clearly falls under the provisions of limitation in Schedule II of the Tenancy Act and referred to in section 104 thereof, and the suit must be brought within two years of the date of dispossession. Admittedly, this has not been done, as the dispossession was in July 1919 and the suit was brought in March 1922. The view of the lower Appellate Court is, therefore, correct; the suit is barred by limitation.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is confirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs.

The sub-division of a tenure does not operate as a breach of the continuity of the tenure. JUDGMENT.—The question raised in this appeal is whether on the facts found the presumption under section 50, Bengal Tenancy Act, ought to be raised in favour of the appellants. The appellants are the tenants. The landlords opposite party brought a suit under section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act for enhancement of the rent of the holding in possession of the appellants. It was found by the Court of first instance that the status of the appellants was that of tenure-holders, that the holding was divided into two equal halves between the heirs of the original tenure holder, that the rent paid in respect of each half was proportionate and that the rent had been uniform for more than 20 years. On these findings it was held that the presumption under section 50 ought to be raised in favour of the tenants that the tenancy existed from the time of the Permanent Settlement and the rent of it is not liable to enhancement. There were several other cases tried along with the present case and they were similarly decided. On appeal, the learned Special Judge held that as the original tenure was divided it amounted to creation of new tenancies at the time of the division. As the creation of new tenancies took place after the Permanent Settlement, the presumption under section 50 ought not to apply to the present case. There were several appeals against this judgment by several tenants affected by it. All these, including the appeal by the present appellants, came up for hearing before a Bench of this Court consisting of Mookerjee and Rankin JJ. It was held by the learned Judges that the sub-division of a tenure does not operate as a breach of the continuity of the tenure, if the different parts into which the tenure is divided are held at a proportionate rent and the aggregate rent equals the original rent, the tenure-holder is entitled to the benefit of the presumption under section 50, clause (2), Bengal Tenancy Act. The appeal by the present appellant, however, could not be proceeded with because a formal defect was discovered which necessitated the dismissal of the appeal. It appears that before the filing of the appeal to this Court the appellants had submitted an application for review before the learned Special Judge. That review was partially granted and the judgment and decree previously passed by the learned Judge were modified. It was, therefore, held that the appeal by the present appellants was incompetent inasmuch as the decree from which that appeal was preferred was subsequently vacated and a new decree substituted in its place. The decision of this Court in this matter is to be found in Hara Kumar Mitter v. Murari Mohan Bose (1). The appellants, therefore, preferred another appeal (which is the present appeal) against the decree as made after review. The same question is raised in the present appeal as was raised in the appeal to which we have referred and the decision of which is to be found in Krishna Kamini Dasi v. Nil Madhub Saha (2). The point which has been raised in this appeal has been set at rest by the decision referred to above. But it is urged by the learned Vakils who appear on behalf of the minors that this decision being in direct conflict with the decision in the case of Uday Chandra Karji v. Nripendro Narayan Bhup (3), the question should be referred to a Full Bench, considering how the latter case has been dealt with since the decision was pronounced. We do not think that the course suggested is necessary. The decision in the case of Uday Chandra Karji v. Nripendro Narayan Bhup (3) has never been followed. An attempt was made to distinguish it in all subsequent cases until we come to the case of Chandra Kant Chukravarty v. Ram Krishna Mahalanabis (4) when its correctness was doubted; and in the case of Krishna Kamini Dasi v. Nil Madhub Saha (2) it has been expressly dissented from. One ground for questioning the correctness of this decision is that it has not taken note of the state of the law previous to the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the arguments that as that law was in conformity with the view taken in the case of Krishna Kamini v. Nil Madhub (2) and as it was not expressly abrogated by the Legislature it must be taken to be unaffected by the Bengal Tenancy Act. The omission to take note of the pre-existing law has very much weakened the authority of Uday Chandra Karji v. Nripendro Narayan Bhup (3). We think that the case was not correctly decided and we prefer to follow the decision in Krishna Kamini v. Nilmadhub (2).

We are further asked by the learned Vakils for the respondent to send this case back to the Special Judge for trial of the question as to whether the landlords have been able successfully to rebut the presumption under section 50, Bengal Tenancy Act. We find that the only ground raised in order to meet the contention of the tenants that they were entitled to the benefit of the presumption under section 50, Bengal Tenancy Act was that the tenancy was sub-divided after the Permanent Settlement and, therefore, the presumption under that section could not arise. No other ground was raised and we do not think that any useful purpose will be served by sending the case back to the lower Appellate Court.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Settlement Officer restored with costs. The appellants are entitled to their costs in this Court as also in the Court of Appeal below. They are also entitled to their costs of the review application before the learned Special Judge. Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. XXI, rr. 68, 90—Execution of decree—Sale proclamation, publication of, less than thirty days before sale—Irregularity—Substantial injury, proof of.

The mere fact that a sale proclamation is published less than thirty days before the date of the sale is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate the sale in the absence of proof that substantial injury has been caused to the judgment-debtor as a result of the irregularity.

Ganga Prasad Rai v. Jag Lal Rai, 11 A. 333; A. W. N. (1889); 115; 13 Ind. Jur. 471; 6 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 640, referred to.

Application for revision against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, dated the 24th August 1923.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, R.B., for the Applicant.

Mr. V. Bose, for the Non-applicant.

ORDER.—The learned Counsel for the applicant has pointed out that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in thinking that the date of the posting of the proclamation of sale in the Court-house of the Judge who ordered the sale was the 5th of March 1921. From the endorsement on the proclamation it appears that it was published in the village where the property is situated on that date, but was not posted in the Court-house till the 9th of March 1921. The sale was held on the 7th of April 1921, twenty-nine days later, that is, one day less than the period prescribed by r. 68 of O. XXI.

That matter appears to me merely to be one more material irregularity, which has to be put to the same test as that to which the others have already been put. The judgment of Edge, C. J., in Ganga Prasad Rai v. Jag Lal Rai, (1) is cited as authority for the proposition that that particular irregularity or illegality is sufficient of itself to vitiate a sale, which must be set aside when it has occurred even though no substantial injury has been caused. With all respect, I prefer the contrary opinion expressed by Brodhurst, J., in the same case, and it is obvious that it made no difference in this case to anybody whether the sale was 'held on the twenty-ninth day after the posting of the proclamation or on the thirtieth.

Even, however, if the test of "substantial injury" is not to be applied to such a sale under r. 90 of O. XXI in execution proceedings or in an appeal, it must certainly be applied under section 115 in proceedings in revision. The permissive form of words used in that section would otherwise be futile. Even, therefore, if the refusal of the lower Appellate Court to set aside the sale was directly illegal, it could not be disturbed in revision unless further cause were shown, such as, that it caused injustice or hardship.

I cannot find any reason also for differing from the finding of the learned Additional District Judge to the effect that there was no injury of any degree caused to the applicant by the other irregularities that took place and that no higher price would have been obtained for the property if they had not taken place.

Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 8—Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (ix)—Redemption suit—Jurisdiction, valuation for purposes of.

Prima facie it is the plaintiff's claim which determines jurisdiction, and the jurisdiction continues whatever the event unless a different principle comes into operation to prevent such a result or to make the proceedings from the first abortive. [p. 749, col. 1.]

Section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act does not cover redemption suits, so that in such a case valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction does not necessarily follow the valuation for the purpose of Court-fees. [p. 748, col. 1.]

The valuation of a suit for redemption for the purpose of jurisdiction depends not on the amount assumed but on the amount ultimately found to be due. [p. 748, col. 2.]

Rule against the order of the Sub-Judge, 2nd Court, Backergunge, dated the 17th September 1923, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 142 of 1922, against the decision of the Munsif, 7th Court, Barisal, in Title Suit No. 521 of 1920, dated the 25th April 1922.

Babu Suresh Chandra Talukdar, for the Petitioner.

Babu Abinash Chandra Guha, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was obtained on grounds Nos. 4 and 6 of the petition which are as follows:—

"For that on a valid and correct construction of law on the subject the learned Subordinate Judge ought to have held that the suit was beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the learned Munsif.

"For that the learned Munsif having heard all the evidence and arrived at his own finding thereon, the learned Subordinate Judge has erred in law and acted without jurisdiction in not expressing his definite conclusions thereupon."

The suit was one for redemption and the Munsif before whom it was instituted proceeded by way of a preliminary issue to decide the question whether he had the pecuniary jurisdiction to try it. Evidence was led on both sides and upon it he came to the conclusion that the debt due by plaintiff to defendant was over Rs. 1,000 and that, consequently, the suit was beyond his jurisdiction. He accordingly returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. Plaintiffs appealed and the learned Subordinate Judge reversed the order and remitted the case to the lower Court for trial on the merits.

He pointed out that a redemption suit comes under section 7, clause IX of the Court-Fees Act and the plaint has to be stamped with Court-fees payable on the principal sum assured. But section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act does not cover redemption suits, so that valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction does not necessarily follow valuation for the purpose of Court-fees. The Allahabad and Madras High Courts say that section 8 does not lay down either that the valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction must necessarily be different from that for the purpose of Court-fees.

The learned Judge further observed that he saw no practical difficulty from O. XXXIV, rr. 7 and 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure because the Court would not direct the plaintiffs to pay a certain sum but only direct that if a certain sum was paid within a certain time plaintiffs would have a certain relief in respect of the mortgaged property, and if they failed they would be debarred from getting it in future. If no payment were made the mortgagee would be entitled to ask for the sale of the property but that would be no part of the decree though it could follow from the decree incidentally.

The learned Judge then proceeded to make some observations on the evidence recorded by the Munsif, adversely criticising his findings though not definitely disagreeing with them.

The learned Vakil who has appeared in support of the Rule urges that the procedure adopted by the Court of Appeal below was erroneous and that the learned Judge should have come to a definite finding on the evidence.

As regards the second contention, we are of opinion that though the learned Judge may possibly have carried his criticisms a little too far it was not his intention to consider the evidence except from the point of view of the Munsif's jurisdiction and he was careful to guard against the imputation of having prejudged the case by saying: "it is not my intention to thrust my views upon the Court which would have to try the case and the Court should try it uninfluenced by my observations."

We think, however, that as the facts stand, the learned Judge was in error in remitting the case to the Munsif for trial on the merits.

He has relied on the case of Kedar Singh v. Matabadal Singh (1), which follows earlier cases of that Court, as an authority for the proposition that the value for purposes of jurisdiction of a suit for redemption of a mortgage is the amount of the principal mortgage-money and not the value of the property mortgaged and that the law has not been affected by the passing of Act VII of 1887, section 8.

That view was also taken by the Madras High Court in the case of Jallaldeen v. Vijaya-swami (2).

It is said in these cases that section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act does not cover redemption suits so that valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction does not necessarily follow valuation for the purpose of Court-fees nor will valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction necessarily be different from that for the purpose of Court-fees. Therefore, the law as laid down in the earlier cases is unaffected by the Suits Valuation Act.

With great respect to the learned Judges who decided these cases, we cannot but feel considerable doubt as to the correctness of these decisions. If the Legislature had not contemplated a change in the law it is not easy to understand why redemption suits should have been expressly excluded from the operation of section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act. The section does not say that the value determinable for the purpose of jurisdiction is the value determinable for the purpose of the initial payment of Court-fees. We are, therefore, inclined to the view that jurisdiction will depend not on the amount assured but on the amount ultimately found to be due.

Our attention was drawn to the case of Rameswar Mahton v. Dilu Mahton (3), where it was held that in a suit for possession with mesne profits the Munsif had jurisdiction to ascertain the mesne profits and to give effect to the order made in the decree notwithstanding that the amount of such mesne profits when added to the value of the suit might come to a sum in excess of the hearing jurisdiction of his Court.

"That case was considered and distinguished in Golap Singh v. Indra Kumar Hajra (4). At p. 377 it was pointed out that "the amount of mesne profits for which the Munsif made a decree had accrued entirely after the institution of the suit and depended upon the length of time during which the defendant might manage to keep the plaintiff out of possession in spite of the decree in his favour."

The decision on principle too which had been doubted in Ijratulla v. Chandra Mohan Banerjee (5), was disapproved.

It is also pointed out (at p. 374) that the provision of the Suits Valuation Act only shows that for purposes of jurisdiction the value of the suit must be taken to be determined by the value determinable for the completion of Court-fees. But this does not conclude the question whether a Court of restricted pecuniary jurisdiction is competent to make a decree in a suit for accounts valued at less than Rs. 1,000 for an amount in excess of Rs. 1,000 which is the pecuniary limit of its jurisdiction.

It may be conceded that a suit should be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it (section 15, Code of Civil Procedure). Competency means jurisdiction and the competency of a Court depends upon the nature of the suit and upon its own pecuniary jurisdiction. That jurisdiction must be determined with reference to the various Acts constituting the Courts and the question of valuation by reference to the Court-Fees and Suits Valuation Act.

The jurisdiction of the Munsif here is limited to the trial of suits the value of which does not exceed Rs. 1,000. Now, prima facie it is the plaintiff's claim which determines jurisdiction and the jurisdiction continues whatever the event unless a different principle comes into operation to prevent such a result or to make the proceedings from the first abortive. It is precisely such a contingency which has arisen in the present case. The evidence recorded by the learned Munsif satisfied him that the debt due by the plaintiffs on the bond was more than Rs. 1,000. He, therefore, held that the suit was beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction. In our judgment that view was correct both in law and on principle.

We are further of opinion that the learned Judge has failed to appreciate the mandatory effect of O. XXXIV, rr. 7 and 8. The Court must declare the amount due at the date of the decree and direct its payment within a certain time. If the money is not paid, the Court must, on defendant's application under r. 8 (4), pass a decree for the sale of the property. It is difficult to understand, therefore, how such an order would "be no part of the decree, though it would follow from the decree incidentally."

The substance of the matter is that if the Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit, it has no jurisdiction to make the decree. As explained in Golap Singh's case (4), cited above, at page 375: "if a Court of limited pecuniary jurisdiction took cognizance of a suit in which the sum claimed was larger than the amount over which the Court had jurisdiction and judgment it might give would be void."

The result, therefore, is that the rule is made absolute with costs two gold mohurs and the order of the lower Appellate Court discharged. The plaint will be returned to the plaintiff for presentation to a Court of competent jurisdiction.

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law, definition and applicability of—Dancing girls and prostitutes, whether recognised—Law applicable—Mitakshara—Succession—Daughter—Unchastity, whether ground for exclusion—Joint family—Conversion of one member—Separation—Presumption—Re-union—Burden of proof—Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850), effect of.

The Hindu Law, as now understood, is the law of the Śrutis and Śmritis including the recognised customs as administered and interpreted in the light of judicial decisions, and this law is applicable to all persons in India who have not adopted some other personal laws of their own. [p. 757, col. 2.]

The Hindu Law applies not only to the Aryan settlers in India and such aboriginal races as have been completely absorbed in the Aryan community, but also to the descendants of the original tribes who more or less avoided complete conversion to the Brahminical religion. [p. 759, cols. 1 and 2.]

The class of dancing girls and prostitutes have been recognised as a caste among the Hindus, like the four castes, either as a separate fifth caste or as included in the residuary caste of Sudras. They and their parents, the Naiks, are, therefore, governed in matters of succession by the rules laid down in the Mitakshara. [p. 759, col. 1.]

Under the Mitakshara Law an unchaste or immoral daughter is not excluded from succession. By the Caste Disabilities Removal Act the Legislature has virtually set aside the provisions of the Hindu Law which penalise the renunciation of a religion or exclusion from caste. [p. 761, col. 2.]

Therefore, a convert from Hinduism or an outcaste retains his right of inheritance under the Hindu Law whether the right accrues before or after his conversion to another religion or exclusion from caste. Where one member of a joint Hindu family is converted to Islam, there is a disruption of the entire joint family, and all the members must be deemed to be separate unless their re-union is established the onus of which lies upon the person who asserts it. It depends upon the circumstances of each case, however, what amount of evidence is required to discharge this onus. [p. 762, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Jwala Prasad, J.—This second appeal raises very important questions of law, in order to appreciate which, the facts need be stated at some length.

The plaintiff Ram Pargash Singh alias Jang Bahadur Singh is the appellant. He is the fourth in descent from Bhola Ram, brother of Kishun Dayal. Kishun Dayal had three daughters and three sons, Lalji, Beni Ram and Ragho. Lalji became a Muhammadan. His son is Kapil Ram and grandson-Chanchal. Beni Ram died in 1907 leaving two daughters Bhagwari Bibi Tewaif (died in 1908) and Dhan Bibi Tewaif, defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 3 Kawal is a minor son of Dhan Bibi, Brij Behari Ram, defendant No. 2, is son of Ragho. The other members of the family given in the genealogy attached to the judgments of both the Courts below need not be mentioned for the purpose of this appeal.

The plaintiff's case is that by custom of the family, which is known as the "family of Naiks," the male members and the Gotias of the family carry on the occupation of singing and dancing and so do generally the daughters and frequently the females, who adopt the profession of Tewaif, embrace the Muhammadan religion and the children born in the state of prostitution live with there "Hindu father and brother as Hindus"; that by the custom and usage prevailing amongst the Naik sect, specially in the family of the parties to the suit, from time immemorial which has the effect of law, when a father dies his estate is equally divided among his sons and daughters and no distinction of males and females is made with respect to his inheritance and succession; that the daughters are entitled to get inheritance as sons irrespective of what religion they follow and are fully entitled to enjoy and transfer the property inherited by them like males; that when a father dies leaving only daughters and no sons, his daughters equally inherit his estate whether they be followers of Hindu or Muhammadan religion and the agnates do not get any share so long as the daughters are alive; that the widow inherits the estate of her husband only when he has not left any son or daughter and so long as there is a son or daughter living the widow does not inherit; that if a Tewaif, before inheriting the property, marries in Nikah form a man of any religion she is deprived of the inheritance; that this custom and usage of the daughters succeeding equally and in the same way as the sons is based upon the fact that the daughters give their parents the earnings of their profession wherewith their fathers and brothers purchase property and consequently on the death of the fathers and brothers, the daughters with whose earnings the property is purchased inherit the same, and that their following any other religion does not deprive them of the inheritance of the property of their parent's family.

The plaintiff alleges that the aforesaid custom and usage which is the Kulachar of the Naiks sect, and of the family of the parties in this case, is in vogue from time immemorial and is just and reasonable and has always been acted upon; that according to the aforesaid Kulachar defendant No. 1 Dhan Bibi and her sister Musammat Bhagwari Bibi inherited the entire estate of their father Beni Ram (who died in 1907) in the Districts of Palamau and Gaya and on the death of Musammat Bhagwari Bibi in 1908, Musammat Dhan Bibi and Bhikhan Ram, son of Bhagwari Bibi, inherited the entire estate in equal shares and are in possession thereof; that after the death of Beni Ram (in 1907) defendant No. 1 and Bhagwari Bibi applied for the mutation of their names with respect to the estate of Beni Ram; that the defendant No. 2 Brij Behari, nephew of Beni Ram, objected to this, and applied for the mutation of his own name on the ground that Beni Ram and himself were members of a joint Mitakhara family and that the former died while in a state of jointness leaving defendant No. 2 as the sole surviving member and consequently he succeeded to the entire estate by right of survivorship; that in order to meet the expenses of the mutation case the defendant No. 1 borrowed Rs. 1,200 in cash from the plaintiff and executed a registered zarpeshgi deed, dated the 16th November 1907, in favour of the plaintiff with respect to the mauzas contained in schedule A to the plaint, and put him in possession thereof; that on the 18th December 1907, the mutation case was decided against defendant No. 1 and in favour of defendant No. 2 whose name was accordingly recorded in the Government Register with respect to the estate of Beni Ram, deceased; that against the decision of the Deputy Collector, the defendant No. 1 and Musammat Bhagwari Bibi preferred an appeal. Bhagwari Bibi died during the pendency of the appeal, and the defendant No. 2 having been won over by defendant No. 1 withdrew the appeal, and hence the decision of the original Court was confirmed on the 31st July 1908, on the strength whereof the defendants 1 and 2 in collusion with each other dispossessed the plaintiff of the zarpeshgi properties on 10th Pous 1315 and the defendant No. 1 took possession thereof; that the plaintiff commenced an action against the defendants to enforce his mortgage by filing suit No. 45 of 1911 against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Palamau vested with the power of Subordinate Judge, which on transfer to the Subordinate Judge was numbered 8 of 1912 and was disposed of by him on the 4th March 1913 but the Subordinate Judge granted to the plaintiff only a money-decree for Rs. 2,328 against defendant No. 1 inasmuch as he felt difficulties in disposing of the question raised by the defendants with regard to the rules of succession governing the Naiks sect and left the title of defendant No. 1 to the zarpeshgi properties open and undetermined.

Then the plaintiff levied execution (No. 4 of 1915) of his money decree and sought to attach and sell the zarpeshgi properties which, upon the claim preferred by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, (Dhan Bibi and Brij Behari) were released from attachment and sale by the order of the Court passed on the 19th August, 1915.

In short, the plaintiff's case is that the properties in dispute belonged to defendant No. 1 as her parental estate and are in her possession, and that defendant No. 2 has nothing to do with the same, and his claim that the entire estate of Beni Ram devolved on him, under the rule of survivorship, is false.

Upon these allegations, the plaintiff brought the present action stating that the cause of action arose on the 10th Pous 1315 when he was dispossessed, and on the 9th August 1915 when the claim case of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was decided, and he wants a declaration that the properties in dispute belong to defendant No. 1 and that she is in possession thereof and the defendants 2 and 3 have nothing to do with the same and that the said properties are liable to be sold and attached in execution of the plaintiff's money decree.

Defendant No. 1 has not entered appearance. Defendants 2 and 3 have filed separate written statements, but the grounds taken in the written statements are mutatis mutandis the same. They deny the several customs or Kulas char allged in the plaint as prevailing in the sect of Naiks or the family of the parties, or that the said custom governs them. They assert that the Naiks who live and die as Hindus are governed by the ordinary Mitakhara Law of inheritance and the females do not succeed in the presence of males and when they do succeed in the case of a separate family they acquire a limited interest as in the case of a family governed by the Mitakhara Law and never take an absolute inheritance as is alleged by the plaintiff; that P a Hindu and died while joint in estate with defendant No. 2, his brother's son, and on the death of Beni Ram, the properties devolved upon defendant No. 2 by right of survivorship, that Bhagwari Bibi and Dhan Bibi became Tawaifs during the lifetime of their father Beni Ram and embraced the Muhammadan religion; that they were, therefore, excluded from inheritance; that Beni Ram left a widow Misran Kuer; that Dhan Bibi never held possession of the disputed properties; that the sarpeshgi deed set up by the plaintiff was without consideration. They also disputed the correctness of the genealogy attached to the plaint, but gave no fresh genealogy nor any evidence showing the inaccuracy of the plaintiff's genealogy. The Court below has attached to its judgment a family tree based upon the plaint and amplified from the evidence.

We are concerned only with issues Nos. 4 and 7 and the consequential issue No. 8 which relates to what relief the plaintiff is entitled to. The other issues have been set at rest by the findings of the Court below. Issues Nos. 4 and 7 are as follows:—

"4. Are the parties to the suit governed by the ordinary rule of Mitakshara or is there any special custom of daughter's succession as alleged by the plaintiff?"

"7. Has defendant No. 1 any title to or possession over any of the properties mentioned in the schedule to the plaint?"

Both the Courts below decided these issues against the plaintiff. They held that the plaintiff failed to establish the Kulachar or the special customs and usages set up by him as governing the family in question in matters of succession and inheritance; that the family is governed by the Hindu Law; that Beni Ram and his nephew Brij Behari were members of a joint Mitakshara family and that Beni Ram died while in a state of jointness and Brij Behari, defendant No. 2, succeeded to the properties in question by right of survivorship under the Mitakshara Law and that the daughters of Beni Ram, Bhagawari Bibi and Dhan Bibi (defendant No. 1) became Tawaifs (dancing girls and prostitutes) and embraced Muhammadanism during the lifetime of Beni Ram and they did not inherit the properties in dispute which were ancestral properties of Beni Ram. "These findings the Courts below held that the plaintiff failed to prove that defendant No. 1 had any title to the properties in dispute and accordingly dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has come to this Court in second appeal.

Mr. Jayeswal on behalf of the plaintiff contends that the finding of the Court below that the plaintiff failed to establish the custom set up by him has been vitiated by reason of its not having considered the effect of some important evidence. In particular, our attention has been drawn to Exhibit 7, deposition of Bhairo Naik, dated the 19th June, 1876.

This document has been referred to in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge who disposes of it in the following words:—

"In proof of this custom the plaintiff also relies upon a deposition (Exhibit 7) of one Bhairo Ram recorded in Urdu on 19th June 1876. Defendants strongly deny that this person Bhairo Ram was an ancestor of their family and that his statement could not be binding upon them. The passage relied upon in this document runs as—

'ham logon ke jaidad main Tawaif ka hissa barabar hota hai.'

"It is difficult to see what the statement actually signifies. The defence reads this as alluding to their professional earnings and not to any inheritance of the kind now in dispute. In my opinion this statement is not binding upon the defendants and cannot be of any avail to plaintiff in proving the alleged custom."

The words quoted above are the very last words in the deposition and are wholly unconnected with the tenor of the deposition in the preceding portion of it, and there is nothing in the context to amplify or explain them. The words are in themselves vague and not sufficient to establish any custom. Even if they refer to any custom, there is nothing to show that the deposition is with respect to the custom of the family in question, inasmuch as the parties in that case have not been connected with those in the present case. There is also nothing to show that the aforesaid passage in the deposition was referred to or relied upon by the appellant in the Court below. There is no affidavit to the effect that it was referred to in the argument in appeal before the learned Judicial Commissioner. Ground No. 19 which relates to this point does not state that the aforesaid passage was relied upon in argument before the Judicial Commissioner. It is possible that after the remark of the Subordinate Judge with regard to the passage in question referred to above, it was not thought worth while to refer to it again before the learned Judicial Commissioner. I do not think that the omission to consider this document vitiates the finding of the learned Judicial Commissioner. Both the Courts below have referred to instances disproving the alleged custom and they seem to have arrived at their finding upon an appreciation of all the evidence—oral and documentary—bearing upon the point. The evidence is ample in favour of the view taken by them. Therefore, we cannot interfere with this finding in this case.

The plaintiff's case is entirely based upon the custom set up in the plaint for a declaration of the title of defendant No. 1 to the properties in suit. The Courts below have held that defendant No. 1 never possessed the properties in question and that after the death of her father Beni Ram the properties came to be in possession of defendant No. 2 Brij Behari, his nephew. This finding is supported by the decision of the Land Registration Deputy Collector, dated the 31st July, 1908, which was upheld in appeal (Exhibits 3 and 4), and the name of Brij Behari, defendant No. 2, was recorded in the Collectorate Register D. This is also supported by the decision of the Execution Court, dated the 19th August 1915, upholding the claim of defendant No. 2 on the ground of his possession and releasing the same from attachment for satisfaction of the money-decree of the plaintiff. The finally published Record of Rights, also supports the possession of defendants 2 and 3.

Therefore, the plaintiff must show how the defendant No. 1 acquired title to the properties. In order to prove her title the plaintiff sets up special customs in the plaint by which he says that she inherited the properties of her father. He has failed to establish those customs. He does not say in the plaint that she succeeded to the properties by any other rule or law.

Mr. Jayaswal does not rely upon the statements made in the body of the plaint, but in the pedigree attached to it and says that upon the pedigree Beni Ram could not be a Hindu. For this contention he carries us a degree above Jaimangal Ram, grandfather of Kishun Ram, mentioned as the starting ancestor in the pedigree attached to the judgment of the learned Judicial Commissioner. Mr. Jayaswal says that Jaimangal's mother is mentioned in the genealogical tree of the plaint to be Rai Kuer Tewaif, and that the word "Tewaif" connotes that she must have been a Muhammadan and hence her son Jaimangal could not be a Hindu by birth and so also Beni Ram, grandson of Jaimangal. Therefore, Mr. Jayaswal contends that succession to the estate of Beni Ram should not be governed by the Hindu Law.

The genealogical tree attached to the plaint does not expressly describe the mother of Jaimangal as a Muhammadan, nor does the plaint state that, Mr. Jayaswal says that the appellation "Tewaif" must necessarily imply that she had become a Muhammadan. In paragraph 3 of the plaint it is simply stated that "frequently the females who adopt the profession of Tewaifs embrace the Muhammadan religion and the children born in the state of prostitution live with their Hindu fathers and brothers as Hindus." The word used in the plaint is "aksar" (which means 'often'), and not 'hameshai' (which means 'always' or 'invariably'). The above passage is a free translation of the plaint, and not a literal one. It omits the word 'aur' (and) which occurs between the word "Tewaifs" (who carry on the profession of singing and dancing) and those of them who embrace the Muhammadan religion." The vernacular passage makes it clear that "Tewaif" does not necessarily imply embracing the Muhammadan religion, but that some of the Tewaifs do embrace that religion.

The written statement also does not admit that a Tewaif is necessarily a Muhammadan. Paragraph 13 of the written statement implies that in order to be a Muhammadan a Tewaif has to be converted to that religion.

RAM PARGASH SINGH v. DHAN BIBI

Reliance has been placed upon the following passage in the judgment of the learned Judicial Commissioner :—

“nor is the evidence very satisfactory that all the daughters of Jaimangal Ram and Kishun Dayal had married before the death of their father and some of them must have been Tewaifs as they had Muhammadan names.”

This does not mean that all Tewaifs are Muhammadan, but that the Muhammadan names indicate that they must have carried on the profession of Tewaifs, that is, of dancing and singing. Such a proposition as is stated by Mr. Jayaswal that Beni Ram and his grandfather Jaimangal Ram must have been Muhammadans as they were born of a Muhammadan mother Rai Kuer Tewaif is of so great an importance in determining the status of Beni Ram and the law of succession applicable to him, that it could not have been lost sight of and omitted from the plaint. It was not only important but essential and is expressly required by the rules of pleading to be clearly and distinctly stated. Far from stating that Beni Ram was a Muhammadan, the aforesaid passage implies that even when the Tewaifs of the family embrace the Muhammadan religion, their children born in the state of prostitution live with their Hindu fathers and brothers as Hindus.

Now, assuming for the sake of argument that the word “Tewaif” necessarily implies conversion to Muhammadanism, there is nothing to show when the mother of Jaimangal became a Tewaif. It may be that she adopted the profession of Tewaif, that is, of singing and dancing, after the birth of Jaimangal. In that case, Jaimangal will not be a Muhammadan by birth.

Now, Jaimangal had brothers and uncles shown in the pedigree, and their ancestors have Hindu names : Ganga Ram and Basan Ram. Applying the principles stated in the aforesaid passage of the plaint, Jaimangal must have lived with his Hindu father and brother as Hindu and it is not expressly stated that he deviated from the aforesaid custom and became a Muhammadan.

The pedigree attached to the lower Appellate Court's judgment makes a distinction between the Hindu and the Muhammadan members of the family by describing them as such. This pedigree, the learned Judicial Commissioner says, was prepared by him in accordance with the evidence in the case.

In the plaint it is nowhere stated that Beni Ram was governed by any law other than the Hindu law. On the other hand, it assumes in the passage quoted above as well as in paragraph 14 that the family is governed by the Hindu Law of Mitakshara including the rule of survivorship subject to the special customs set fourth in the plaint as exceptions to the Hindu Law giving right of succession to the daughters equally with the sons.

The defence in the written statement expressly asserted that the Hindu Naiks were governed by the Hindu Law of the Mitakshara School. The plaintiff did not refute it. On the other hand, he states in his deposition “The offsprings of these (Tewaifs embracing Muhammadan religion) will be and are recognized as Hindus. Their sons and unmarried daughters will live with their progenitors and maternal uncles and grandfather in the same mess and will be considered to be Hindus.” He gives the definition of ‘Tewaif’ in the following words :—“Dancing and singing females are called Tewaifs”, and does not say that they become Muhammadans. About his own mother, he says : “My mother named Jasoda (still alive) is a Tewaif lady who was in the keeping of Babu Padarath Singh I am born of that connection. Mostly, the Tewaifs remain unmarried. Some remain in the keeping of Hindus, a still lesser number marry in Nikah” (Muhammadan form of marriage.)

Therefore, it is not necessary that Tewaifs must be Muhammadans. His mother is a Tewaif ; still he says “I am a Hindu. I would not dine with a Muhammadan.”

About Beni Ram and his family, he says— Beni Ram was a Hindu ; so is Brij. Yes, Beni Ram's dead body was burnt. He died of plague. Brij performed his Daswan at the cost of Beni Ram..... Garur Puran was read at the Daswan. The ceremony was in every respect a Hindu one A Naik man or lady (not Tewaif) marries according to Hindu custom. All Naik girls do not become Tewaifs. Those who are trained by their parents in their profession become Tewaifs. The wife of Beni Ram and the mother of Brij were sisters; that is the two brothers had married two sisters. They had not taken to the profession as they were not Tewaifs. They remained like Hindus as they were Hindus."

Upon this evidence of the plaintiff it is futile to contend that Beni Ram was not a Hindu and that the succession to his estate would not be according to the Hindu Law. Even if they were not Hindus by birth, which does not appear to be the case, they called themselves Hindus, were recognized as Hindus for generations and governed themselves by the Hindu rules of birth, death and succession. The learned Judicial Commissioner was, therefore, right in not accepting the contention that the Hindu Law should not be applied to the Naiks unless special custom to the contrary was established. No issue was raised nor any suggestion made in the trial Court that the ordinary Hindu Law is inapplicable to the parties. Therefore, the plea now taken is not admissible; vide Ashimanila Veetil Kannu Pillai v. Kayinari Gopalan Nair (1).

On appeal, as appears from the judgment of the learned Judicial Commissioner, the contention for the first time was raised that the "Naiks were not a Hindu community but so mixed in their religion and so estranged from Hindu ideas of morality in their customs" particularly "where their daughters become Muhammadan prostitutes and the sons of these daughters are taken into the family of their nominal Hindu grand-parents again and are brought up as Hindus", that the applicability of the Hindu Law would be "repugnant to the sacred character of the Hindu Sastras."

This contention has not been accepted by the Court below, and Mr. Jayaswal repeats it strenuously in this Court. Mr. Manohar Lal, on the other hand, opposes it with equal vehemence.

The contention of Mr. Jayaswal has raised important questions as to what the Hindu Law is and to whom that law is applicable.

(1) 26 Ind. Cas. 337; (1914) M. W. N. 333.

Before I proceed to describe what is now known as the Hindu Law, some references to the primitive law-giver Manu may be useful.

After giving the metaphysical process of the evolution of the universe and the creation of men by the self-originated deity Brahma, Manu says :

"For the preservation of all this creation, He of great effulgence, laid down separate duties for those originated from his mouth (Brahmanas), from His arms (Kshatriyas), from His thighs (Vaiśyas), and from His legs (Sudras). Manu, Chapter I, Sloka 87."

The study of Vedas and the performance of sacrifices were assigned to the Brahmanas, the protection of the people and performance of sacrifices to the Kshatriyas, the rearing of wealth by 'merchandise, money-lending, agriculture, etc., to the Vaiśyas, and service to the Sudras : (Manu Chapter I, Slokas 89 to 91). These duties would seem to be exhaustive for all civil and religious purposes and, therefore, he says "Conduct is the highest virtue, as inculcated by the Smṛiti and the Śruti (Vedas)," (Manu Chapter I, slokas 107 and 108) and exhaustively deals with the rules of conduct and the duties of citizenship in all aspects which govern the four social orders of humanity.

Among others he lays down the laws of punishments and penances for dereliction of duties, the law relating to debts and properties and rules for the administration of those laws by Kings. These laws and rules, according to Manu, were laid down for the whole humanity. In Chapter 11, slokas 17 to 22, he describes certain tracts in India and names them in order of sanctity for the performance of sacrifices and religious ceremonies by reason of the course of conduct followed from generation to generation both among twice born and the mixed castes, Brahmvartam (the land of the Brahmarshis), Madhyadesa (central country), and Aryavarta (the country of the Aryans). Then, in Sloka 23 he says that the tract of land in which black antelopes are found to roam about in nature should be considered as the land fit for performing sacrifices; and the rest is to be considered as Mlechhas Doshā. In Sloka 24 he says that the twice-born should live in these tracts, and a Sudra may live anywhere in the world where he can find his living.

The laws laid down by Manu would appear to be applicable to the people inhabiting India and the rest of the world, for he permits the Sudras to live anywhere in the world they like and restricts the tracts of sanctity to the twice-born only.

Again, the religious rites and ceremonies can be performed in any country where black antelopes are found to roam about and these necessarily need not be confined to India.

The primary sources of all laws governing the civil conduct and religious ceremonies are the Srutis or the Vedas which have their origin in the Creator Himself and consequently govern the whole mankind, as expressly stated by Manu in Chapter 1, Sloka 87, that these duties were enjoined by the Creator for "the preservation of all "His creation."

The Institutes of Manu and other sages enumerated in Yajñawalkya, Sloka 4 of Chapter 1, called the Smritis, lay down rules for the purpose of regulating the conduct of the whole mankind.

Then grew a large number of Commentaries, the different parts of the countries accepted the authority of the different commentators, thus giving rise to the different Schools, such as, Benares, Mithila, Bengal, etc.

Besides these, the usages and customs determined by the course of conduct of men from generation to generation were declared to be binding, and the King was enjoined to administer them: (Manu, Chapter I, sloka 108; Chapter II, sloka 18; Chapter VIII; sloka 3).

Thus, the Srutis and Smritis with their Commentaries and supplemented by recognised customs and usages constitute the moral law as well as the municipal and positive laws (for in ancient jurisprudence there was no difference between the two) regulating the civil conduct of men as well as the performance of religious ceremonies. These laws applied to all classes of men.

When the country passed into the hands of the Muhammadans and the Muhammadan Government was established, they did not interfere with the internal affairs of the country, nor did they alter the laws of the Srutis and the Smritis modified by recognised customs remained unaffected.

On the advent of the British, with a view to preserve the personal law and customs of each and everyone of the diverse races inhabiting India, the preamble to 21 Geo., Ch. 70 stated that the inhabitants of the country should be maintained and protected in the enjoyment of all their ancient laws, usages, rights and privileges: while the Act provided that inheritance and succession to lands, rents and goods and all matters of contract and dealing between party and party shall be determined in the case of Muhammadans by the laws and usages of Muhammadans, and in the case of Gentus by the laws and usages of Gentus. The Charters of the several High Courts and the Civil Courts Acts declared that in cases relating to marriage, succession, etc., the "Hindu Law" shall apply to the Hindus and the "Muhammadan Law" to the Muhammadans.

The words "Hindu". "Hindu religion" "Hindu Law" are not to be found in any of the Sastras. The word 'Hindu' is supposed to be derived from the word "Indus" or "Sindhu" and was used by the Muhammadans to designate the people living to the east of the river Indus and generally all the inhabitants of India which in itself is a modification of the word "Indus." Accepting this significance of the words, the British Legislature recognised two laws, and only two laws, governing the people of the country, namely, the Muhammadan Law and the Hindu Law. Therefore, the words "Hindu" and "Hindu Law" which occur in the legislative enactments referred to above, would apply to all the people who are not Muhammadans. In order to make the Hindu Law exhaustive and applicable to the diverse sects and communities whether following the Brahmanical religion or not the special customs and usages of the several communities were declared to be binding. In the case of Collector of Madura v. Muthu Ramalinga Sattupathi (2) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observe:

"The duty, therefore, of an European Judge who is under the obligation to administer Hindu Law, is not so much to inquire whether a disputed doctrine is fairly deducible from the earliest authorities, as to ascertain whether it has been received by the particular School which governs the district with which he has to deal, and has there been sanction by usage. For, under the Hindu system of law, clear proof of usage will outweigh the written text of the law."

(2) 10 W. R. 17 (P. C.); 1 B. L. R. 1; 12 M. I. A. 397; 2 Suther 195; 2 Ser. P. C. J. 861.

This is in accordance with what Manu ordains that immemorial custom is the transcendent law approved in the sacred scripture and in the code of divine legislators, and directs kings to observe the rules drawn from local usages. Therefore the Hindu Law as laid down in the aforesaid authority is the law of the Srutis and Smritis and the approved customs and usages of the various people inhabiting the country.

The Muhammadans brought their own personal laws and chose to be governed by those laws. The Srutis and Smritis recognise the laws of a particular class of people, and indeed every community has a right to be governed by its own recognised usages and customs. The same would apply to other communities inhabiting India or coming from outside who choose to be governed by their own laws. But those who have not expressly so chosen to be governed by particular rules of their own in the shape of usages and customs, will be governed by the comprehensive laws of the Srutis and Smritis which apply to all people.

The law of Succession and Inheritance found in Chapter IX of Manu and in Chapter II of Yajñawalkya, the different commentaries of which have given rise to the different Schools of Hindu Law in the country, as observed above, apply to persons who follow the religious rules as well as to those who do not follow the religious rules of the Srutis and the Smritis. The religious rites are dealt with in different chapters from those relating to rules of succession, and even those who fall off from religion and are outcaste are governed by the rules of succession to property. Similarly, the rules relating to crimes dealt with in the Srutis and Smritis are applicable to all irrespective of whether they follow the religious rites or not, for criminals having no religion or having lost or abandoned their religion were equally amenable to those laws. Therefore, even those who abandon the religion of the Srutis and Smritis and do not adopt another religion signifying thereby their intention to adopt the laws of succession of the community following the religion newly adopted, will be governed by the Hindu Law. The word "Hindu" was applied by the Muhammadans not only to those who followed the religion of the Srutis and Smritis but to all people who lived to the East of the river Indus now India. Therefore, it was a local name given to the people inhabiting the said locality regardless of what their religion was.

The Srutis and Smritis recognise freedom of choice both in religion as well as in law, and do not make the one dependent upon the other, though the profession or adoption of or conversion to a religion may raise a presumption of the intention to be governed by the laws regulating the community which generally follows that religion. The judicial decisions, some of which will be noticed presently, have from time to time recognised this.

Therefore, I would answer the question raised by Mr. Jayaswal that the Hindu Law as now understood is the law of the Srutis and Smritis including the recognised customs as administered and interpreted in the light of judicial decisions and the said law is applicable to all who have not adopted some other personal laws of their own.

The question then is whether the Naiks whose daughters become Muhammadans and the sons of those daughters are taken in the family of their Hindu grand-parents and are brought up as such are governed by the Hindu law or not. In order to answer this, I would again revert to Manu. He deals with different kinds of marriages no less than eight which exhaust all conceivable forms of marriages from almost promiscuity to a lawful marriage. In Chapter X he deals with offsprings from lawfully married wives belonging to their respective social orders or castes and those belonging to different castes, lower and higher; and assigns to them their respective places in the social order and their denominations, such as, Suta, M'agadhas, Vaidehas, Ayogyas, Kshattas, Chandals. These he calls hybrid castes, and deals with the offsprings produced through inter-marriages among these hybrid castes. In this way he divides men into castes and sub-castes, high and low, and thus exhausts all classes of men, Aryans, non-Aryans, Yogyas and Ayogyas, Dasyas-Mlechchhas—whether they speak the Aryan or non-Aryan tongue—even those who renounce the religious rites. He also prescribes rules, penances and yogas for the purification of the low and hybrid castes, thus gaining higher status in society. It is well-known that Vishwamitra, a Kshatriya by caste, attained the status of a Brahman and became Brahmarshi.

In Slokas 43 to 45 of Chapter X Manu describes the hybrid castes as follows:—

“The following Kshatriya castes, through the extinction, (non-performances) of their proper religious rites and on account of not seeing (i.e., in the absence of their contact with) Brahmans, have been degraded to the Sudra caste in this world.”

“(They are) the Paundrakas, Andras, Dravidas, Kamvojas, Javanas, Sakas, Parandas, Pandavas, Chinas, Kiratas, Daradas, Khashas (Kshatriyas of these countries have become Sudras for having renounced the “religious rites.)”

“Members of castes, respectively originated “from the face, arms, thighs and legs of “Brahman, (i. e., Brahmaha, Kshatriya, Vaisya and Sudra) “who have been comprised outside the pale “of these four castes for the extinction of “their religious rites, are all called Dasyus, “whether they speak an Aryan or a non-Aryan “(Mlechchha) tongue”.

The same is the view of Haribansha, Chapter 22, Sloka 123.

Pandyas, Keralas, Kolas and Cholas were all descendants of the Kshatriyas, but on account of their wicked character they were outcasted by the king named Sagar (that is, they were degraded from Kshatriya caste to Sudra Caste, the full story of which is to be found in Chapter XIV).

Hemchandra would include Malas, Billas and Kirates into Mlechchha caste, among whom are numerous classes of people, such as washermen, chamars, dusadhs, Mallahas, Medas and Billas, etc., (Prayashchittatattvam, Parassar Paddhati).

According to Matsya Purana Chapter 34, the Yavanas were the descendants of Turvasu and the Mlechchhas were the descendants of any the sons of king Yayati.

According to Brahmavaivarta Purana, Prakriti Khanda, Chapter 28, a woman having one husband is called Pativrata, having two husbands Kulata, having three husbands Brihali, having four Punschali, having five to six husbands Vesya, having seven to eight Yuugi, and having more than eight husbands Maha Vesya, in all castes. These Vesyas and Maha Vesyas were considered to be so low as not to be touched. Thus we get here a class of women who almost led the life of prostitutes.

Reverting to Manu we find a class of women as attendants of the Gods who were supposed to be the creations of the superior kind of activity or rajas. They are called Gandharvas, Guhyakas, Yakshas and Apsaras. Says Manu.

“Births as Gandharvas, Guhyakas, Yakshas, attendants of the Gods, and Apsarasas are the effects of the superior kind of Rajas”.

The Dasis and female courtesans and attendants so prevalent in the country trace their descent from Gandharvas and Apsarasas of the Gods referred to in Manu. They began to be called Ghandarvas or Vesyas.

Vatsyayana in his Kamasutra, book VI, Chapter 7 (written in about 300 B. C. the period of Nand Mauryan Dynasties) mentions nine classes of courtesans or Vesyas:—

1. Kumbhadasi—a low class of courtesans.
2. Paricharika—a servant woman that has become a concubine to her master.
3. Kulata—one who though having husband, misconducts herself with others.
4. Saviarini—a bold self-willed woman who misconducts herself in defiance of her husband.
5. Nati—one who ostensibly follows the profession of an actress but at the same time carries on love intrigues with others.
6. Silpakarika—one who ostensibly engaged in some handiwork, etc., but secretly carries on amorous intrigues.
7. Parakasavinasta—a public spoiled woman.
8. Rupajiva—one trading on her good looks

i.e., her beautiful person, lending herself to men for enjoyment in return of their money, and

9. Ganika—an honourable class of courtesans having some rules of conduct.

The Naik or Naikin sect in the present case would probably come in class 5 referred to above, or at any rate in one of the classes mentioned above. The Vesya caste came to be regarded as a distinct caste of Hindus.

Now Yajnawalkya, while dealing with adultery and punishment for the same in Chapter II, Sloka 290, says—

“(A king) should inflict the highest form of pecuniary punishment (upon a person) who carries away a maiden of the same caste, adorned (for marriage); in ordinary cases the lowest form of pecuniary punishment should be his penalty. (In the case of carrying away) a maiden of a higher caste, sentence of death is laid down by law.”

Commenting upon the aforesaid Sloka of Yajnawalkya, Vijnesvar would include the Vesya caste in the word—

He says: The Vesya caste which follows the profession of prostitution with men of equal or higher caste is from the beginning of the world like the four caste, of Brahmanas, Kshatriyas, Vaisyas, and Sudras. In the Skanda Purana it is found that the Vesya caste is the descent of a divine nymph named Panchahuda and it is a fifth caste.

It is needless to pursue the subject further, for we find that, apart from Manu and other authorities, the class of dancing girls and prostitutes have been recognised as a caste like the four castes—whether they are to be regarded as a fifth caste or included in the residuary caste of Sudra as Manu would have it. They, the Vesyas, exist among the Hindus. They will therefore, be governed in matters of succession by the rules laid down in the Mitakshara. If these professional women are governed by the Hindu Law the Naiks, that is, their parents, would be much more governed by the Hindu Law. It is not necessary to find out whether they were the aboriginal races of the country or were the Aryans or non-Aryans in their origin, for the Hindu Law will apply not only to the Aryan settlers and such aboriginal races as have been completely absorbed in the Aryan community but also to the descendants of the original tribes who more or less avoided the complete conversion to the Brahmanical religion.

Sir Gurudas Banerji, in his Tagore Law Lectures, recognised that the class of dancing girls and prostitutes has found place in the Hindu community in spite of their existence being repugnant to the high standard of morality set up by the Sastras.

The Smritis have, however, regarded them as a degraded class of people, and have condemned and prescribed punishments also for persons carrying intrigues with them but in the nature of things the class has existed. Therefore, the Smritis had to provide rules of inheritance and succession for them and their off-springs, as they must necessarily hold and inherit properties. Therefore, it cannot be said that their existence was in any way encouraged; on the other hand, it was condemned. The laws have, however, to provide for every class of persons.

In the case of Rani Bhugwan Koer v. Bose (3), it was observed that there are various sects of importance, such as the Buddhists, the Jains, the Brahmos and the Sikhs who have entirely repudiated Brahmanism and to them the Hindu Law applies as much as to those who accept the authority of the Vedas. In that case their Lordships observe that the legislative provisions requiring Hindus to be governed by the Hindu Law came in course of time to be applied to various religious bodies in India which at various periods and under various circumstances developed out of or split off from the Hindu system but whose members have nevertheless continued to live under the Hindu law, and in dealing with them “the Courts have always put a liberal construction upon the enactments by which the Muhammadans and the Hindus were secured in the enjoyment of their own laws.”

The Hindu Law has been held to apply to a considerable portion of the population of the Madras Presidency, the Central India and the hill tribes of the various parts of India. Their customs and religion differ widely from those of the Hindus properly so called. They have no Codes of Law, but in some instances they have adopted much that is Hindu in their customs and religion, and some of these perhaps, such as Kooch and others have been described by Dalton as the Hinduised aborigines of India. These semi-Hindu races have been sometimes regarded as Hindus and, therefore, subject to Hindu Law, for instance, the Jats, Bhagwani v. Khushi Ram (4), the Dubias, Shaik Ibrahim Rowther v. Muhammad Ibrahim Rowther (5), and the Chetties, Azhimanila Vestil Kannu Pillai v. Kayinari Gopalan Nair, etc. (1)

Dr. Gour in his Law of Transfer in British India, Volume I, pages 28 and 29, says—

"Although the term 'Hindu' is properly understood to comprise only such people as follow the Hindu religion, or rather its ceremonial observances, a wider class of people are subject to Hindu Law. And while it may truly be said of a Hindu, nascitur non fit he is born, (not made) still it is often difficult to reconcile the juristic conception of the term with its popular notion."

Trevelyan on Hindu Law says the expression 'Hindus' includes not only the persons who profess what is called the Hindu religion, but also such of their descendants as have not openly abjured that religion.

Mr. Justice Tudball of the Allahabad High Court in Mussammatt Bhagwani v. Khushi Ram (4) applies the Hindu Law to the case of Jats on the ground that whatever the origin of the Jats may be, whether they were aborigines of the country or whether of Aryan origin, they are and always have been held to be Hindus and Hindu Law has always been applied to them except where customs have been established at variance with the Hindu Law.

It is, therefore, not necessary in the present case to find out whether the Naiks family in question were originally aborigines or Aryans. They were Hindus and are called such and for aught that is known they were originally Hindus.

(5) 30 Ind. Cas. 806; 39 M. 664; 29 M. L. J. 768; (1915) M. W. N. 956.

The Hindu Law has been applied to dissenters and non-conformists and to those who have ceased to conform to the rules of Hindu Law.

The argument of Mr. Jayaswal is that the Hindu Law should not apply to the girls of the family because they adopted the profession of dancing and became prostitutes. It may be repugnant to the ideas of morality, yet it does not cause exclusion from succession, Hiri Lal Singha v. Tripura Charan Ray (6), Chalakonda Alasani v. Chalakonda Ratnachalam (7), Subharatna Mudali v. Balakrishnaswami Naidu (8) and Muthusami Mudaliar v. Masilamany (9). This contention of Mr. Jayaswal must, therefore, fail.

Mr. Jayaswal then relies upon the case of Abraham v. Abraham (10), Jowala Buksh v. Dheru Singh alias Imdad Ali Khan (11), and Ujjara v. Tilochan Gond, (12) and various other authorities which hold that upon apostasy from Hindu religion which takes the form of conversion to another religion, the convert ceases to be governed by the Hindu Law except on proof of a well established custom to the contrary. These cases do not apply to the present case, inasmuch as Beni Ram or his ancestors were never converted to Muhammadanism. They continued to be Hindus according to the case of the plaintiff himself and to observe all the Hindu rites and ceremonies. They must, therefore, be governed by the Hindu Law.

The plea that Hindu Law is inapplicable to them was never taken in a definite form and cannot, therefore, be now admitted.

I need not refer in detail to the other authorities referred to at the Bar.

In my opinion it has not been shown by the plaintiff that the parties in this case were governed by any law other than the Hindu Law and unless the plaintiff shows that, the Hindu Lal must apply to them.

Now the branch of the Hindu Law applicable is the Mitakshara. If Beni Ram died while joint with his nephew defendant No. 2 Brij Behari as a member of a joint Mitakshara family, the defendant No. 2 Brij Behari will succeed to the exclusion of the daughters of Beni Ram. On the other hand if Beni Ram was a separated member, his daughters would succeed.

It has, however, been urged by Mr. Manohar Lal that the daughters of Beni Ram Bhagwari Bibi and Dhan Bibi (defendant No. 1) became prostitutes and adopted Muhammadanism. Therefore, they cannot succeed. Both these grounds seem to be untenable.

Now, the Hindu Law of Mitakshara, as distinguished from Dayabhag, does not require that an unchaste or immoral daughter should not succeed. Such a condition is laid down in the case of widows, but not in the case of a daughter. Catyayana says—"Let the widow succeed to her husband's wealth provided she be chaste and in default of her, let the daughters inherit if unmarried" so also Brahaspati and Manu, vide Mitakshara, Chapter II, section 2, pl. 2. The point has been fully discussed in Advayappa v. Rudraya (13).

Now, the second ground based upon the conversion of the daughters to Muhammadanism is not tenable in face of the statutory provision contained in the Caste Disabilities Removal Act, XXI of 1850. This Act extended the provision of section 9 of Regulation VII of 1832 which applied to Bengal throughout the territories subject to the Government of the East India Company. It says—"So much of any law or usage now in force within the territories subject to the Government of the East India Company, as inflicts on any person forfeiture of rights or property, or may be held in any way to impair or affect any right of inheritance, by reason of his or her renouncing, or having been excluded from the communion of any religion, or being deprived of caste, shall cease to be enforced as Law in the Courts of the East India Company, and in the Courts established by Royal Charter within the said territories."

The Legislature has virtually set aside the provisions of the Hindu Law which penalise the renunciation of a religion or exclusion from caste.

Mr. Manohar Lal contended that the conversion in this case took place before the death of Beni Ram and, therefore, before the succession opened. There is no substance in this contention. The section is clear upon the point. It repeals any law or usage which inflicts upon any person forfeiture of rights or property or may be held in any way to impair or affect any right of inheritance by reason of his or her renouncing or having been excluded from the communion or religion or being deprived of caste. Therefore, a convert or an outcaste retains his right of inheritance whether the right occurs before or after the conversion to another religion or exclusion from caste; vide Khunt Lal versus Kunwar Gobinda Krishna Narain. (14)

Reference has been made to the Mitakshara, Chapter II, section 10, pl. 1, 2, and 3, and to Manu, Chapter IX, 201 and 202, where he says that, among others, a Patit or degraded person shall not take any share in the paternal property and a person "addicted to vice" shall be excluded from succession. Now, by pl. 8 of section 10 of Chapter II, the above rule is made applicable to the case of females also. A man now-a-days cannot be disqualified from succession by reason of incontinence sub nomine vice. Therefore, a woman also cannot be so disqualified. Whatever be the rule of the Hindu Law, the operation of that rule has been excluded by the aforesaid Statute, so that no longer unchastity or exclusion from caste by reason of conversion would entail forfeiture in right of inheritance. Therefore, the contention of Mr. Manohar Lal must be overruled.

Bhagwari Bibi and Dhan Bibi (defendant No. 1) would not be excluded because of their having adopted the profession of dancing and singing or having become prostitutes, or having adopted Muhammadan religion, provided Beni Ram was separate from his nephew Brij Behari.

RAM PARGASH SINGH v. DHAN BIBI

We are not concerned in this case with the succession to property of the dancing girls Bhagwari Bibi and Dhan Bibi, and consequently I do not propose here to discuss the authorities of the Bombay and the Madras Courts relative to the succession of Naikins (professional dancing girls or prostitutes): Jaya Madav Kalavant v. Manjunath Tai Chandu, (15) Kamakshi v. Nagarathnam, (16) and several other similar authorities cited at the Bar. They are, however, important to show that, in spite of their having adopted the profession of dancing girls and having become prostitutes, the succession was governed by the Hindu Law, and the rule enunciated by Manu "to the nearest sapinda the inheritance belongs" was applied.

The question then is whether Beni Ram was joint with Brij Behari, or was separate from him.

This question was decided by the Munsif upon an appreciation of the evidence in the case. He held that Beni Ram and Brij Behari were joint members of a Mitakshara Hindu family and that the former died while so joint with Brij Behari. Mr. Jayaswal, however, urges that the lower Appellate Court has not validly disposed of this point.

The learned Judicial Commissioner says further it is not satisfactorily proved that defendant No. 2 was separate from Beni Ram in 1907 at the time of the latter's death. It is proved that he was a posthumous son of his father Ragho, and there is evidence that Beni and Ragho, were joint up to the time of Ragho's death at any rate. The evidence of P. W. 6 has been recorded as follows:— 'Brij Behari, defendant No. 2, Ragho and Beni were joint till the death of the latter. Beni Ram was their Karta'. This must be taken to mean up to the death of Beni Ram, as defendant No. 2 was born after the death of Ragho.

In order to understand the aforesaid finding it must be remembered that Beni Ram, Ragho and Lalji were three brothers. Brij Behari is son of Bogho. Lalji became a Muhammadan. He dropped out of the joint family and became separate. Therefore, the evidence of P. W. 6 quoted above would mean that the remaining members of the family, namely, Beni and Ragho and Ragho's son Brij Behari (defendant No. 2) continued to remain joint. Brij Behari was the posthumous son of Ragho. Therefore, the Court below says that the statement of P. W. 6 means that Beni and Brij Behari remained joint up to the death of the former in 1907. The Court, therefore, finds that Brij (defendant No. 2) continued to be the joint member of the family after Lalji ceased to be so on account of his conversion, for his name is not mentioned by P. W. 6 as a member of the joint family.

The share of the three brothers Lalji, Beni and Ragho, was 5-annas 4-pies each. Mr. Jayaswal contends that after Lalji's conversion there was a disruption of the entire joint family and all the members must be deemed to be separate unless the re-union was established, the onus of which was upon the defendant. This is so as is now settled by the authorities; for instance vide Bala Bux v. Rukhmabai (17). Therefore the onus of proving jointness or reunion was upon the defendant. It depends upon the circumstances of each case what amount of evidence is required to discharge this onus. In the present case the evidence of P. W. 6 was taken as sufficient by the Court below to prove the continuity of the jointness of Ragho and Beni inspite of the separation of Lalji. The Court says that there is evidence that Beni and Ragho were joint at the time of Ragho's death. The Munsif has detailed that evidence. The learned Judicial Commissioner's finding is, therefore, based upon evidence. It is true that the learned Judicial Commissioner's statement that it is not satisfactorily proved that defendant No. 2 was separate from Beni Ram in 1907 at the time of the latter's death may reasonably give rise to the contention of Mr. Jayaswal that he had misplaced the onus, but considering the fact that he has referred to the evidence upon which he based his conclusion that Beni Ram, Ragho and Brij Behari were members of a joint family and that Beni and Brij Behari continued to be joint up to the death of Beni Ram, the question of onus does not become important.

GANGA RAM v. DUNI CHAND BHANDARI

It is also true that when one member drops out, there is no presumption that the others reunited. It is equally true that in such a case much evidence may not be required to prove reunion or continuity of jointness as regards the rest of the members of the family.

Considering all these circumstances in the case and also the clear finding of the Munsif, we do not think that sufficient ground has been made out in the present case to remand the case to the Court below for reconsideration of the question.

It has, however, been urged that the Court below has not considered an important document bearing on the point, namely, Exhibit 2, a partition Khasra.

Now, Exhibit 2 has been referred to in the earlier part of the judgment of the Court below. We have looked into that document. It does not prove partition and that may be the reason that it was not relied upon by the appellant in the Court below for the purpose of proving separation and also for the Court below not referring to it while dealing with the question of jointness and separation. The contention of Mr. Jayaswal must, therefore, be overruled.

The plaintiff, according to the finding of both the Courts below, has failed to prove that Dhan Bibi and Bhagvari Bibi succeeded to the property of Beni Ram.

It may be mentioned here that in 1907 when Beni Ram died, his widow Misran Kuer was alive, and even if Beni Ram was separate she succeeded in preference to the daughters Bhagvari Bibi and Dhan Bibi. Brij Behari executed a deed whereby he gave the property to Misran Kuer with a reversion to Kewal, defendant No. 3, son of Dhan Bibi. Misran Kuer, according to the finding of the Munsif, lived till after the termination of the execution proceedings taken out by the plaintiff. Therefore, when the plaintiff took mortgage of the property from the daughters of Beni Ram, Dhan Bibi and Bhagvari Bibi, they had not inherited the property, nor had they inherited even at the time when he obtained the money decree and attached the property in dispute. Therefore, they had no title in the property on the date when the cause of action is said to have arisen to him. Bhagvari Bibi died in 1908. Therefore, she never inherited the property. Dhan Bibi did not assert her right, if any, to the property in question: rather she allowed it to be taken by her son upon the basis of the deed executed by Brij Behari (defendant No 2). Dhan Bibi does not claim her right in the property, and the plaintiff cannot force her to assert her title in order to enable him to proceed against that property. She had, if any, a limited interest which she could relinquish in favour of the next reversioner, her son. She did renounce her inchoate right, if any, by letting her son take the property and have his name registered in the Land Registration Department.

The question of collusion was not gone into in the Court below and her renunciation cannot be questioned on that ground, and until the aforesaid deed executed by Brij Behari is set aside, the plaintiff cannot get a declaration in favour of Dhan Bibi.

For all these reasons the decision of the Court below is upheld and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Master and servant—Termination of service—Notice reasonable, what is

In the absence of an express agreement or established custom to the contrary, a contract of service is terminable by reasonable notice, and there is no authority for holding that a servant hired by the month is entitled to one month's notice. Ordinarily, fifteen days' notice will be sufficient in such a case.

Petition under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, for revision of the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Lahore, dated the 15th March, 1923, decreeing the plaintiff's claim.

Lala Gobind Ram Khanna, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for determination in this case is whether the plaintiff is entitled to a month's salary in lieu of notice. The plaintiff was employed as a monthly servant in the defendant's Ice Factory on a salary of Rs. 60 per mensem. He went on one month's leave without pay on the 4th of June 1922 and on the 29th of June 1922 he was informed that his services would not be required after the expiry of his leave. The suit was based on a specific agreement that the plaintiff would be given one month's notice before his services were dispensed with. The Trial Court found that the specific agreement had not been established but that the plaintiff was entitled to a month's salary in lieu of a month's notice. The defendant has applied for revision against this order to this Court.

I agree with the learned Judge of the Court below in holding that the express agreement has not been proved, but I am unable to agree that the plaintiff as a monthly servant was entitled to a month's notice. The ordinary rule of law is that, in the absence of any express agreement or established custom to the contrary, the contract of service is terminable by reasonable notice. In section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act 15 days is given as the term of notice required to terminate a monthly tenancy. In M. E. Moola v. K. C. Bose (1) it was held that in the case of a clerk hired by the month, 15 days' notice was sufficient. In David v. Superintendent, St. Anthony's High School (2), it was held that there was no authority for holding that a servant paid by the month was entitled to a month's notice. Following the principle laid down in these authorities, I am of opinion that a 15 days' notice would have been quite sufficient in the present case and that as no such notice was given, plaintiff was entitled to 15 days' salary in lieu thereof.

I accept the revision and in modification of the order of the Court below pass a decree in plaintiff's favour against the defendant for Rs. 36 only which also includes 3 days' salary admittedly due for the month of June 1922. Parties shall bear their own costs in this Court.

Plaintiff sued to recover arrears of rent from the defendant and based his claim on a Kabuliat alleged to have been executed by the defendant. In addition to the Kabuliat he sought to prove that the defendant had been paying rent to him as a tenant. His suit was dismissed by the lower Appellate Court on the ground that he had failed to prove the Kabuliat; confirming decree of the Assistant Collector, 1st Class, Sultanpur, dated the 1st May 1923.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastawa, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant, who is the Taluqdar of Hasanpur, in the District of Sultanpur, sued the defendant for arrears of rent from 1326 to 1329 F., at the rate of Rs. 225-6-0 per annum, on the allegation that the defendant had been in possession of about 40 bighas of land as a mere tenant. The defendant-respondent set up the defence that the land in question was his sir, that he paid no rent, and that he is not the tenant of the plaintiff. In the course of the pleadings, the plaintiff set up a Kabuliat, by which he attempted to prove the defendant's tenancy. The first Court rejected the Kabuliat, and this decision was upheld by the lower Appellate Court, so that there is no second appeal in regard to this document. Other issues which were framed by the first Court, raised questions of whether the defendant had ever paid rent as a mere tenant to the plaintiff, how much rent, if any, was in arrears, and whether there was any contract between the parties for the payment of rent. Some evidence was produced to show that there was a fixed rate of rent for the plots in suit, though a lower one than that claimed by the plaintiff on the basis of the Kabuliat, but the first Court concluded that no rent had been paid by the defendant, and that the entries in the Patwari's papers were not reliable. In his grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court, the appellant not only appealed against the decision rejecting the Kabuliat, but referred to the entries in the Patwari's papers. The lower Appellate Court agreed with the first Court in rejecting the Kabuliat, and refused to consider the other grounds of appeal, for the reason that the appellant ought not to be allowed to alter the nature of his suit, and obtain a decree for arrears of rent for use and occupation of the plots in suit. Against this decision the present appeal lies.

The learned Judge appears to me to have taken rather too strict a view of the law. He has referred to the decisions in Jang Bahadur Singh v. Ehsan Ali (1) and Bindeshwari Pra- sai Singh v. Bisheshwar Singh (2). Both these decisions, by the way, are previous in date to the amendment of the Oudh Rent Act enacted in 1923. The facts in Jang Bahadur Singh v. Ehsan Ali (1) were certainly distinguishable from those in the present case and the learned Judicial Commissioner stated in his judgment: "In order that a suit for use and occupation may be maintainable, one of the conditions which must be fulfilled is that the defendant is in possession intending to occupy as a tenant." This condition was not found to exist in that particular case. In Bindeshwari Prasad Singh v. Bisheshwar Singh (2), it was held that a Court cannot take action under section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act, in case the agreement to pay rent is not proved. In the present suit, it was the appellant's case that the defendant had agreed to pay rent. He relied, in the first place, on the Kabuliat, but in the event of his being able to prove that the defendant has actually been in possession of the plots in suit, and has actually paid rent to him for them as a tenant, he would at any rate be able to point to an implied agreement to pay rent, and to claim arrears of rent for any years in which rent had not been paid. There is certainly a finding by the first Court that rent has not been paid. The appellant challenged that finding in his grounds of appeal, and it was open to the lower Appellate Court either to uphold or to reverse that finding. If the lower Appellate Court had reversed that finding, the result would have been that, the relations of landlord and tenant would have been found to subsist between the parties, and in this case, I do not think that the case could have been dismissed on the technical ground that the plaintiff had, in the first place, relied on the Kabuliat. The appellant admits that if there were a definite finding that the defendant is not a mere tenant, but has some kind of proprietary right in the plots, the suit will have to be dismissed; but he complains that there is no such definite finding, and that he does not know where he stands. It is objected on behalf of the respondent, that the plaintiff-appellant did not sue under section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act, and that if he wanted to set up that case,

(1) 5 O. C. 222.

(2) 30 Ind. Cas. 499; 2 O. L. J. 883.

BHAGWANTA KOER v. ZAMIR AHMED KHAN

he should have done so at the earliest possible moment; but it appears to me that the main question between the parties has, from the very beginning, been whether the relation of landlord and tenant subsists between them. The case set up in the plaint was that the defendant was a mere tenant. The defendant denied this, and claimed to have some kind of proprietary title. The plaintiff not only set up his Kabuliat, but attempted to prove that rent had been paid to him by the defendant. The case based on the Kabuliat has definitely failed, but there is, what seems to me, to be a perfectly legitimate alternate case, namely, that the defendant was in occupation of the land with the consent of the plaintiff, and had been paying rent to him, that he is, therefore, to be treated as a tenant, and whether the actual section of the Oudh Rent Act that is to be applied to the case is section 32 (A), section 32 (B) or section 127, it should be disposed of on its merits, and not on the technical ground taken by the learned Judge. The first Court has already come to a finding, namely, that no rent has been paid by the defendant to the plaintiff, and that the defendant had not been proved to be a tenant of the plaintiff. The appeal against this finding has not been decided by the District Judge. I, therefore, order that the suit be remanded to the lower Appellate Court under O. XLIII, r. 23 of Civil Procedure Code for a decision on this point. If the learned Judge comes to the conclusion that the defendant has been paying rent to the plaintiff, and is a tenant of his, he will be able to come to a further decision as to whether a decree for arrears of rent can be given to the plaintiff. If, on the other hand, he finds that the relationship of landlord and tenant has never existed between the parties, he will be able to dispose of the appeal on the basis of that finding, and the appellant will know in what position he is in in the event of his deciding to sue for any relief other than that claimed in the present suit. The appellant will receive costs of this appeal from the respondent.

Appeals from an order of the District Judge, Shahabad, dated the 19th February, 1923.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, Sambhu Saran, and Kaliaspasi, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Naresh Ch. Sinha and D. N. Varma, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Adami, J.—These appeals are directed against an order passed in execution proceedings by the District Judge of Shahabad disallowing certain objections raised by the judgment-debtors, the present appellants.

It appears that a decree was obtained against the appellants in a mortgage-suit on the 23rd October 1903. There was an appeal to this Court which was decided in 1906, and then an appeal to their Lordships of the Privy Council which was decided on the 26th November 1912. The final decree for the sale of the mortgaged properties following the decree of the Privy Council was passed on the 5th February 1916.

The original decree-holders, Lala Shamlanand Sahai, Babu Raghubir Saran and Babu Ganga Saran, each had a one-third interest in the decree. Execution of the decree was applied for on the 11th March 1916 by these decree-holders, and from that date onwards the proceedings followed the usual slow protracted course, every effort being made to delay the inevitable sale, till the 7th June 1919, when Lala Shamlanand Sahai filed a petition to the effect that he had sold his one-third share in the decree to Zamir Ahmad Khan, Neamat Khan, Mehdi Hussain Khan, Sayed Khan and Babu Muhammad Khan, by a sale-deed dated the 5th June 1919, and prayed that these gentlemen should be substituted as decree-holders in his place. Another petition for substitution was made in respect of the one-third share originally belonging to Babu Ganga Saran, which had been sold to Zamir Ahmad Khan and others. Babu Raghubir Saran had already sold his share to Thakur Adit Prasad, and the latter had re-sold it to Zamir Ahmad Khan and others. On the 7th June 1919, the purchasers, Zamir Ahmad Khan and the other gentlemen named above together with Sadey Khan filed a petition to the effect that they had purchased the share of Lala Shyamlanand Sahai, and also the share of Ganga Saran which Ramnath Upadhyaya had previously purchased and the share of Babu Raghubir Saran which Thakur Adit Prasad had previously purchased, and had thus purchased the entire decree. They prayed that they might be substituted as representatives of the decree holders and that execution proceedings might be duly taken.

On the above petitions order was passed that they should be put up on the date fixed, that is to say, the 14th June. On the 14th

June order was passed: "Let the names of the purchasers be substituted for the original decree-holders. This execution proceeding will be struck off after making the purchasers parties, so that they may institute fresh proceedings in execution."

The assignees of the decree did not, however, make any fresh application for proceedings in execution until the 13th June, 1922, and when this application was made the present appellants, who are subsequent mortgagees of the properties, raised the objections, (1) that the assignees of the decrees who were seeking execution were mere farzidars of the judgment-debtors; (2) that the application was made more than three years after the last step-in-aid of execution was taken on the 7th June 1919, and was thus barred under Article 182 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act; (3) that if Article 183 applied, the proceedings were bad owing to non-compliance with the provisions of r. 15 of O. XLV of the Civil Procedure Code, and (4) that failure to issue the notices required by r. 16 of O. XXI vitiated the proceedings.

The learned District Judge found that the objectors had failed to show that the purchasers of the decree were farzidars of the judgment-debtors; (2) that the date from which time began to run under Article 182 was the 14th June 1919 and, therefore, the application on the 13th June 1922 was not barred, but that (3) Article 183 applied since the final decree was merely a ministerial act and the execution was really the enforcement of the order of His Majesty in Council, so no question of limitation arose in the case. He held that the objection with regard to non-compliance with rule 15 of Order XLV could not be now raised since no such objection had been made at the first application for execution, (4) with regard to the objection as to absence of notices under r. 16 of O. XXI the learned District Judge pointed out that the order for substitution was passed in the presence of the transferees and this objection not having been specifically taken in the pleadings no onus lay on the applicants for execution to show that the order was passed in the presence of the judgment debtors. Furthermore, the object of r. 16 of O. XXI was being carried out in the hearing and consideration of the objections before the Court. The District Judge, therefore, allowed the objections and it is against his order that this appeal has been made, the same legal objections being raised in this Court.

The finding of the learned District Judge that, if Article 182 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act applies, it must be held that the last step-in-aid of execution in this case was taken on June 14th 1919, and not on June 7th 1919, is, I think, wrong. Clause (5) to Article 182 states definitely that time is to run from the date of applying in accordance with law to the proper Court to take some step-in-aid of execution. The application was made on June 7th, though the order for substitution was made on June 14th. It has been laid down in the case of Raj Behari Chakravarti v. Kalekar Gupta (1), and in Mohai Mundal v. Mesurudeen Mollah (2), that in cases of this kind time runs from the date when an application is presented to the Court and not from the date on which the applications is considered and disposed of by the Court. Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick's contention for the appellants on this point must be upheld; but the point is one of purely academic interest in this case, and cannot affect the decision of this appeal as I will proceed to show.

In the first place, I may note that, even if it were held that Article 182 applied in the present case and not Article 183, it would seem that execution proceedings to be taken on the application of June 13th, 1922, would be merely a continuation of the proceedings which resulted in the order of June 14th, 1919, and so would not be barred even if Article 182 applied. When the petitions for substitution of the transferees were filed on June 7th, 1919, and were granted on June 14th there was no reason why the execution should not have proceeded with the transferees substituted for the decree-holders; there was no necessity to strike off the execution proceedings. The proceedings were struck off without any default on the part of the decree-holders or their transferees. Under the circumstances, I am of opinion that the subsequent proceeding should be held to be in continuation of the previous one and the question of limitation will not arise. In this opinion I am supported by the decision of this Court in the case of Golab Kuer v. Mohammad Zaffar Hassan (3), to which I was a party. There it was held that an application under O. XXI, r. 16 made during the pendency of execution proceedings was not an application for fresh execution but an application for the continuation of the pending execution case. Das, J., pointed out that O. XXI, r. 16 required notice of the application for execution, and not of the assignment, to be given to the transferor and judgment-debtor, and, therefore, when the assignee applies during the pendency of the execution case to continue it, he does not apply for fresh execution and no notice is required.

(2) 9 Ind. Cas. 218; 18 C. L. J. 26.

BHAGWANTA KOER v. ZAMIR AHMED KHAN

In the second place, the question is whether Article 182 applies or, as held by the District Judge, Article 183. The appellants have not placed before us the order of His Majesty in Council passed on appeal in 1912, so that we do not know its precise terms. We only know from the order of the District Judge that the final decree was passed by the District Judge in 1916 in accordance with the order of the Privy Council. The preliminary decree after the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council was an order of His Majesty in Council, and, as pointed out by the learned District Judge, the preparation of the final decree was purely a ministerial act to enable the order of His Majesty in Council to be enforced. I do not think that it can be contended that the execution proceedings were not taken in order to enforce the order of His Majesty in Council. After a consideration of the decisions of the Calcutta High Court in Lachmun Prasad Singh v. Kishun Persad Singh (4), Futteh Narain Chowdhury v. Chumkabati Chowdhra (5), and of this Court in Tribukram Deo Narayan Singh v. Badri Missir (6), there is no doubt left in my mind. It may be noted that the original decree was obtained in the District Judge's Court in a suit under the Transfer of Property Act.

Under Article 183 twelve years' limitation in this case would begin to run from the date of the order of His Majesty in Council; that is to say, from November 26th, 1912; so the application for execution which is now the subject of this appeal would be within time.

But Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick has argued that the procedure laid down in r. 45 of O. XLV of the Civil Procedure Code has not been complied with; that is to say, no petition under that rule was filed before this Court to enable it to transmit the order of His Majesty in Council to the Court of the District Judge for execution, and that the provisions of r. 15, O. XLV, being mandatory, the present application for execution must be dismissed.

The contention that the provisions of r. 15 are mandatory, and failure to comply with them renders an application for execution liable to dismissal is not open to question. I need only refer to the case of Tribukram Deo Narayan Singh v. Badri Missir (6), cited above, but it is to be noted that in the present case application was made for execution on March 11th, 1916 and execution was ordered. No objection on the ground that the provisions of r. 15 of O. XLV had not been complied with was made then, nor at any time until the execution proceedings were struck off on June 14th, 1919, though countless objections on other grounds were constantly being put forward. We have no papers before us to show whether, in fact, a petition was filed and the procedure required by r. 15 of O. XLV was followed; all we know is that the order of His Majesty in Council must have been transmitted to the District Judge, for he proceeded to put it into execution.

I agree with the learned District Judge that the objection, first made at this late stage cannot be allowed to succeed; it ought to have been taken at the first application for execution which was made in 1916.

Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick's third contention is that the application for execution ought to be dismissed because notices under O. XXI, r. 16 were not issued to the transferors and judgment-debtors, the provisions of that rule being mandatory. The decisions in Hassun Goolam Hussein v. Dayabhai (7), Gulzari Lal v. Daya Ram (8), and Nolan Das

v. Luchman Singh (9), are authorities for the proposition that the provisions of the rule are of a mandatory character and that non-compliance with them renders all proceedings in execution void. In the present case it is evident that the general necessity for such notice was known to the applicants for execution for in their application they stated: "The above purchasers were substituted for the original decree-holders in the previous execution case on 14th June, 1919 in the presence of all the parties. Hence, notice under O. XXI, r. 16, Civil Procedure Code, is not necessary".

That the transferors had notice cannot be gainsaid; they themselves filed petitions for substitution of the names of the purchasers. The judgment-debtors, too, were before the Court and must have had notice. The District Judge points out that the objection regarding O. XXI, r. 16 had not been specifically taken in the pleadings, and, therefore, there was no onus upon the applicants to show that the order of substitution was passed in the presence of judgment-debtors. It cannot be suggested that the judgment-debtors had no knowledge of the substitution made in the previous execution proceedings before the fresh application was made. In any case, the object of r. 16, namely, to give the judgment-debtors an opportunity to attack the substitution of assignees of the decree, has been fully met, for the present appellants put in their objection and it was considered before any further steps were taken towards the execution of the decree. If it is shown that the judgment-debtors had notice by being present when the petitions for substitution were being considered by the Court, the fact that written notice was not served on them will not nullify the proceedings.

To conclude the matter I may again refer to the decision of this Court in the case of Golab Kuer v. Mohammad Jaffar Hasan (3), where it was held that it is not notice of the assignment but notice of the application for execution of the decree which is required by the proviso to rule 16. In this case there is no doubt that notice of the fresh application was given to the appellants for they appeared and objected. Therefore, I cannot uphold the contention of Mr. Mullick.

(9) 68 Ind. Cas. 884 ; 2 L. 28 ; 8 L. J. 434.

On behalf of the judgment-debtors Nos. 12 and 13 Mr. Kailasapati has urged the same legal objections as were raised by Mr. Mullick and with which I have dealt, but he has a further objection with regard to the District Judge's finding on the question whether the respondents, purchasers of the decree, were farsidders of the judgment-debtors. He complains that his clients were not allowed time to secure the presence of some of their witnesses with regard to this question.

It appears from the order sheet that on July 22nd, 1922, these two judgment-debtors asked for time to file their objection, and obtained time till August 11th when their objection was filed. On October 25th the parties were directed to come ready with their witnesses on December 1st. On that date the present respondents were ready but an objector asked for time which was given, but it was ordered that no further adjournment costs would be allowed. On January 5th, 1923 the objectors filed lists of witnesses, who were to be summoned on deposit of diet expenses. The deposit was not made until January 25th when summonses were ordered to issue for February 16th. On the 16th February the objector's witnesses did not appear and the Court rejected their petition for more time and proceeded to hear the case. The petition for time on the 16th February stated that, in spite of service of summons, the witnesses had not come, and the petitioners heard that some witnesses were ill while others had gone to celebrate marriages. In my opinion the District Judge acted rightly in refusing further time; he had previously given warning to the objectors, and no good or sufficient reason was given for the absence of the witnesses. The original decree was passed in 1903 and the order on appeal to their Lordships of the Privy Council in 1912; it was plainly the duty of the Court to prevent the further protraction of the execution proceedings.

As a result of my findings on the points put forward by the appellants, the appeals must be dismissed with costs.

Bucknill, J.—I agree.

*Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 177—

Application to bring legal representatives on record—Limitation.*

The words "six months" opposite to Art. 177 in Sch. I to the Limitation Act have not been altered by anything contained in Act XXVI of 1920 and the period of limitation for making an application to implead the legal representatives of a deceased defendant or of a deceased respondent is still six months.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 4th November, 1921, rejecting the application for bringing the heirs of the deceased Bija Ram on the record as defendants in his place.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Appellants.

Nemo, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 17th of June, 1921 plaintiffs obtained an ex-parte decree for Rs. 6,940-against Nanak Chand-Bija Ram from the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge at Gurdaspur. On the 30th of July 1921 the decree was put into execution and Bija Ram's property was attached. Thereupon, on the 30th of July 1921, Lakh, a son of Bija Ram, made an application to the executing Court for the release of the attachment on the ground that Bija Ram had died on the 4th of April 1921, and that the decree against a dead person was a nullity. The plaintiffs denied that Bija Ram had died on the 4th of April 1921, as on the 21st of May 1921 his Counsel had appeared in the case and had not brought to the notice of the Court that his client was dead. The Court framed an issue as to the date of the death of Bija Ram and adjourned the case for the evidence of the parties. On the 20th October 1921, the decree-holders stated that they had no objection to the ex parte decree being set aside and the case being proceeded with against the heirs of Bija Ram. They also made an application on that date that the three sons of Bija Ram be brought on the record as his legal representatives. On the 4th of November 1921, the Court passed an order to the effect that as no application to implead the legal representatives of Bija Ram had been made within three months of the date of his death, the suit had abated as against them and that the application of the 20th of October 1921 was barred by limitation. The decree was allowed to stand against Nanak Chand alone and the application for bringing the heirs of the deceased Bija Ram on the record as his legal representatives was dismissed.

Against this decision the plaintiffs have come up in appeal to this Court and it has been urged on their behalf that Act XXVI of 1920, which has reduced the period of limitation from six months to three months in the case of an application for bringing the heirs of a deceased plaintiff on the record, does not apply to the case of defendants and that the learned Judge of the Court below has erred in holding otherwise. There is no doubt that this contention is correct and that Article 177 of the Indian Limitation Act, which relates to the case of a defendant has been left entirely untouched by the Amending Act of 1920. This question is now concluded by the case of Gobind Das v. Rup Kishan, (1) in which it has been held that the words "six months" opposite Article 177 in the Indian Limitation Act have not been altered by anything contained in the Amending Act of 1920 and that the period of limitation for making an application to implead the legal representatives of a deceased defendant or of a deceased respondent is still six months. There is, however, nothing on the record to show when Bija Ram died. The only application to bring his legal representatives on the record is dated 20th October, 1921 and if

SAVITRI v. MADHORAO

Bija Ram died on the 4th of April 1921, as alleged by his sons, even this application would be barred by limitation. The learned Vakil for the appellants urges that Bija Ram really died on some date in the month of May 1921, and that even if he died on the 4th of April, as alleged by his sons, the plaintiffs had sufficient cause for not making the application in time and that the delay ought to have been excused under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act. There is neither any evidence nor any finding by the learned Judge of the Court below on any of these points, and it is, therefore, necessary that the case should go back for a determination of these questions.

I accept the appeal and return the case to the learned District Judge for a fresh decision in accordance with law after parties have been allowed full opportunity to produce evidence on the two points above-mentioned. Costs shall abide the result.

Where in a redemption suit it is found that the mortgagor had made a valid deposit of the amount due under the mortgage which was not accepted by the mortgagee, the Court should take an account of the profits recovered by the mortgagee from the mortgaged property during the period from the date of the deposit to at least the filing of the redemption

Mr. D. P. Tiwari, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT—The appellants, of whom one is now dead, sued for the mesne profits of certain fields for the years 1328, 1329 and 1330 Fasli, that is, from June 1918 to June 1921. In the petition of appeal mention is also made of a claim for the profits for the year 1331 Fasli. That is admittedly a mistake as the claim for that year was not made in the plaint, though it might have been made, as the plaintiffs did not regain possession of their property till the 24th of January 1922. The land was held by the defendants under a mortgage for Rs. 500 of which one of the terms was that they should take the whole of the profits in lieu of interest. It appears that on the 13th of December 1917 the mortgagors made a tender of the whole amount due on the mortgage but this was refused. On the 24th of July 1920 they deposited the same amount in Court under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. This was also refused as insufficient and on the 21st of December 1920 they filed a suit for redemption. The tender made in 1917 was pleaded in that suit but the matter was allowed to drop out of sight, and it was held that the amount deposited in 1920 was the full amount then due. That is a negation of the plea that a tender of the full amount was made in 1917 and that plea cannot be put forward again now.

It appears to have been held by both Courts in that case that the deposit made in 1920 ended the mortgagee's right to possession and stopped the running of interest. None the less, the amount realized by the mortgagees after the date of the deposit was not taken in reduction of the amount due on the mortgage. The decree, which is dated the 26th of February 1921, declares that the amount due on the mortgage on that day is about Rs. 50 less than the Rs. 500 deposited and orders sale of the property on the 26th of August, 1921 in default of payment of that sum on or before that day.

It is not possible to treat this redemption suit as one for ejectment as was done in Paramsukh v. Yadoji (1). In form and substance and all essentials it was a suit for redemption, even in the decree with its totally unnecessary period of six months. It is beyond doubt, as was held in Kashi Pershad v. Bajrang Prasad (2), and Ram Din v. Bhup Singh (3), that the Court could and should have taken an account of the profits recovered by the mortgagees from the property during the period after the deposit up to at least the filing of the redemption suit, and should have reduced the price of redemption by the amount of those profits. It follows that no separate suit would lie ordinarily for the recovery of that amount.

In this case, however, there are circumstances which make such a suit tenable. From the record of the redemption suit it appears that the plaintiffs claimed that the mortgage was to be redeemed on the withdrawal by the mortgagees of the Rs. 500 deposited by them and did not claim any reduction of the amount on account of the profits realized by the mortgagees since the date of the deposit. The last paragraph of the plaint, after a statement of the relief sought, is as follows: "Permission to bring a suit against the defendant for damages may be given." The mortgagees in their pleadings said nothing about those profits, as they claimed that the price of redemption was a sum far exceeding them and the amount deposited. No issue was framed on the point and the Court left the profits, or "damages," as the plaint calls them, entirely out of sight and consideration.

It can in these circumstances fairly be held that the Court impliedly gave the plaintiffs permission under r. 1 of O. XXIII to abandon that part of their claim with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of it. There is nothing in that rule demanding that the permission should be given expressly, and the inference that it was given without being recorded is in this case inevitable. For those reasons I hold that this suit can be maintained, but that it can succeed only in respect of the profits of the year 1330 Fasl, that is, for the period subsequent to the date of the deposit, which was the 24th of July 1920.

The amount of profit realized by the respondents has not been found in either of the Courts below, though the inconvenience and impropriety of leaving such questions undecided in appealable cases have often been pointed out. The question, therefore, falls for decision here under section 103 of the Civil Procedure Code, though every one connected with the case seems to have been so immersed in abstruse questions, of law that did not arise that the material on which it has to be decided is scanty. In the plaint it is stated that the income from the land was Rs. 125 in each of the years in suit. The area is just over 34 acres and the rent is Rs. 45 to which figure it was raised at the last Settlement from Rs. 25. The defendants made the usual ridiculous statement that the profit they got from the land, after deducting all expenditure, except the rent, was Rs. 50 each year, leaving a net profit of five rupees. Such a statement only defeats its own object by its own absurdity.

The third witness for the defendants seems to say that he is holding the land now at Rs. 50 per annum but that is a low rate as it has been left fallow for two or three years, and in the year in question it would have fetched Rs. 100 or Rs. 125 or Rs. 150. The defendants, in accordance with the strange practice that has grown up, gave no evidence at all. After the plaintiffs had given evidence tending to show prima facie that the letting value was somewhere about Rs. 125, it was for the defendants to show that it was less. As they have not even attempted to do so the finding must be that it was Rs. 125. This is further supported by the fact that the defendants were content and even anxious to keep the land in lieu of interest on Rs. 500 for as long as possible. At the very ordinary rate of 2 per cent. per mensem that interest would be Rs. 120 per annum.

KISHUNDEO v. JAGLAL SAHU

The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be set aside. In place of it a decree will issue ordering the defendants to pay to the plaintiffs the sum of Rs. 125 together with interest thereon at 1 per cent. per mensem from the 1st of June 1920 till the full amount is paid. The rest of the claim has failed only through technical defects in the conduct of the case. The defendants will, therefore, pay all the plaintiffs' costs and their own in all three Courts.

JAGLAL SAHU—PETITIONER—
RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 68—Mortgage suit—Money decree—Construction of decree—Judgment and pleadings, whether can be referred to.

One of the reliefs claimed in a mortgage suit asked for a direction to make the amount due under the mortgage-bond a charge upon the surplus sale-proceeds of one of the mortgaged properties which had been sold. Toward the end of the paragraph it was stated that the balance of the decretal amount may be ordered to be realised from the property and the person of the defendant or defendants who may be liable. The Court refused a mortgage decree and passed a decree under s. 68 of the Transfer of Property Act in the following terms :—"The suit for Rs. 5,877-10-0 with proportionate costs be decreed in terms of relief 5 of the plaint. He is further declared to have a charge on the surplus sale-proceeds which is in deposit in the Collectorate. I allow interest on the sum decreed at Rs. 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the decree till realisation of the same."

Held, that only that portion of the relief No. 5 of the plaint was granted by the decree which related to the creation of a charge on the surplus sale-proceeds with respect to the amount due under the mortgage-bond, and that the decree did not by implication include a direction that the balance of the decretal amount could be recovered from the persons and properties of the defendants who were purchasers of the mortgaged property and were not expressly made personally liable under the decree.

Where a decree is clear in its terms and is not in any way ambiguous, it does not require to be interpreted in the light of the pleadings and the judgment.

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Patna, dated the 3rd February 1923.

Mr. Sundar Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. L. M. Ganguli, for the Respondent.

Jwala Prasad, J.—The only question that arises in this appeal is the construction of the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge of Patna in Suit No. 68 of 1920. The decree-holders, who are appellants before us, in execution of that decree sought to proceed against defendants Nos. 1 to 3 praying for attachment and sale of their properties and for their arrest. Defendant No. 2, Jaglal Sahu, objected to the execution on the ground that in terms thereof he or his properties could not be proceeded against. Jaglal was a purchaser from defendant No. 3, he having purchased the property from one who was an auction-purchaser at a revenue-sale of the mortgaged properties Deokali. The decree-holder brought this suit to recover the money due under an usufructuary mortgage-bond under section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act and asked for a mortgage-decree. He also in the alternative prayed for a money-decree upon the ground that he was dispossessed of the properties given to him under the zerpeshgi deed of the 5th April, 1898. Deokali, one of the mortgaged properties, was sold for arrears of cesses and Government revenue and purchased by Deonandan, defendant No. 3, who in his turn sold it to Jaglal defendant No. 2. Bajidpur the other mortgaged property was sold to defendant No. 4 by the Receiver appointed in an insolvency proceeding by the Calcutta High Court with respect to the properties of Khalilur Rahman, son of defendant No. 1, the mortgagor.

The suit was resisted by defendant Nos. 2 and 4. The Court refused to grant a mortgage-decree but held that the mortgagee-decree-holder was entitled to have a charge upon the surplus sale proceeds in the hands of the Collector under the revenue-sale in respect of the money due under the zerpeshgi deed. In the result, the Court gave a money decree to the mortgagee-decree-holder. That decree apparently was under section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act as is expressly mentioned by the Court in its judgment. The decree, therefore, could not be against defendants Nos. 2 and 4 who were only purchasers of the mortgaged properties. It could only be passed against the mortgagor upon his personal covenant to pay the mortgage-money. Defendants Nos. 2 and 4 never entered into any agreement or contract to personally pay the mortgage-debt to the mortgagee. There is no direction in the decree itself making the respondent (defendant No. 2) personally liable for the decree-debt. The learned Vakil for the appellant wants me to read into the decree the words which are not there and this he wants to do in the light of relief No. 5 in the plaint quoted in the recital portion of the decree. In that paragraph 5 the appellant asked for a direction to make the amount due under the mortgage bond a charge upon the surplus sale proceeds of Mauza Deokali and for attachment of the same by means of an injunction. Towards the end the paragraph he states that "the balance of the decretal amount may be ordered to be realised from the person and the property of the defendants or defendant who may be liable. The decree states as follows. "It is ordered and decreed that a modified decree be passed for Rs. 5,877-10-0 with proportionate costs as prayed for in para 5 of the plaint and that the balance left after the payment of the Government Revenue out of the proceeds of the sale, by the Collectorate of a portion of the Ijara properties lying in deposit under Chalans Nos. 251 and 9 dated the 26th March 1919 and 22nd April 1919, respectively, be made liable for the satisfaction of the decree and that the interest on the decretal amount be charged at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date of decree till the date of realisation, decretal amount Rs. 5,877-10-0 and that the sum of Rs. 651-8-0 be paid by the defendants to the plaintiffs on account of the costs of this suit, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from this date to the date of realisation."

The learned Vakil contends that as mention is made in the decree to the relief in para. 5 quoted above the true interpretation of the decree is that the concluding prayer of that paragraph asking for an order to realise the decretal amount from the person and property of the defendants must be held to have been granted. It appears that the reference to paragraph 5 is in relation to the prayer about the direction of the Court for making the decretal amount a charge upon the surplus sale proceeds of Mauza Deokali. It in no way refers to the concluding portion of paragraph 5, for in that case it would have specified which of the defendants were personally liable for the decree for the prayer of the plaintiffs was that the decree be passed against the defendants or such of them as may be liable. The Court did not apparently grant this prayer for a personal decree against the defendants. It is conspicuous that the direction portion of the decree with respect to the amount of Rs 5,877 does not make any mention of the defendants. This omission can only mean that the prayer for the personal liability of the defendants was disallowed and unless there was express direction making the defendants personally liable the decree cannot be executed against them or their property. This interpretation of the decree is in accordance with the judgment. It has already been shown that the Court in its decision held that the plaintiffs were entitled only to a money decree under section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act. The order portion of the decree runs as follows:

"The suit for Rs. 5,88-10-0 with proportionate costs be decreed in terms of relief 5 of the plaint. He is further declared to have a charge on the surplus sale proceeds which is in deposit in the Collectorate. I allow interest on the sum decreed at Rs. 6 per cent per annum from the date of the decree till realisation of the same."

Therefore, only that portion of the relief No. 5 of the plaint was granted which related to the creation of a charge on the surplus sale proceeds with respect to the amount due under the mortgage-bond. No doubt, defendant

SURJI NARAIN MISRA v. ULAND SINGH

No 1 being the executant of the bond and the decree having been passed under section 68 must be deemed to have been made personally liable under the decree.

Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 could not under the law be personally made liable and unless there was express direction in the decree it cannot be construed by reference to relief No. 5 of the plaint on the judgment as having made those defendants personally liable. Therefore, the view taken by the Court below seems to be correct. No doubt, the defendants were made liable for the costs of Rs 651-8-0 under the express direction of the decree. Mr. Ganguli on behalf of the respondent contends that the direction in the decree about costs read with the judgment and the pleadings would show that all the defendants could not be made liable for the costs. He cites Bajjnath Sahai v. Gajadhar Prasad (1) in order to interpret the decree in the light of the pleadings and the judgment. That case does not in the least help him. The decree here is clear in its terms. It is not in any way ambiguous; it makes the defendants (in the plural) liable for Rs. 651-8 specifically mentioned. Therefore, the order by the Court below is modified to this extent that all the defendants are liable for the costs mentioned in the decree of Rs. 651-8-0 and for this the appellant is entitled to proceed against the personal properties of all the defendants.

The appeal is dismissed. In the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1909), ss. 47, 49, O. XXI r. 2—Sale of decree—Execution by purchaser—Plea that decree was satisfied before sale—Certification, absence of, effect of—Failure to certify, whether amounts to fraud.

Where a decree is sold in execution of another decree and the purchaser seeks to execute it against the judgment-debtor, it is open to the latter to plead that the decree had been satisfied by him before it was sold, although the satisfaction was not certified in accordance with the provisions of r. 2 of O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code; sub-r. (3) of r. 2 of the order is no bar to such a plea which must be enquired into by the Court under s. 47 of the Code.

Trimback Ramkrishna Ranade v. Hari Laxman Ranade, 7 Ind. Cas. 910; 31 B. 575; 12 B. L. R. 686; relied on.

The mere omission on the part of a decree-holder to certify satisfaction of the decree does not amount to fraud.

Appeal against the order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 18th July 1923, confirming the order of the Munsif, Fyzabad, dated the 16th December 1922.

JUDGMENT.—On the 12th March 1920, one Garuludhwaja had obtained a simple money decree against Janardan. Subsequently, Janardan obtained a similar decree against Rudra Prasad and others on the 15th December 1921. The former decree was put in execution by attachment of the latter on the 6th January 1922. In pursuance of the execution proceeding mentioned above, injunction was issued to Rudra Prasad but no service of that injunction was effected on him. A similar injunction was issued to Janardan and it was personally served on him. Finally, the latter decree was put up for sale and was purchased by Suraj Narain on the 20th April 1922. Suraj Narain is the son of Janardan already mentioned. On the 26th October 1922, Suraj Narain filed an application purporting to be under O. XXI, r. 16, of the Code of Civil Procedure. He claims that he is the transferee by operation of law of the decree, dated the 15th December 1921, in virtue of the purchase made by him at the auction-sale and prays for execution of that decree against the judgment-debtors, Rudra Prasad and others. Notice of Suraj Narain's application was given by the Court, amongst others, to Rudra Prasad. On the 25th November 1922, Rudra Prasad filed objections to the execution sought for by Suraj Narain. His main ground is, that the decree of the 15th December 1921 became void by reason of the fact that it had been fully satisfied on the 25th March 1922 and consequently there was nothing left for Suraj Narain to purchase. In support of his objection Rudra Prasad filed a receipt executed by Janardan on the 25th March 1922. Both Courts have found the receipt to be a genuine document and they have further found that it was executed for consideration and has the effect of satisfying the decree of the 15th December 1921 in its entirety. On this finding Suraj Narain's application has been rejected. This is an appeal by Suraj Narain against the last mentioned order of rejection.

SURJI NARAIN MISRA v. ULAND SINGH

The sole ground on which the appeal was supported at the hearing is, that the plea of payment made on the 25th March 1922 in satisfaction of the decree of the 15th December 1921 should not have been admitted by the Courts below, the plea being barred by limitation provided by Article 174 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and consequently the Court being precluded from recognising the payment by sub-r. (3) of r. 2 of O. XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure. The lower Appellate Court has rejected this argument for the reason that the decree-holder, Janardan, had committed a fraud on the judgment-debtor, Rudra Prasad, by not certifying the payment in question to the Court within the time allowed by law.

Sub-r. (3) of r. 2 of O. XXI mentioned above is as follows :—"A payment or adjustment, which has not been "certified or recorded as aforesaid, shall not be recognised by any Court executing the decree." The view taken by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge, assessed at its highest value, comes to this, that the mere omission to certify on the part of the decree-holder amounts to a fraud and, therefore, sub-r. (3) quoted above is no bar to the recognition of the payment even when it is not certified within limitation and in accordance with sub-r. (1) of the same rule. If this view is correct, it has the result of obliterating the rule altogether. The rule is intended to exclude recognition of any payment or adjustment of a decree out of Court if there has been an omission to certify the payment or adjustment to the Court and if all such omissions are tantamount to a fraud sub-r.(3) would cease to have any effect whatsoever. To me it seems that the true interpretation of sub-r. (3) was made, if I may say so, by Heaton, J., in the case Trimback Ramkrishna Ranade v. Hari Laxman Ranade (1). Rule 2 of O. XXI stands in place of section 258 of the repealed Code. After quoting the final clause of that section, with which corresponds sub-r. (3) quoted above, the learned Judge observed as follows :—

"The purpose of section 258 is that the Court shall have complete knowledge of all that is done towards the satisfaction of its decree. When an application for execution is presented, the Court enquires from its own records what has been previously done towards satisfaction. What it does not find on its own records it does not recognise: in this sense, that it at the outset assumes that what is not recorded as paid or adjusted, still remains unpaid or unadjusted. But it is still open to the judgment-debtor to assert and prove that what the decree-holder claims under the decree is not due, having been paid or adjusted : and it is still incumbent on the Court to go into the matter, if a contest on the point is raised. To state the result briefly, the final clause of section 258 raises a presumption, but does not limit the jurisdiction of the Court. This result appears to me to be inevitable if section 258 be read not by itself as an isolated enactment containing a complete statement of the law on the matter it deals with, but as a part of a whole and with reference to its place in the scheme of the Code and its relation to other parts of the scheme."

CHAMBERLI v. BISHNA

This interpretation obviates the necessity of resorting to the fiction of a fraud. By sub-r. (3) the Court is not deprived of its jurisdiction to try the plea of payment raised in a case like the present which plea could be entertained and adjudicated upon in execution proceedings falling under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It precludes, in the first instance, recognition of a payment or adjustment which has not been certified or recorded in accordance with the provisions of sub-r. (1) and (2) of r. 2. Those provisions lay down a special procedure to be adopted by the Court for the purpose of recording the payment or adjustment made out of Court. The plea of payment in the present case does not fall to be determined by those provisions. Neither the decree-holder is moving the Court to adopt the procedure provided by sub-r. (1) nor is the judgment-debtor informing the Court of the payment for the purpose of invoking the procedure laid down in sub-r. (2.) The plea is a simple one and relates to the satisfaction of the decree which is sought to be executed and specifically falls within subsection (1) of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section says: "All questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the.....satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit." The appellant, Suraj Narain, claims to be the transferee of the decree. Under section 49 of the Code of Civil Procedure he "shall hold the same subject to the equities (if any) which the judgment-debtor might have enforced against the original decree-holder." That the judgment-debtor has equity on his side when he pleads that he shall not be made to pay twice over cannot be doubted.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Lala Hargopal, for Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The following facts will disclose the nature of the question to be tried in this second appeal. One Dhanwant was the owner of certain culturable land, house property and certain mortgaged land. He having died Musammat Badami, his widow, succeeded in obtaining possession of the property. This lady executed a number of Wills in favour of certain persons. The plaintiff in this case is one Bishna, son of Musammatt Bholi, a daughter of the said Dhanant, by his wife Musammatt Giani. A Will was executed by Musammatt Badami in his favour also. The last Will was executed in favour of the defendant. Musammatt Bholi admittedly had predeceased Musammatt Badami. On the death of Musammatt Badami the property was mutated in the name of the defendant on the strength of the Will in his favour. The plaintiff preferred an appeal against the mutation order; but his appeal was rejected. Thereupon he instituted the present suit and in paragraph 5 of the plaint he based his claim on the Will, custom and law. The defendant resisted the suit mainly on the ground that the plaintiff was not the grandson i.e., the daughter's son, of Dhanwant and that, therefore, he had no locus standi to maintain the suit. He alleged that under the last Will of Musammatt Badami he was entitled to succeed to the land and that the property had rightly been mutated in his name. The trial Court found that the Will in favour of the defendant was executed at a time when the lady had not a disposing mind. It came to the conclusion that the defendant was a mere stranger. On the question whether the plaintiff was or was not Dhanwant's daughter's son the Court expressed no opinion because it came to the conclusion that, even if he was a daughter's son, he was not entitled to succeed to the property of Dhanwant under the Customary Law. Taking this view, the Court dismissed the suit.

CHAMBELI v. BISHNA

The plaintiff appealed. The lower Appellate Court has agreed with the finding of the trial Court on the question of the efficacy of the Will in favour of the defendant. On the question of the plaintiff's title to maintain the suit it has differed from the trial Court and has held that even if the plaintiff was not able to establish a custom giving him a right to question the alienation he being an heir under the Hindu Law was entitled to maintain the suit. The lower Appellate Court, therefore, granted a decree in favour of the plaintiff.

The defendant has come up in second appeal to this Court, and it has been contended on his behalf by his learned Counsel Mr. Manohar Lal that the learned Judge of the Court below was not right in allowing the plaintiff to fall back upon the personal law under the circumstances of this case. His argument is that, in the first place, the plaintiff did not base his right to maintain the suit on the Hindu Law, and, secondly, that as a daughter's son is not mentioned as an heir in Rattigan's book on Customary Law the plaintiff has got no locus standi to maintain the suit. Mr. Hargopal for the plaintiff-respondent has relied upon two decisions of this Court which completely answer the argument put forward by Mr. Manohar Lal. In the case of Rehman v. Karim Bakhsh (1) it was held that the general principle of Customary Law is that in the absence of all agnates of a childless proprietor any cognate, however distantly related to him, is entitled to succeed to his property in preference to the proprietary body of the village." Now in this case the defendant is an utter stranger. The plaintiff being the daughter's son of Dhanwant, according to this ruling is entitled to eject him from the land.

In the case of Gobinda v. Nandu (2), recently decided by a Division Bench of this Court, the following relevant passage occurs at page 218:—

"Mr. Tek Chand admits that he cannot cite a single case to support his contention, and that the aforesaid remark runs counter to the principle of the Hindu Law on the subject. Whatever the exact meaning of the remark may be, we consider that there is no reason for holding that custom excludes a daughter's son from inheritance on the ground of his mother having predeceased her father or grandmother."

This remark applies with equal force to the facts of the present case. Thus both under the Customary Law and under the personal law the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the suit as against the defendant who has been found to be a mere trespasser.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nimar, dated 25th September 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 86 of 1922.

Mr. Fida Hussain, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the village of Reta was liable to be partitioned in execution of their mortgage decree.

The defendants contended that the village was impartible being assigned to the office of Kazi.

Both the Courts below have decided against them. Defendants make this second appeal. A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of respondents that the appeal by appellant No. 3 Ibrahim, who is a lunatic, has not been properly filed. In the Courts below, he was represented by the Naib Nazir whereas in the present appeal he is represented by his brother, appellant No. 1. It has been held in Musammal Kisni v. Ghulaji Teli (1) that when a guardian ad litem has once been appointed, his appointment enures for the whole of the lis in the course of which it has been made unless and until it is revoked by the Court. This case is based on rulings of the Allahabad and Madras High Courts. There is nothing on record to show that the appointment of the Naib Nazir as guardian ad litem of the lunatic has been revoked, and therefore the appellant No. 1 had no right to represent the appellant No. 3 or to file an appeal on his behalf.

I am of opinion that this contention is correct and the appeal of appellant No 3 must be rejected as he is not properly represented.

Three points have been raised by the appellants in this appeal. First, that the village has been attached to the office of Kazi and is, therefore, impartible. Second, that the suit is barred by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. Third, that the suit is barred by limitation. I deal with these points seriatim.

The village is held on the Ubari tenure, which is defined in the C. P. Settlement Code, introduction pp. v and vi. The paragraph in question goes against the appellants' contention that the village is impartible, for it begins by saying that the third class of proprietary villages...those originally held by revenue grantees (Muafidars)...call for but little notice, as the wholesale grant of proprietary rights left their holders in no higher position than that of ordinary Mulguzars, apart from the Revenue concession enjoyed by them. * *

* * The least privileged grants are those known as "Maktas" which are held on payment of quit-rent, fixed in perpetuity but of substantial amount, exceeding in some cases the revenue now ordinarily assessable. The concession in such cases is exemption from enhancement. When it amounts to a release or assignment of revenue the tenure is known as "Ubari" in the North and as "Mokasa" in the South. Generally speaking, the grants of revenue are * * permanent and inalienable. But conferral of the Malguzari rights made the proprietorship of the assignee in the village lands—apart from their revenue—transferable at his will, etc." This passage makes it quite clear, in my opinion, that the Ubari tenure has nothing to do with proprietorship in the lands, but is merely the right to hold the village on payment of a quit-rent to Government, that is, on payment of less revenue than what would ordinarily be payable.

In this respect the tenuro resembles that of *Inamdar*s in the Bombay Presidency who are regarded as alienees of the Royal share of the revenue. Whether they are also proprietors of the soil is quite a different question. Ordinarily, in Bombay, where a different system of land tenuro prevails, they are presumed not to be so. In the Central Provinces the contrary presumption would prevail, but the essential point is that the payment of a reduced revenue to Government does not help at all in deciding whether the village is impartible. The defendants may be given a remission of revenue because they are Kazis, but whether they were granted the soil of the village for the same reason, is a question depending on the terms of the original grant.

This distinction is brought out in Exhibit 1 D-3, the order of the Chief Commissioner in an appeal regarding the partition of this village. Mr. (afterwards Sir Denzil) Ibbetson pointed out that "the property in the village and the Ubari right are two very different rights. Government are not concerned with the right to partition. It certainly is extremely probable that the original grant of the proprietary right was made together with and on the same terms as the assignment of revenue. But that was 180 years ago, and if that argument is to be pressed, the present Kazi would be sole owner of the village, whereas it appears that his relations have all along been and are now recorded as co-sharers with him, that is, in possession of joint shares of the property. * * * If the property in the village is held on condition of performing the duties of Kazi, there are no co-sharers. If not, there is no apparent reason to hold that it is impartible. The question is one for a Civil Court and not for a Revenue Officer to decide."

With these observations in support of my view I have no hesitation in holding that the Ubari tenure is distinct from the proprietary rights in the village and that, as the ordinary presumption is that a village is partible and alienable, the burden is on the defendants to prove that this village forms an exception to the ordinary rule. This is the view taken in Krishnaji Rao v. Nilkanth (2) where it is held that the custom of impartibility must be strictly proved.

The defendants have not adduced any evidence in the form of Sanads or otherwise to prove that the village is impartible.

Exhibit 1 D-2 which is an order of the Settlement Officer refers only to the exemption from payment of land revenue.

The cases quoted by the learned pleader for appellants, Jafar Mohiuddin Sahib v. Aji Mohiuddin Sahib (3) and Neji Anjaneyulu v. Sri Venugopal Rice Mill, Ltd., (4), are cases where the land was found to be on service tenure. In such a case the presumption is that the village would be entered in the name of the person actually holding the office and performing the services, whereas in the present case the names of the sharers are entered in column 11 of the Muafi Register (Exh. 1 D-1) and some of them applied for partition. The very mortgage on which these suits are based was executed by the three brothers. All this shows that the village was regarded as the property of all and not as impartible.

In these circumstances, I agree with the finding of the Courts below that the village is not proved to be impartible.

It is contended that suit is barred by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act because the plaintiffs failed to ask for possession. It is contended that if they cannot seek possession under the decree of this Court, they should have sought it in this suit.

SHAM DAS v. CHARN DAS

The decree of this Court (Exh. P-6) states that the plaintiffs are entitled to possession of a 10-annas 8-pies share of the mortgaged property and may obtain khas possession thereof after carrying out proper proceedings for partitioning the same from the 1/3rd share of Sharafudin. When the plaintiffs applied to the Civil Court to execute this decree they were referred to the Collector, and on the objection as to the impartibility of the estate being raised the Collector directed the parties to get the question of the divisibility of the share decided by the Civil Court. Thus, the only relief which the plaintiffs could claim from the Civil Court was a declaration that the village was divisible. The Court could not grant possession, which was a matter solely within the competence of the Collector, by making an imperfect partition under the provisions of sections 162 et seq of the Land Revenue Act. The suit is not, therefore, barred by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

As to its being barred by limitation it is contended that the limitation for a suit for a declaration is 6 years under Article 120, Limitation Act, and that the cause of action arose when the Court refused execution on 8th August 1919. The Court, however, referred the plaintiffs to the Collector. If the Collector had made the partition, then the plaintiffs would have had no cause of action. It is only when the Collector refused to make the partition and order the parties to get the question of liability to division settled by the Court (under section 169 of the Land Revenue Act) that the cause of action arose. This was in 1921, so the suit cannot be barred by limitation.

The appeal consequently fails and is dismissed with costs.

Court-Fees (Act VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art. 17 (3)— Suit for declaration that mortgage shall not bind mortgaged property, nature of—Court-fee payable.

A suit by a co-parcener in a joint Hindu family for a declaration that a mortgage of joint family property effected by another co-parcener shall not be binding on the property mortgaged is not a suit for the cancellation of the mortgage but a mere suit for a declaration falling under Article 17 (3) of Schedule II to the Court-Fees Act, and does not require an ad valorem stamp.

First appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 26th February 1923, rejecting the plaint on plaintiff's refusal to pay Court-fee on Rs. 8,500 as ordered on the 25th January 1923.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellants.

Nemo, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sought to obtain a declaration to the effect that certain mortgages were without consideration and not binding on the property mortgaged. He alleged that he and the defendants, who made the alienations, were members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law. The value for purposes of jurisdiction was fixed at Rs. 8,500 and a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 was affixed, the plaintiff contending that the suit was governed by Article 17 (3) of the second Schedule to the Court-Fees Act. The trial Court, on the authority of Nanak Chand v. Jiwan Mal (1), held that, inasmuch as the declaration sought involved a cancellation of the mortgage-deeds, the plaint was not properly stamped and holding that the stamp should be ad valorem on the amount fixed for purposes of jurisdiction, returned the plaint on the 25th of January 1923 in order that it might be properly stamped and returned by the 26th of February 1923. On the latter date, the plaintiff stated that he was unable to pay the Court-fee and the plaint was rejected.

The plaintiff has now appealed to this Court through Mr. Tek Chand, and it has been contended that the order of the Court below rejecting the plaint is not warranted, firstly, on the ground that the declaration sought for did not necessarily entail the cancellation of the mortgage-deeds and that, therefore, the stamp affixed, namely, Rs. 10, was sufficient, and, secondly, that the Court below was not justified in fixing the value for the consequential relief at Rs. 8,500 but should have allowed the plaintiff to fix his own value on the further relief sought. A reference to Nanak Chand v. Jiwan Mal (1) shows that it is not an authority for the proposition enunciated by the trial Court. In our opinion Mr. Tek Chand's contention is correct and a declaratory decree, such as is prayed, would not entail the cancellation of the mortgage-deeds in their entirety. The mortgagees would still be entitled to sue on them as bonds for the moneys secured thereunder. Mr. Tek Chand referred us to 53 P. R. 1901, and contended that the relief he sought in this case was precisely the same as that sought by the plaintiff in that case and declared his willingness to amend the present plaint so as to make his clients intentions perfectly clear to the effect that it was his rights in the property that it was desired to safeguard. This Mr. Tek Chand undertakes to do. In this view of the case, it is not necessary to discuss the second point raised. The appeal is accepted, the order rejecting the plaint is set aside, and the case remanded to the Court below for disposal in accordance with law. We make no order as to costs. The stamp on the memorandum of appeal will be refunded.

MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL APPEAL

NO. 53 OF 1923.

January 24, 1924.

Present : - Justice Sir Dawson Miller, Kt.,

MAHARAJADHIRAJ OF DARBHANGA—PETITIONER

versus

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922) ss. 2, 4, 58—Super tax—Liability to pay tax on dividends which have already paid it—Agricultural income—Income arising from markets, fisheries, moorings and ferries—Bengal Permanent Settlement Regulation (I of 1793) Art. VI, effect of—Exemption from all future taxes whether granted—Exemption whether revoked by Income Tax Act.

Under section 58 of the Income Tax Act of 1922 the intention of the Legislature is to charge super-tax upon the income of companies as well as upon the income of individual share-holders including in the income of the latter the dividends received from the company although they had already been charged to super-tax at the flat rate of one anna in the rupee. [p. 785, col. 1.]

Income derived from markets, fisheries, moorings or ferries cannot be regarded as agricultural income within the meaning of s. 4 (3) (VIII) of the Income Tax Act of 1922, and is not as such exempt from Income tax. [p. 786, col. 1.]

Per Dawson Miller, C. J. (Mullick J. dissenting) :—

The Legislature has power to vary or modify the bargain entered into between the Government and the proprietors by the Permanent Settlement, but this can only be done by clear and specific language in a Statute and not by general implication.

By the Permanent Settlement it was the revenue or rent payable to Government as the paramount landlord that was fixed in perpetuity, and the imposition of the Income Tax on income derived by a landlord from markets, fisheries, moorings and ferries, which had already been taken into account in fixing the permanent jama, would amount to an increase in the revenue in contravention of Art. VI of the Bengal Permanent Settlement Regulation of 1793.

The words of s. 4 (1) of the Income Tax Act of 1922, do not amount to a legal and effective abrogation of the exemption contained in Art. VI of the Bengal Permanent Settlement Regulation of 1793.

MAHARAJADHIRAJ OF DARBHANGA v. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX

Per Mullik, J.—No unlimited exemption from future taxation was granted by Art. VI of the Bengal Permanent Settlement Regulation of 1793. The exemption granted by the Regulation was limited to the particular objects of the Settlement, namely, use and occupation of the settled area, and the jama fixed for ever was the consideration for such use and occupation. The Crown did not in any way surrender its other rights on behalf of the general community. [p. 793, col. 1.]

If this view is not correct, the language of the Bengal Permanent Settlement is at least ambiguous and does not clearly and distinctly give any exemption from all future taxes and rates. The meaning of the Legislature being doubtful, contemporary exposition can validly be resorted to for purposes of interpretation and the uniform view of the Legislature and its servants has been that the Regulation did not intend to surrender all future rights of taxation in respect of the profits of the estate thereby affected. [p. 793, col. 2.]

If the language of the Regulation is not ambiguous and if it clearly indicates an intention to surrender all such future rights of taxation, then the language of the Income Tax Act is sufficient to revoke the exemption. [p. 793, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Income Tax Commissioner, Darbhanga, dated the 23rd November 1920

Mr. K. P. Jayaswal and M. Prasad, for the Petitioner.

The Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Dawson Miller, C. J.—Three questions arise for determination in this reference :—

(1) The first question is whether the petitioner is liable for additional Income Tax for the year 1920-21 upon a re-assessment made after the expiration of the next following year, that is, after the end of March 1922. The additional sum claimed under the reassessment is a large one amounting to Rs. 1,34,769-4-0 in respect of Income Tax and super-tax. It appears that the assessment for the year in question was made on the 23rd November 1920 based upon a return of the income of the previous year as provided by sections 17 and 18 of the Income Tax Act, 1918, then in force. When the return of the actual income for the year of assessment was received in 1921 for the purpose of provisionally assessing the income for 1921-22 an adjustment of the assessment for the year 1920-21 was made as provided by section 19 of the Act. On the 28th March 1922 it having been discovered that certain items of income had escaped assessment for the year 1920-21 a further assessment was made on those items under the provisions of section 25 of the Act of 1918 and the demand in respect of that year appears to have been finally closed. Thus far, no question arises but in pursuance of a demand made in 1922 that the assessee should file a fresh return of the actual income for the year 1920-21 a fresh return was filed and on the 27th January 1923 a fresh assessment based on the actual income of 1920-21 was made. This showed an additional amount payable beyond that already assessed and paid. From the letter of demand and the revised assessment form enclosed therewith it appears that the assessment is made in respect of Income Tax payable for the year 1920-21. As this re-assessment was not made until more than a year had elapsed after the expiration of the year of assessment the assessee contended that he was not liable to any further tax than that already demanded for the year in question. He based his contention upon the provisions contained in section 25 of the Income Tax Act of 1918. In my opinion this contention is well-founded, but it is unnecessary to pursue the matter further as the learned Government Advocate admits that for the year 1920-21 the additional amount demanded is not recoverable and that the demand although purporting to be in respect of the tax payable for that year is really a demand for a subsequent year based upon the income of that year. It is clear that some confusion has arisen from the form in which the demand was made. It is sufficient to say that for the financial year 1920-21 the tax payable does not include the additional sum demanded

(2) The second question is whether in computing the amount on which super-tax is payable by an individual or Hindu undivided family under the Income Tax Act of 1922 the amount received as dividends from a registered company should be deducted, or, if not, whether credit should be given for the super-tax already paid on those dividends by the company. It is contended that as the company itself pays super-tax upon its income before distributing dividends no further super-tax on such dividends should be payable by the shareholder or at least that credit should be given to him for the amount of super-tax paid by the Company proportionate to the amount of his dividends. Under the third Schedule of the Act super-tax is payable upon income received in excess of Rs. 50,000. In the case of every Company the rate payable is 1-anna in the rupee whatever the amount of excess over Rs. 50,000 may be. In the case of individuals and Hindu undivided families the amount of tax increases from 1-anna to 6-annas in the rupee according to the increase over Rs. 50,000. There is nothing in the Act from which it can be inferred that in computing the taxable income of individuals or Hindu undivided families for purpose of super-tax dividends upon which super-tax has been paid by the Company should be deducted. The super tax payable by a Company is a comparatively small tax charged at a flat rate of 1-anna in the rupee. The super-tax payable by the individual is on a sliding scale increasing in proportion to the increase of income and is separately charged. In each case super-tax is levied on the total income under sections 55 and 56 of the Act. By section 16, in computing the total income, the dividends payable to an assessee and a shareholder in a Company are included. But although by section 14, where the profits of the Company itself have been assessed to income-tax, the share-holder is exempt from paying a second income tax upon the amount of dividends received by him and already taxed as the income of the Company, no such exemption is provided in the case of super-tax. On the contrary, section 58 which applies the other provisions of the Act, as far as may be, to the assessment of super-tax expressly excludes the operation of section 14. It is clear, therefore, that the intention of the Legislature was to charge super-tax upon the income of Companies as well as upon the income of individual share-holders including in the income of the latter the dividends received from the Company although they had already been charged to super-tax at the flat rate of 1-anna. It was contended that the Company was the agent of the assessee for the purpose of paying tax and that credit should be given for the amount paid by the Company on the dividends received but although this may be true in the case of income tax it is clear by the sections already referred to that super-tax must be separately paid on the profits of a Company by the Company itself at the smaller rate and by the share holder on the dividends received by him out of those profits as part of his income, the rate payable by him being on a sliding scale according to the amount of his total income. It follows that no exemption can be claimed by the assessee from the payment of super-tax in respect to the dividends received by him.

(3) The third question is whether income derived from jalkar (fisheries), hat (markets) and ghatlagi (moorings and ferries) is liable to tax.

The assessee contends, first, that income derived from these sources is agricultural income and, therefore, exempt under section 4, sub-section (3), clause (viii) of the Income Tax Act of 1922, and, secondly, that such income is exempt from assessment to income tax by the terms of the Settlement under which he derives his title and the Regulations relating thereto.

As to the first contention ; there appears to be no foundation for the view that income derived from markets or moorings or ferries can be regarded as agricultural income and the only argument addressed to us in support of this part of the case is that these things are in some way connected with the land. It was urged, however, that fisheries were, or might be in certain cases, as where the fishing is from tanks, so intimately connected with the pursuit of agriculture that they should be included under that designation. The popular conception of agriculture, even if it should include the rearing of live stock and poultry fed on the produce of the land and requiring in certain cases cultivation of the land for grazing purposes, or otherwise, seems hardly wide enough to include the rearing of fish in rivers or tanks. Agricultural income is defined in clause (2) of the Income Tax Acts of 1918 and 1922. The definition includes rent or revenue derived from land used for agricultural purposes as well as income derived from agriculture and from the sale of agricultural produce. The definition does not carry the case any further. The question is whether the rent paid for the fishing rights, or for the markets, ferries, or moorings is income derived from agriculture.

MAHARAJADHIRAJ OF DARBHANGA v. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX

In my opinion it is not. The fact that the Bengal Tenancy Act, by section 193, applies the procedure provided by the Act for the recovery of arrears of rent to suits for recovery of anything payable in respect of fishery rights and the like is of no assistance to the petitioner. It rather emphasises than otherwise the difference between revenue derived from land let for agricultural purposes and that derived from fisheries and the other sources of income mentioned in the section. Nor does it seem reasonable to hold that income derived from fishing over land covered by water and which is not used for any agricultural purpose is income derived from agriculture. Fish are not the produce of the land. Their natural element is the water and their cultivation and welfare depend in no sense upon agriculture. It may be that in certain cases the jalkar rights include the right to cultivate the soil of the tank when dry but the facts of this case do not show that the income sought to be exempted from tax was other than that derived from the right to catch fish. In my opinion the question whether income derived from jalkar, hats and ghatlagi is agricultural income and so exempt from income tax should be answered in the negative.

The second contention arising upon this part of the case is that exemption can be claimed for income derived from the above sources by reason of the terms of the Settlement under which the property is held coupled with the provisions of the Bengal Permanent Settlement Regulations. The argument is that the Settlement covered the rights of jalkar and hat and that ghatlagi is included as an incident of the jalkar rights, and that the revenue permanently fixed for ever at the date of the Settlement covered the whole liability to Government in respect of these rights as provided in Regulation I of 1793. It is conceded that the Legislature has power to vary or modify the bargain entered into between the Government and the proprietors by the Permanent Settlement, but it is contended that this can only be done by clear and specific language in a Statute and not by general implication, a test which the Income Tax Act does not satisfy. There can be no doubt that the Permanent Settlement exempted the proprietors for all time from enhancement of the revenue fixed in respect of the settled lands and three questions arise for consideration; (1) does the Settlement made with the predecessor of the assessee cover the jalkar and other rights; (2) does the imposition of income tax on the income derived from these sources vary the terms of the Permanent Settlement, and (3) if so is the Income Tax Act sufficiently specific and unambiguous to indicate without reasonable doubt that it was the intention of the Legislature to vary the bargain made at the time of the Permanent Settlement.

If the first of these questions should be answered in the negative, the assessee will be liable, as the other two questions do not in that event arise. On this point the Commissioner has found as a fact that the documents produced in support of the assessee's contention contain no evidence that the items under consideration were included in the assets when the jama was assessed and permanently fixed at the date of the Settlement. If this finding is accepted there is an end to the matter. The sanad under which the assessee holds has not been produced but copies of an application made by Raja Madho Singh Bahadoor for Permanent Settlement of Pargana Hati, etc., dated the 7th April 1800 and an amaldastak of the same date have been put in evidence. If the Settlement was in accordance with the application it would appear from the schedule attached to each of these documents that rents arising from hat and jalkar were included in the assets upon which the jama was assessed. It is not clear, however, whether these documents cover the whole of the estate now held by the assessee in respect to which the tax has been levied and if we should be of opinion that the imposition of income tax in respect to the items under consideration is contrary to the terms of the Settlement and that the income tax does not sufficiently clearly purport to modify the Settlement Regulation it would be necessary, I think, to refer the case back to the Commissioner to take further evidence and arrive at a definite finding upon the question whether these sources of income were included in the assets upon which the revenue was settled in 1800. It is not very clear why the Commissioner arrived at his finding but I gather that he was of opinion that the documents produced were not conclusive evidence of the terms of the Settlement. I think, however, they raise a presumption in favour of the assessee as the applications for Settlement made by the proprietors at the time in question were, as a rule, a counterpart of the actual Settlement made and were part of a single transaction completed at the same time, just as a kubuli-yat is a counterpart of a patta. There is no explanation forthcoming why the sanad or sanads under which the assessee holds have not been produced, but I consider it would be highly unsatisfactory in a case of this nature raising important questions of principle to determine the matter by a reference to the onus of proof when the real facts are probably capable of ascertainment. I propose, therefore, to consider, first, the other two points which arise on this part of the case. By the Permanent Settlement it was the revenue or rent payable to Government as the paramount landlord that was fixed in perpetuity. It is argued that the effect of the imposition of income tax is not to increase the revenue or rent so payable, but it is clear, I think, that the imposition of such a tax is in fact to increase the revenue under another name. The jama permanently fixed at the date of the Settlement was calculated upon a percentage of the rents and profits at that time derived from the ownership of the land. Income tax is based upon the same rents and profits as they now exist, and it is impossible, in my opinion, to escape from the conclusion that a tax, under whatever name, upon the same sources of income would increase the duty payable under the name of revenue and which, by the Permanent Settlement, it was agreed should then be fixed for ever. By Article VI of the Regulation it was a part of the bargain that the proprietors "will enjoy exclusively the fruits of their own good management and industry, and that no demand will ever be made upon them, or their heirs or successors, by the present or any future Government, for an augmentation in the public assessment in consequence of the improvement of their respective estates." An argument was addressed to us based upon the Cess Acts which, beginning in 1871, and still continuing, imposed a tax for the maintenance of roads and public works upon all holders of estates or tenures assessed upon the annual value of their lands even when those lands are also assessed to revenue. It was urged that the right to collect such taxes had never been disputed; but whether the Cess Acts do or do not constitute a breach of the bargain entered into with the proprietors by Lord Cornwallis in 1793 and the question has given rise to much controversy in the past—the Cess Acts themselves leave no room for doubt that it was the intention of the Legislature to impose the cess upon revenue-paying lands thereby expressly exercising that power which it admittedly possesses, and no valid argument can be based upon the analogy of those enactments. I consider that the Income Tax Act, if and in so far as it charges income derived from property included in the original Settlement with the proprietor and assessed to revenue, varies the terms of Regulation I of 1793.

The last point which arises on this part of the case is whether the Income Tax Act of 1922 is explicit enough in its terms to repeal the exemption created by the Permanent Settlement Regulation, for it must be conceded that such repeal cannot be effected merely by words of general import or by implication (Maxwell, 6th Ed., Chap. VII, Sec. 3). The Madras High Court in the case of the Secretary to the Chief Commissioner of Income tax, Madras v. The Zamindar of Singampatti (1), had to consider the effect of the Income Tax Act, 1918, upon the Madras Regulation XXV of 1802. The Madras Regulation is certainly no more comprehensive or emphatic than the Bengal Regulation of 1793 which declares that "no alteration will be made in the assessment which they (the proprietors) have engaged to pay but that they and their heirs and lawful successors will be allowed to hold their estates at such assessment for ever." The Income Tax Act of 1922 now under consideration is substantially similar in terms to that of 1918 for this purpose. It provides by section 4 (1), "save as hereinafter provided this Act shall apply to all income, profits or gain, as described or comprised in section 6, from whatever source derived, accruing, or arising, or received in British India." By section 6, the six heads of income chargeable to income tax include (iii) property and (vi) other sources. The exceptions to which the Act shall not apply are set out in section 4 (3). These include agricultural income but there is no general exception of income derived from revenue paying estates settled under the Regulations. The words imposing the tax are no doubt wide enough to cover the income now under discussion but there is no express modification or repeal of the exemption already existing under the Regulation. The Madras High Court in the case above-mentioned held that it was impossible to treat as a legal and effective abrogation of the exemption the words of section 3 of the Income Tax Act, 1918, which as stated are of similar import to those of the later Act. I see no reason to take a different view from that held by the Madras High Court. Moreover, it appears to me to find support from the judgment of the House of Lords in the Associated Newspapers Limited v. The City of London Corporation (2). In that case by the Statute VII, Geo. III, Ch. 37, certain land in the City of London reclaimed from the Thames was declared to vest in the owners free from all taxes and assessments whatsoever. About 80 years later, in 1848, the City of London Sewers Act was passed imposing a new rate upon every occupier of a house or building within or partly within the City of London "whether such person shall be now liable in respect of such house or building to be assessed to the relief of the poor or be not liable in respect thereof by reason of such house or building being situate in any precinct or extra parochial place or otherwise." The House of Lords held that these words did not take away the express exemption granted by the earlier Statute.

An argument was based upon the exemption of agricultural income from the operation of the Act. This express exemption does not, in my opinion, necessarily lead to the conclusion that all other kinds of income derived from permanently settled lands were to be deprived of the benefit of the Permanent Settlement. The Act applies to the whole of British India and not only to the permanently settled area. It was apparently the policy of the Legislature, as appears from the definition of agricultural income in section 2, to exempt agricultural income derived from all lands paying either revenue or a local rate to Government and whether permanently settled or not, and, apart from any clear expression of intention to vary the Permanent Settlement, I do not think it would be legitimate to draw an inference from the general language of the section, that what was not excluded was included even if previously exempt by the Regulation. Nor do I consider that in determining the question now before us any assistance can be derived from considering such enactments as Drainage and Embankment Acts which, in exchange for new benefits conferred, levy a rate upon Zeminars and others to provide for the cost. The income tax is for general purposes of revenue and is not allocated to any special purpose connected with the land or from which the land derives a peculiar benefit. But even if there should be found here and there on the Statute-book a tax imposed in apparent contravention of the Permanent Settlement, and no objection taken, I should hesitate to say that such a state of affairs would conclude the question now under consideration.

I have had an opportunity of perusing the judgment about to be delivered by my learned brother with which I regret I am unable to agree. The question I think is one of some difficulty but I can find nothing in the Income-tax Act of 1922 indicating an express intention to deprive the proprietors of permanently settled lands of the exemption created by the Bengal Settlement Regulation of 1793.

In the circumstances, and for the reasons stated in an earlier part of this judgment, I think that the case should be remanded to the Income tax Commissioner to determine the following question of fact, namely, whether the jalkar, hat and ghatlagi rights in respect of which the exemption is claimed formed a part of the assets taken into consideration in settling the jama at the date of the Settlement with the predecessors-in-title of the assessee. The parties will be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence upon the question for determination.

Mullick, J.—The only point which I propose to discuss is whether the petitioner is entitled to exemption in respect of the income from Jalkars, Ghatlagi, and markets. On all the other points the petitioner must clearly fail.

It is accordingly necessary at the outset to examine what was the precise nature of the bargain which the East India Company made with the Zemindars of Bengal by the Permanent Settlement Regulation (Regulation I of 1793). Article II of the Regulation states that "the Marquis of Cornwallis, Governor-General in Council, now notifies to all Zemindars, independent talukdars and other actual proprietors of land paying-revenue to Government, in the provinces of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, that he has been empowered by the Hon'ble Court of Directors for the Affairs of the East India Company to declare the jama, which has been or may be assessed upon their lands under the Regulations above-mentioned, fixed for ever." The Regulations above-mentioned mean the Regulations for the Decennial Settlement made on the 25th November 1789 and the 10th February 1790.

Article III recites "that the Governor-General in Council declares to the Zemindars, independent talukdars and other actual proprietors of land with or on behalf of whom a settlement has been concluded under the Regulations above-mentioned, that at the expiration of the term of the Settlement no alteration will be made in the assessment which they have respectively engaged to pay, but that they and their heirs and lawful successors will be allowed to hold their estates at such assessment for ever."

Article VI runs as follows: "It is well known to the Zemindars, independent talukdars and other actual proprietors of land, as well as to the inhabitants of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, in general, that from the earliest times until the present period the public assessment upon the land has never been fixed, but that according to established usage and custom, the rulers of these provinces have from time to time demanded an increase of assessment from the proprietors of land; and that, for the purpose of obtaining this increase, not only frequent investigations have been made to ascertain the actual produce of their estates, but that it has been the practice to deprive them of the management of their lands, and either to let them in farm, or to appoint officers on the part of Government to collect the assessment immediately from the rai-yats." The section further recites: "The Governor-General in Council trusts that the proprietors of land, sensible of the benefits conferred upon them by the public assessment being fixed forever, will exert themselves in the cultivation of their lands, under the certainty that they will enjoy exclusively the fruits of their own good management and industry, and that no demand will ever be made upon them, or their heirs or successors, by the present or any future Government, for an augmentation of the public assessment in consequence of the improvement of their respective estates." Article VII recites that "the jama . . . is to be considered entirely unconnected with, and exclusive of any allowances which have been made to them in the adjustment of their jama, for keeping up thanas or police establishments, and also of the produce of any lands which they may have been permitted to appropriate for the same purpose."

But the Company in whom were vested the rights of the Sovereign, were the owners of the land. For reasons, into which it is not necessary to enter, they decided that the Zemindars, independent talukdars or proprietor was the person best entitled to settlement. A limited right of ownership was conferred upon him not only in respect of the owner's share of the produce of the soil but also in the soil itself. The demand was based on contract and it was open to the zemindar to decline to engage. If he accepted the engagement not even the total destruction of the property was a ground for remission. The demand had some of the attributes of a land-tax but it was not a tax; in reality, the transaction was a sale of the owner's rights on the basis of the capitalized value of the assessment. Where the assessment approximated to the economic rent it was in effect rent for use and occupation, but the frequency with which estates came under the hammer for arrears of revenue immediately after the Permanent Settlement indicates that, in practice, the assessment had no relation to the actual rents collected from tenants or to the value of the produce which would have been recovered if the land had been rented to them. The fact is that, tempted by the income to be derived from the cultivation of the waste land which according to some reports was more than one-third of the whole area and by the offer of an interest in the soil itself, the zemindar entered into a gamble. The Company offered to convert him from an office-holder to an owner in fee simple in return for a fixed price. Though the price was heavy he paid it, but there is no reason for holding that he purchased thereby an immunity from all future taxation. In one capacity the Company represented the Sovereign and the general community; they were also the owners of the soil; they surrendered to the Zemindar no part of their rights in the former capacity which included the right to tax but only a portion of their rights of ownership, namely, the right to the produce of the soil; and it seems clear from the context that the declaration that the jama was unalterable could only refer to the limited purposes of the contract. Indeed, having regard to the fact that the proceeds of the Settlement constituted the principal source of revenue at that time it is difficult to see how any general exemption from taxes upon profits could have been intended; for a proprietor whose only source of income is the produce of his estate every tax be it personal, direct or indirect, is a tax upon land. It is immaterial that the tax is calculated on the value of his land; that is merely a matter of machinery and whether the basis of calculation is the produce of his land or the number of his servants or the income from his trade or profession, the tax in the end falls upon the land. Even if it were conceded that the assessment had all the attributes of a land tax (which I have already found it had not) no exemption from future taxation was expressly or by implication given, and, therefore, the decision in the Associated Newspapers Limited v. Corporation of the City of London (2), has no application. Here there was no exemption from taxation but merely a promise that the rent would not be enhanced, and therefore the question whether the general words of subsequent taxing Statutes are sufficient to exonerate the assessee does not arise.

Therefore in the absence of any clear and unambiguous declaration by the authors of the Permanent Settlement, I think it is permissible to invoke the aid of the principle of "Contemporary Exposition." Here it is not a case of one or two stray Statutes in the administration of which the strict rule of construction has been overlooked. On the contrary, a uniform course of dealing is disclosed which shows that profits from permanently settled estates have been taxed for the purposes of the State without express words revoking the exemption alleged to have been given by the Permanent Settlement Regulation; and I have been unable to discover a single Statute in which any such exemption has expressly or by implication been recognised. To illustrate this attitude of the Legislature it will suffice to refer to a few important Statutes. In these no question of benefits sought by the subject arises; he has no option to accept the obligation or refuse; the discretion to impose the obligation is absolute and unconditional; it is not open to the assessee to contend that he has derived no benefit therefrom. Though in principle indirect taxes or taxes imposed for services rendered stand on the same footing for the purposes of the present discussion, I have, for the sake of convenience, chosen only Statutes imposing direct taxes. It seems to be immaterial whether the funds raised are for a stated object or for the general purposes of the State.

The first of the Statutes which I propose to cite is the Zemindari Dak Cess Act of 1862. Within a few years of the Permanent Settlement, Regulation XX of 1817 was enacted imposing on Zemindars the duty of maintaining peons for the purpose of carrying the post from one Police station to another. The Regulation made no distinction between permanently settled and temporarily settled estates. The liability was next converted into a direct tax by Act VIII B. C. of 1862 and all Zemindars, sudder farmers and other persons paying revenue to Government in respect of lands situated within the district were liable to contribute for the payment of the establishments required for the purpose of maintaining the Zemindari daks. Again, no distinction was made in the Act between permanently settled and temporarily settled estates and the general words used were accepted without question for nearly 50 years as creating a liability on both classes of estates. The Zemindari Dak Cess Act has since been repealed but that circumstance does not affect the question of contemporaneous exposition.

I next desire to refer to the District Road Cess Act (Act X of 1871) and the Provincial Public Works Act (Act II of 1877) both of which were repealed and consolidated by Act (B. C.) of 1880. Act IX of 1871 provided for local revenue for the construction and maintenance of roads and other means of communication, and Act II of 1877 was enacted for the levy of a cess for the construction and maintenance of provincial public works. In respect of the charging sections, there is no material difference between the Act of 1880 and those of 1871 and 1877. Their object was the imposition of cesses upon all immoveable property situated within a district. This is clear from section 5 of Act IX of 1880. Section 6 enacts that the road cess and public works cess shall be assessed on the annual value of lands and on the annual net profits from mines, quarries and tramways and other immoveable property, ascertained respectively as in this Act prescribed. Part II of the Act gives rules for the mode of assessment, and makes special reference to the mode in which summary valuation is to be made of revenue paying estates and tenures. The Act has always been construed as applying to permanently and temporarily settled estates alike and if any exemption was granted to the former by the Permanent Settlement, there must be somewhere in the Act a clear and unambiguous declaration of the Legislature's intention to revoke the same. Obviously, the reference to revenue-paying estates in Part II will not suffice because it does not necessarily include permanently settled estates, and unless the general words of sections 5 and 6, are adequate to charge the same the hitherto accepted construction is indefensible. It is permissible, therefore, to infer that those who were charged with the administration of the Act were of opinion either that the exemption was never given or that, if given, the general words of sections 5 and 6, were adequate to revoke it.

I next proceed to consider the Bengal Municipal Acts. The earliest Act which empowered the Local Government to constitute a Corporation and to raise funds was Act XXVI B. C. of 1850. That Act was followed by Act XX of 1856 which again was followed by Act VI of 1868 (The District Towns Act) which allowed only one basis of calculation, namely, the circumstances and property of the persons to be benefitted and the funds to be applied to the maintenance of the Police, to the repair of roads, to conservancy, vaccination, general improvement and maintenance of dispensaries. The next important Act on the subject is Act III B. C. of 1884, which empowers a Municipality to levy ten different kinds of tax one of which is a rate on buildings, lands and holdings. The rate is to be levied on the annual value of the lands calculated upon the gross annual rate at which the holding may reasonably be expected to let. It is clear that where a holding comprises either a part or the whole of a permanently settled estate it is liable to be rated on its annual profits. No distinction is made between permanently settled and temporarily settled estates and, so far as I know, permanently settled estates are always assessed although there are no express words revoking the provisions of the Permanent Settlement.

Again, the Embankments Act (Bengal Act II of 1882) empowers the Government to remove embankments and alter water courses for the purpose of protecting lands and to recover the expenses from the zemindars of the estates thereby benefitted or protected in proportion to the respective benefits derived. No exemption from liability is made in favour of permanently settled estates.

Similarly, the Drainage Act (Act VI of 1880) empowers the Local Government to frame a scheme for better drainage and improvement of lands and to apportion the cost upon each landlord in respect of his improved lands, such cost being the first charge upon the lands in question and not avoidable by the sale of such lands for arrears of revenue. The Act makes no discrimination between permanently settled and temporarily settled estates.

Next, the Court of Wards Act (Act IX B. C. of 1879) empowers the Collector to take charge under certain circumstances of the property of a proprietor and to apply part of the profits in paying for the expenses of management and supervision. This is a tax payable out of the profits of the estate and no distinction is made between permanently and temporarily settled estates.

Again, the Village Chowkidari Act (Act VI B. C. of 1870) empowers the Village Panchayat to levy for the payment of village chowkidars a rate on every person owning or occupying a building in the village according to his circumstances and the property to be protected. The tax is to be calculated on the income derived from the property or according to the value of the land which the owner or occupier holds without regard to the nature of his Settlement with Government in the event of his holding the land as a proprietor.

Finally, the Bengal Tenancy Act empowers the Local Government to order a Record of Rights and to recover from the landlords the costs of the operations in such proportions as the Local Government may determine. The proprietor of a permanently settled estate has always been considered liable to contribute although no special provisions prescribing such liability are contained in the Act.

Therefore, it seems to me that even if it be conceded that the exemption now claimed refers only to direct taxes as opposed to indirect taxes, such as the Stamp Act, the Court-Fees Act, the Probate Act and the Bengal Settled Estates Act the uniform view of the Legislature has been either that no exemption from any further tax based on the profits of the estate was ever given or that, if given, then general words not materially different from those used in the Income Tax Act (Act XI of 1922) are sufficient to revoke it.

It is necessary, therefore, to consider whether anything is to be gathered from the Income Tax Act itself as to the intention of the Legislature in respect of non-agricultural income from Permanently Settled Estates.

The first Income Tax Act, namely Act XXXII of 1860, seems to have made no exemption in favour of the proprietor of a permanently settled estate who like others had to pay the prescribed percentage upon his profits. Agricultural income was not exempted and yet no question seems to have been raised as to any breach of the Permanent Settlement. Next, Act II of 1878 was passed to provide, among other things, for an insurance against famine. The Act was in force in the United Provinces and the Punjab, but in Bengal the Local Government adopted similar legislation by passing Act III B. C. of 1878 and for the first time agricultural income was not exempted. The next Act, namely, Act II of 1866, converted the tax into a general income-tax (by an Act applicable to the whole of India) and taxed non-agricultural income of all kinds and in regard to the matters material to the point now under consideration, the provisions of the law have remained unchanged in the present Act, namely Act XI of 1922. The scheme of this last mentioned Act is ability to pay, with the exception that agricultural incomes are exempt. Agricultural income is defined in section 2 as rent or revenue derived from land which is used for agricultural purposes, and is either assessed to land revenue in British India or subject to local rate assessed and collected by officers of Government as such. It would seem, then, that profits derived from non-revenue-paying agricultural lands are liable to the tax. Non-agricultural income derived from a temporarily settled estate would be liable, but, according to the petitioner, if derived from a permanently settled estate it would be exempt. It is possible that the agricultural income of a temporarily settled estate should have been exempted from income tax in consideration of the periodical reassessment to which the estate was subject, but although considerations of distributive justice are not relevant, it does seem strange that the Legislature should have considered it necessary to exempt the agricultural income of the permanently settled proprietor also who enjoys the advantages both of fixity of tenure and of rent. That this inequality should be further accentuated by exempting his non-agricultural income seems difficult of explanation.

Further, if the contention of the petitioner is carried to its logical conclusion the results would be as follows. In non-agricultural areas he ought to pay neither cesses nor income tax while the proprietor of the temporarily settled estate would pay both. In regard to incomes from Jalkars, the Local Government has by notification exempted them from cess but if the contention of the petitioner is correct, the exemption should have been notified only in respect of temporarily settled estates and the notification in its present general form is inapt and too widely framed.

A similar objection applies to the drafting of section 2 of the Act, if the Permanent Settlement Regulation is sufficient to exempt the petitioner's agricultural income.

Again, in Municipal areas the petitioner should pay neither Municipal rates nor income-tax on Jalkars while the temporarily settled proprietor is liable to pay both.

But a far more important matter is that the petitioner would also be exempt from income-tax on royalties from mines within his permanently settled estates.

MAHARAJADHIRAJ OF DARBHANGA v. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX

It is now conceded that the Permanent Settlement, unless a contrary intention was expressly indicated, carries with it sub-soil rights and hitherto every proprietor, whether temporarily or permanently settled, has been considered liable to pay income tax in respect of royalties on minerals, see Manindra Chandra Nandi v. The Secretary of State for India (3). The Income Tax Act makes no reference to minerals and the decided cases show that the charging sections apply to all royalties.

Why, then, should the charging sections, namely, 4 and 6, not be sufficient to impose a liability on all other property not expressly exempted in the Act. I cannot see any indication that the Legislature, while using such wide and general language, intended to make some limitation in favour of non-agricultural income arising out of the profits of permanently settled estates.

The result at which I have arrived may, therefore, be summed up as follows:—

(1) There was no exemption from future taxation granted by the Permanent Settlement Proclamation similar to that given to the appellants in Associated Newspapers Limited v. Corporation of the City of London, (2). The provisions of 7, George III, Chapter 37 material to that case prescribed that the owners and proprietors of the several wharves and grounds then abutting under the river Thames and adjoining the area in question were vested with the proprietary rights in the said wharves and grounds according to their respective interests free from all taxes and assessments whatever. No unlimited exemption of this kind was granted to the proprietors of permanently settled estates. It was an exemption limited to the particular objects of the Settlement, namely, use and occupation of the settled area, and the jama fixed for ever was the consideration for such use and occupation. The Crown did not in any way surrender its other rights on behalf of the general community. If this view is correct, the absence of any reference in the Income Tax Act to the Permanent Settlement is immaterial.

(2) If this view is not correct, then at least the language of the Permanent Settlement is ambiguous and does not clearly and distinctly give any exemption from all future taxes and rates. The meaning of the Legislature being doubtful, contemporary exposition can be resorted to and I have endeavoured to show that the uniform view of the Legislature and its servants has been that the Permanent Settlement Regulation did not intend to surrender all future rights of taxation in respect of the profits of the estates thereby affected.

(3) If the language of the Permanent Settlement Regulation is not ambiguous and if it clearly indicates an intention to surrender all such future rights of taxation then the interpretation placed upon Statutes similar to the Income Tax Act can be called in aid for the purpose of explaining the meaning of the words used in the Act. If such a course leads to the conclusion that similar general words have hitherto been considered sufficient to revoke the exemption granted by the Permanent Settlement, then the absence of express words in the Act will not prejudice the Crown and the affirmative language of the Act is sufficient to revoke the exemption in question.

The result, therefore, is that, in my opinion, the profits of jalkar, ghatlaggi and market rights are chargeable with income tax, but the point is one of considerable difficulty and I express this opinion with hesitation. On other points I agree with the learned Chief Justice and as his opinion on the question of law, which I have endeavoured to discuss, must prevail, I agree to the order for further enquiry which he proposes to make.

In my opinion the contention is one which it is not possible for us to accept. There is very high authority for the view that a Court of Law has authority over its own record and it may amend the record even after an appeal is brought : *Mellish v. Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 72—Money paid by mistake—Consideration, absence of—Refund.

Plaintiff authorised a broker to purchase a particular property for him and paid a certain sum of money to the broker as earnest-money to be paid to the vendor. The broker made a contract in respect of an entirely different property with a different vendor and paid the earnest-money to the latter who received it in good faith. On discovering the mistake plaintiff sued to recover the money from the vendor to whom it had been paid by the broker ;

Held, that the case was covered by section 72 of the Contract Act and the defendant was bound to re-pay the money to the plaintiff.

Mr. Dharmdas Thawerdas, for the Opponent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

The facts are simple. Plaintiff-opponent No. 1's case was that the broker Nur Mahomed Ismail offered him a shop building for sale. Plaintiff accompanied the broker to inspect it before the purchase. He was shown the shop of the applicant but the plaintiff did not approve of it. He was next shown by the same broker a shop in Mithadar quarter which the plaintiff says he approved and instructed the broker to make an offer of Rs. 4,500 for its purchase. The evening of the same day the broker took from the plaintiff Rs. 500 as earnest-money representing to him that the owner of the latter shop building had agreed to sell the property for the figure named Rs. 4,500. On the day following, that is, the 4th January 1920 the broker brought to the plaintiff a receipt for the Rs. 500 and the kabala for his signature. Plaintiff, on having the kabala read to him, found that the shop building agreed to be sold was the one in the Napier quarter which belonged to the applicant and that the purchase price was Rs. 5,900. He declined to sign the kabala as he had not authorised the broker to purchase this property, and demanded the refund of the Rs. 500. As this amount was not paid he filed a suit in the Small Cause Court against both the applicant and the broker and obtained a decree for this amount against both.

The applicant undoubtedly received the Rs. 500; the question is whether he is entitled to retain it. It appears evident that the broker was not the agent of the plaintiff in the transaction with the applicant. He had been authorised to purchase the property in Mithadar quarter for Rs. 4,500 and the sum of Rs. 500 had been handed to him for the purpose of negotiating this purchase, but he had no authority, express or implied or even any apparent authority, to purchase the property owned by the applicant. Under these circumstances, neither sections 237 or 238 Indian Contract Act have any application.

There can be little doubt on the evidence that the brokers have perpetrated a fraud on the plaintiff but it is argued for the applicant and quite correctly that he was not a party to the fraud and that he honestly believed the representation made to him by the brokers. The fact, however, remains that the applicant has obtained Rs. 500 for which there is no consideration. Is he entitled to retain it because of his good faith in the matter? It is not correct to say that there was no privity of contract between the applicant and the plaintiff for the receipt for Rs. 500 clearly shows that the amount was received from the plaintiff. Reliance was placed upon the case of Thomson v. Clydesdale Bank (1) where a broker who had received specific instructions to invest a sum of money in a particular manner fraudulently paid the amount received to the respondent in reduction of the balance due by him on his account and it was held that the appellants were not entitled to recover it from the respondents. But there is a very important distinction between this case and that before us for the applicant must have known from the receipt executed by him that the sum of Rs. 500 which the brokers paid him was the property of the plaintiff and not that of the broker.

We think that section 72 Indian Contract Act is clearly applicable to the present case and that the sum of Rs. 500 was paid by the plaintiff to the brokers under a mistake of fact. Plaintiff believed that he was paying Rs. 500 for the purchase of the Mithadar property and the mistake was material as it led to the payment of money without consideration. There can be little doubt that the plaintiff had not the faintest idea that the money was to be utilised by the brokers in foisting upon him the property of the applicant for he promptly repudiated the kabala as soon as he was acquainted with the contents and declined to sign it. A debtor may recover from a creditor the amount of over-payment if it was made to him by mistake.

It was argued that the Court below was in error in regarding the plaintiff's money in the hands of the applicant as money had and received for the plaintiff, but by whatever phraseology it may be described there is the patent fact that there is an entire failure of consideration. And, as observed by the Privy Council in Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (2), if there was never any consideration then the price paid by the appellant was money had and received to his account.

RAJKESHWAR PRASHAD NARAIN SINGH v. MUHAMMAD KHALIL-UL-RAHMAN

It was lastly argued that the lower Court was in error in awarding the plaintiff the payment of the sum of Rs. 500, from the applicant as well as the broker, but in this application we are not concerned with the relief awarded against the latter. We are satisfied that the learned Judge was correct in directing the applicant to refund the sum of Rs. 500 to the plaintiff and this application is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 81—Mortgage—Marshalling—Mortgagee, subsequent, purchasing mortgaged property in execution of decree, effect of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. XXXIV, r. 4—Mortgage-decree—Sale, order of—Court, power of, to direct order of sale.

The object of section 81 of the Transfer of Property Act is to protect a subsequent mortgagee from the properties mortgaged to him being sold to satisfy the dues of a prior mortgagee who has the additional security of some other properties also, and a subsequent mortgagee does not lose the benefit of the section merely by reason of the fact that he has purchased mortgaged properties in execution of a mortgage-decree obtained by him on foot of his subsequent mortgage.

Magniram v. Mehdi Hossein Khan, 81 C. 95 ; 8 C. W. N. 30 at p. 31 ; Dilawar Sahai v. Diwan Bolakiram, 11 C. 258 ; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 931 ; Kommineni Appaya v. Mangala Rangayya, 31 M. 419 ; 3 M. L. T. 287 ; 18 M. L. J. 229 (F.B.) ; Webb v. Blessington, (1828) 3 Moll. 123, distinguished.

Inderdawan Pershad v. Gobind Lal Chowdhry 23 C. 730 ; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 521, relied on.

Ordinarily, the right of selling mortgaged properties in execution of a mortgage-decree in a particular order rests with the decree-holder and, in the absence of any contract between the parties, the decree-holder may proceed to sell the properties in whatever order he thinks best so as to facilitate his realisation of his mortgage-debt. But the Court can, in the particular circumstances of a case and in view of the equities arising in favour of the various parties, apart altogether from any question of marshalling, direct, under O. XXXIV, r. 4 of the Civil Procedure Code, the order in which the properties should be sold.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Patna, dated the 21st January 1921.

Messrs. R. C. Bhaduri, Rai Guru Saran Prasad and Raghunandan Prasad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Noorul Hossain and B. C. Sinha, for the Respondent.

Jwala Prasad, J.—This appeal arises out of a mortgage-suit. Defendant No. 14 Edal Singh, who died after the institution of the suit, is now represented by his minor son Rajkeshwar Prasad Singh under the guardianship of Musammatt Dulhin Sona Kuer. The plaintiff is Muhammad Khalil-ul-Rahman. He seeks to enforce two mortgages, both of them bearing the same date, viz., the 9th July 1904, one was for Rs. 500 in favour of Jadunandan Prasad Singh, defendant No. 48, in the suit (Ex. 1), the other was in favour of Baldeo Narain Singh, defendant No. 49, for Rs. 900 (Exhibit 1-a). The last mentioned bond was taken in the name of Raghunath Prasad Singh, defendant No. 50. The mortgagor was Musammatt Wahidunnissa, wife of Sheikh Muhammad Ahsan alias Ahamdi. The plaintiff purchased the aforesaid mortgages by two deeds of sale (Exhibits 2 and 2 (a). Exhibit 2 was executed on the 23rd July 1915 by Baldeo Narain Singh. Exhibit 2 (a) was executed on the 20th July 1915 by Jadunandan Singh. The plaintiff thus is an assignee of the mortgage-bonds of the 9th July 1904 and he seeks to enforce the aforesaid mortgages by sale of the mortgaged properties detailed in the bonds and reiterated in the schedule attached to the plaint. Defendant No. 14, who is the appellant before us, had taken three mortgages from Musammatt Wahidunnissa: (1) dated 25th October 1914 for Rs. 13,000, (2) dated the 29th November 1915 for Rs. 6,500 and (3) dated 3rd December 1915 for Rs. 800. We are concerned with two of the properties mortgaged in these three bonds: Maksudpur Ogawan and Nisf Ogawan as they are also mortgaged in the bonds in suit.

Edal Singh enforced his mortgages, obtained consolidated decree on the 22nd December 1917, and is said to have purchased the mortgaged properties in execution of that decree. His defence in the present case inter alia is that the mortgages which the plaintiff wants to enforce have been extinguished, inasmuch as under the sale-deed (Exhibit A) executed by Sheikh Muhammad Ahsan alias Ahmadi and Wahidunnissa on the 22nd November 1914 in favour of Mr. Zakaria Gauhar Ali (defendant No. 20) and Bibi Roqaitul Fatima (defendant No. 21), the vendees had to pay the mortgages in suit and had for that purpose kept with them sufficient money out of the consideration of the sale-deed and, as a matter of fact, did pay up the mortgages in suit and got the assignment deeds (Exhibits 2 and 2-a) executed in the farzi name of the plaintiff who is their relation. Defendant No. 14, therefore, says that the plaintiff has no right to institute a suit.

The next point urged is that the bond of the defendant No. 14 is subsequent to that of the plaintiff, and consequently he has a right to marshalling; in other words, his case is that the properties which were not mortgaged to defendant No. 14 should be sold first in order to satisfy the mortgages in suit and if any sum be still found due, then and then only the properties mortgaged to defendant No. 14 should be sold. The learned Subordinate Judge has overruled both these contentions and has given a decree in favour of the plaintiff giving him right to sell the mortgaged properties in any order he likes. Defendant No. 14 impugns the decision of the Subordinate Judge.

The first ground urged by Mr. Bhaduri, who appears for the appellant, relates to limitation which is covered by issue No. 1 framed in the lower Court. The learned Subordinate Judge says that the issue was not pressed before him and on the face of his finding that the suit was filed on the 28th June 1919, and that the due date of the two mortgage-bonds was 9th July 1907, no question of limitation could arise.

Mr. Bhaduri disputes that the suit was filed on the 28th June 1919 and says that in fact it was filed on the 22nd July 1919. That was the date on which the plaint was admitted and registered. Order No. 1 in the Order Sheet of the Court below clearly shows that although the plaint was registered on the 22nd July 1919, it was filed much earlier on the 28th June 1919 and that the delay in the registration of the plaint was due to the Court-fee stamps having had to be re-placed as those originally filed bore endorsement of the Patna High Court. These facts being pointed out, Mr. Bhaduri now concedes that the point taken by him was raised under misapprehension.

He next contends that the mortgages in suit have been discharged. It is not disputed that Mr. Zakaria and Roqaitul Fatima undertook to pay to the original holders thereof, Jadunandan and Baldeo, the dues under the two mortgages in suit and in order to pay them retained with them sufficient money out of the consideration of the sale deed (Exhibit A) of 22nd May, 1914. In fact, the deeds of assignment (Exhibits 2 and 2-a), dated 23rd July and 20th July 1915, respectively, on the strength of which the plaintiff has brought this action, recite this, but adds that the vendees Mr. Zakaria Gauhar Ali and Roqaitul Fatima did not pay the mortgages in suit. On behalf of the defendant it is urged that the recital is false and in fact the original mortgagees, Jadunandan and Baldeo, were paid by Mr. Zakaria and Roqaitul Fatima, who, in order to prejudice the defendant, got the said deeds of assignment executed in the farzi name of the plaintiff, their relation. In order to prove this case the defendant has examined three witnesses Girbardhari Mahto, Etwari Mahto and Ramdhan Lal. Girbardhari was formerly a servant of Mohammad Ahsan alias Ahmadi, husband of the mortgagor Wahidunnissa. He wants to prove that in a regular conference in which Mohammad Ahsan, husband of Wahidunnissa, Jadunandan and Baldeo the original mortgagees, Musa representing his brother Mr. Zakaria and Mahbub-alam representing his mother Roqaitul Fatima were present, it was settled that Mr. Zakaria and Roqaitul Fatima would pay the mortgages in suit and take the deeds of assignment in the farzi name of the plaintiff. Etwari

Mahto is a vendee of certain properties from Muhammad Ahsan and Wahidunnissa and took from them a sale-deed, Exhibit B, on the same day as the sale-deed, Exhibit A, in favour of Zakaria and Roqaitul Fatima was executed, that is, the 22nd May 1914. He says that he had to pay the dues of Edal Singh and Raja Harihar Prasad Singh just in the same way as Zakaria and Roqaitul Fatima had to pay the mortgages in suit of Jadunandan and Baldeo and that he paid Edal Singh and Raja Harihar Prasad Singh, and Mr. Zakaria and Roqaitul Fatima got their dues satisfied by taking deeds of assignment in the name of their friend. Ramdhan Lal says that Khalil-ul-Rahman is the son of the maternal uncle of Roqaitul Fatima who, along with Zakaria, purchased village Dosut under sale-deed (Ex. A) and paid the dues of Baldeo and Jadunandan and took assignment of their deeds. No connection of Khalil-ul-Rahman with Zakaria has been established; Ramdhan Lal who is a karpardaz of Edal Singh admits it in cross-examination. The presence of Girbardhari Mahto, servant of Mohammad Ahsan, at the negotiation seems to be suspicious. He is now the tenant of the appellant and this may account for his evidence. Etwari Mahto does not pose himself to be an eye-witness to the payment of the mortgage-debts in question by Mr. Zakaria and Musammam Roqaitul Fatima. The evidence given by the defendant is not convincing and reliable.

The plaintiff, on the other hand, has examined witnesses to prove that the money was actually paid by him and that the assignment was taken for his benefit. The learned Vakil for the appellant has also drawn our attention to the statement of Sheikh Abdul Hafiz, witness No. 4, on behalf of the plaintiff, to show that Khalil had himself no intention of acquiring properties and purchasing the bonds himself. True, this witness says that Khalil took these bonds as Shah Ali Syed told him that the properties were accessible to him and that if he would not like to keep them he would take them. He also says that Khalil has not purchased any other deed. Such statements are not enough to show that, as a matter of fact, Khalil was not the real purchaser. The bond of Jadunandan was to some extent considered in the case brought by Edal Singh to enforce his mortgages, judgment of which (Exhibit 3) was delivered on the 22nd December 1917.

In that case Khalil was defendant No. 35. No doubt, this is an observation in the judgment in that case (that the circumstances connected with the bond were suspicious), but the actual finding was that the bond of Jadunandan of the 9th July 1904 was prior to that of Edal Singh and thus no effect was given to the contention that Khalil was a benamidar only under the deeds of assignment in question.

We have carefully considered the evidence on the record. All that we can say is that the circumstances disclosed in the evidence referred to above and relied upon by the learned Vakil for the appellant raise some suspicion as to Mr. Zakaria and Roqaitul Fatima being the assignees of the mortgages in question and the plaintiff being their farsidar, but the evidence falls short of the conclusive proof of Khalil-ul-Rahman being a mere farsidar. We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in the view that he has taken of the transaction in question and the conclusion arrived at by him as regards this issue relating to the farsi character of the assignments in favour of the plaintiff. This contention of the appellant on this point is, therefore, overruled.

The next question raised relates to marshalling. The learned Subordinate Judge concedes that if defendant No. 14 had continued to be the mortgagee of the properties held by him under his mortgages he would have been entitled to compel the plaintiff to have his debts satisfied in the first instance, out of the properties not mortgaged to defendant No. 14. He, however, seems to think that the right, which the defendant No. 14, had, ceased to exist upon his having purchased the properties in execution of his mortgage-decree. In short, his view is that whereas the principle of marshalling applies to the case of a subsequent mortgagee it ceases to apply when he purchased the mortgaged property in execution of his mortgage-decree. In support of this, he has cited the case of Magniram v. Mehdi Hossein Khan (1). The facts of that case are not similar. On the 15th October 1881 the defendant first party mortgaged four properties to defendant fourth party. On 12th January, 1888 the first two properties were purchased by defendant first party and on the 9th July 1888 the remaining two properties were purchased by the plaintiff. On the 26th April 1892 the defendant fourth party, the mortgagee, obtained a decree on his mortgage of the 15th October 1881 and in execution of his decree he purchased two of the properties which had been purchased by the plaintiff in 1888. The plaintiff then commenced an action for contribution from defendant first party, the purchaser of the first two properties. His case, in short, was that all the four properties were liable to contribute rateably to the satisfaction of the mortgage-debt and whereas the entire mortgage-debt was satisfied out of the two properties purchased by him, the defendant who had purchased the remaining two properties ought to contribute to the defendant proportionate to the value of those properties. The question of marshalling did not, therefore, directly arise in that case, but an analogy drawn from it as an argument against the plaintiff's right of contribution was disposed of by their Lordships in the following words:—

(1) 81 C. 95 ; 8 C. W. N. 30 at p. 31

"The rule of marshalling as laid down in the Transfer of Property Act, section 81, is, no doubt, limited to the case of mortgagees, and does not apply to the case of purchasers of mortgaged properties subject to prior incumbrances. Nor does the rule of marshalling in the case of purchasers as laid down in section 56 of the Act apply to a case between purchaser and purchaser, section 56 being limited in its operation to the case in which the party claiming marshalling is purchaser and the party against whom it is claimed is the original mortgagor. For the same reason the case of Delawar Sahai v. Dewan Bolakiram (2) cited in the argument, in which a claim for marshalling was disallowed, may be distinguished from the present case. Upon reason and principle it is difficult to say why, if marshalling is to be allowed as between two subsequent mortgagees, it should not be allowed as between subsequent purchasers. But though that is so, and though, as has been found by the Court below, the defendants first party bought without notice of the prior mortgage in favour of the defendants fourth party, as the plaintiff was a purchaser for value it would not be right to hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to claim contribution if the sale of his property results in the satisfaction of the mortgage-debt completely..... In our opinion, then, if the sale of the plaintiff's property has resulted in the complete satisfaction of the mortgage-debt, the plaintiff is entitled to contribution." There their Lordships laid down the principle upon which the contribution should be allowed. The fight in that case was not between a prior and a subsequent mortgagee as to marshalling but was one of contribution between two private purchasers from the owner of different properties all of which were previously mortgaged to a third person who obtained entire satisfaction of his mortgage by sale of the properties held by one of the purchasers, the properties held by the other purchaser having thus been altogether exonerated from the mortgage incumbrance. That case is not, therefore, an authority for the point for which the learned Subordinate Judge has used it that a mortgagee having purchased the mortgaged property in execution of his decree loses his right of marshalling. The learned Vakil for the respondent has cited the case of Kommineni Appayya v. Mangala Rangayya (3). The same remark applies to this case as to the case of Magniram v. Mehdi Hossein Khan (1), already dealt with. The right of marshalling was claimed not by the purchaser in execution of a subsequent mortgage-decree but by a subsequent private purchaser who comes not under section 81 but under section 56 of the Transfer of Property Act. In that case their Lordships while holding that the private purchaser was not entitled to have the property marshalled pointed out. "Under section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, the Court may order that a portion sufficient to discharge the plaintiff's debt be sold, and if parcel No. 2 is sufficient and if the plaintiff cannot possibly be prejudiced by such sale, it may be open to the Court to direct in the decree itself its sale before the other property."

Referring to section 56 of the Transfer of Property Act which entitles the buyer of one of the two properties mortgaged to another to have the charge satisfied of the other property as against the seller only, Sir Rash Behari Ghose in his book on Mortgage seems to be of opinion that the object of the enactment is to secure that the rights of the creditor must not be diminished or unduly hampered and he quotes the case of Webb v. Blessington (4), in order to show that a purchaser of part of the mortgaged property may claim that the plaintiff shall not resort to the purchaser's part of the estate, unless the remainder of the lands and premises should prove insufficient.

Their Lordships of the Madras High Court in the case of Kommineni Appayya v. Mangala Rangayya (3), cited on behalf of the respondents and referred to above, observed that the right of the private purchaser arising under section 56 to marshal the property claimed by him was not referred to a Full Bench for decision nor was it argued; and as to the right of private purchaser to marshal, their Lordships in the case of Magniram v. Mehdi Hossein Khan (1), referred to above, observed upon reason and principle it is difficult to say why, if marshalling is to be allowed between two subsequent mortgagees, it should not be allowed as between subsequent purchasers."

The Courts have, however, in practice given effect to it and the particular equities arising in a case are often adjusted by direction under O. XXXIV, r. 4 of the Civil Procedure Code (corresponding to section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act) given by the Court to sell the property in a particular order. We are not concerned in this case with the rights of private purchasers to marshal under section 56 of the Act, but with the rights of the purchaser in execution of a subsequent mortgage-decree to marshal under section 81 of the Transfer of Property Act. Section 81 of the Transfer of Property Act runs as follows:—

"If the owner of two properties mortgages them both to one person and then mortgages one of the properties to another person who has not notice of the former mortgage, the second mortgagee is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to have the debt of the first mortgagee satisfied out of the property not mortgaged to the second mortgagee so far as such property will extend, but not so as to prejudice the rights of the first mortgagee or of any other person having acquired for valuable consideration an interest in either property."

Now, it is conceded that the right of marshalling was available to defendant No. 14 up to the moment he had not actually purchased the properties in execution of his mortgage-decree. That right to my mind continues so long as the properties mortgaged to defendant No. 14 are available to be sold in execution of a prior mortgage of the plaintiffs. The object of section 81 is to protect the subsequent mortgagee from the properties mortgaged to him being sold to satisfy the dues of a prior mortgagee who has the additional security of some other properties also. It will be dangerous, and in many cases will make the provision nugatory, if it were held that the moment the subsequent mortgagee purchases in execution of his mortgage, his rights of marshalling are extinguished. Now, a mortgagee is a transferee of property and the mortgagee acquires certain rights and incurs certain obligations in the property mortgaged from the time he takes his mortgage. One of those rights is the right of marshalling. The right acquired by him passes to the purchaser in execution of the mortgage-decree whether he or a third person is the purchaser. The execution-sale does not extinguish the rights or obligations already acquired or incurred by the mortgagee at the time when the mortgage was executed. His rights and obligations against the mortgagor are thus not extinguished. Hence the purchaser of the property in execution of his mortgage-decree is entitled to enforce the rights of marshalling as against a prior mortgagee so long as that prior mortgage is not extinguished. None of the cases cited seem to conflict with this view. On the other hand, the case of Inderdawan Pershad v. Gobind Lall Chowdhry (5) seems to favour this view. In that case on the 21st June 1886 the defendant No. 1 mortgaged to plaintiff two houses and some share in a mauza. On the 17th August 1886 defendant No. 1 mortgaged to defendant No. 2 one of the houses only. On the 30th July 1887 defendant No. 2 obtained a mortgage-decree against defendant No. 1 passed upon his mortgage of 17th August 1886. On the 15th April 1891 he sold in execution of his decree, dated the 30th July 1887, and purchased the house mortgaged. On the 4th April 1893 the plaintiff instituted a suit to enforce his mortgage of the 21st June 1886, the first mortgage. It was held that defendant No. 2, the subsequent mortgagee, who had purchased the house in execution of his mortgage-decree one of the properties mortgaged to the plaintiff in the first mortgage of 1886 was entitled to marshalling, in other words, he was entitled to compel the prior mortgagee to sell in the first instance the properties which were not mortgaged and purchased by defendant No. 2.

Therefore, defendant No. 14 in the present case is entitled to marshalling and to compel the plaintiff to sell, in the first instance, the properties other than the properties mortgaged to him and purchased by him in execution of his subsequent mortgage. Those properties are:—(1) Present tauzi No. 10, 913, old 348 Maksudpur Ogawan; (2) Present tauzi No. 11,041, old 476 proprietary interest in mauza Ogawan Nisf. It is said that the defendant-appellant has failed to prove that these were the properties subsequently mortgaged to him and purchased by him in execution of that mortgage. Before the learned Subordinate Judge the point does not seem to have been seriously raised, as will appear from the following discussions in his judgment:—

“The defendant's mortgage was subsequent and he has purchased the property in his own decree obtained on his mortgage. The plaintiff's mortgage is prior and, therefore, binding on the defendant”.

Witness No. 3 has also referred to these two villages Maksudpur Ogawan and Ogawan Nisf in his evidence as being the properties mortgaged to Edal Singh and purchased by him in execution of his mortgage-decree. In the judgment, Ex. 3, of the 22nd December, 1917 passed in the mortgage suit brought by Edal Singh, Muhammad Khalil as well as Jadunandan, the original mortgagee, Mr. Zakiria-Gauhar Ali and Musst. Roqaitul Fatima were all parties. In that case it was recited that the properties mortgaged to Edal Singh were Maksudpur Ogawan and Ogawan Nisf and the case was fought out on the assumption that Khalilur was the assignee of the mortgage in which these properties were hypothecated. Therefore, the fact that these two properties were mortgaged to defendant No. 14 and that he purchased the properties in execution of his decree obtained on foot of his subsequent mortgage cannot now be seriously challenged.

It was then argued by the learned Vakil for the respondent that at the time when Edal Singh purchased the property in execution of his mortgage he was aware of the prior mortgage. To my mind that does not alter the position and the real question is as to whether he was aware of the prior mortgage, at the time when he took his own mortgage, and on that point the learned Subordinate Judge has held that the mortgage by Edal Singh was taken without notice. The subsequent proceedings to enforce his own mortgage were in due course of time and the fact that he came to know of the existence of the prior mortgage at the time he purchased the property, does not deprive him of the right of marshalling which he had acquired already. This point seems to have been also concluded by the authority of the case Inderdewan Pershad v. Gobind Lall Chowdhry, already referred to.

Apart from the question of marshalling, it appears to me that the Court was undoubtedly right to direct under O. XXXIV, r. 4 that the properties mortgaged should be sold in a particular order. The section says that, in the event of the default of the defendant in paying the decretal amount, the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof should be sold. Now, ordinarily, the right of selling the property in a particular order rests with the decree-holder and, in the absence of any contract between the parties, the decree-holder may proceed to sell the properties in whatever order he thinks best so as to facilitate his realization of his mortgage-debt. But the Court can, in the circumstances of a case and in view of the equities arising in favour of the various parties, direct the order in which the properties should be sold. Whereas the decree-holder has the right in the first instance to prescribe the order of the progress of the sale, the final orders rest with the Court which has to adjust and determine the equities of the parties before it. This seems to be now the accepted view of the law. In the present case no order has been prescribed in the mortgage-bond in which the properties should be sold and, therefore, in the circumstances of the case and in view of the complications created by the non-payment of the mortgage-bonds by Mr. Zakaira and Roqaitul

SAMANDAR v. FAZAL

Fatima, the latter of whom is related to the plaintiff, and in view of the equities arising in the case, we think that defendant No. 14 is entitled to have the properties mentioned above, Naksudpur Ogawan and Ogawan Nisf, to have sold last of all the properties mentioned in the mortgage-bond. Accordingly, we vary the decree made by the learned Subordinate Judge and order that the decree be modified by inserting therein an express direction that the properties be sold in the order indicated above.

In the circumstances of the case, we think that defendant No. 14 is entitled to only half the costs incurred by him in this Court as well as in the Court below.

Mr. N. J. Rustomji, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Aziz Ahmad, for the Respondents.

Order.—Mr. Aziz Ahmad has appeared to show cause and he has put forward two contentions before me, namely:—

(1) that this application for injunction cannot be entertained as the injunction prayed for does not come either under r. 1, or r. 2 of O. XXXIX, Civil Procedure Code, and

(2) that the suit out of which this first appeal has arisen was only for a declaration and a permanent injunction as a consequential relief was not claimed in that suit.

The first contention has no force, because the High Court has an inherent power to grant injunction in suitable cases irrespective of the provisions of O. XXXIX, Civil Procedure Code.

The second contention has force. The suit is merely of a declaratory nature and I do not think it proper to grant an injunction staying proceedings in another suit pending in another Court. The rule 2 is discharged and the application is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by the plaintiff-respondent for specific performance of a contract which came into existence in the following circumstances: There is a tank which originally belonged to defendants Nos. 1 and 2. They sold a moiety of it to the plaintiff on the 16th Pous, 1275. Two weeks after, namely, on the 29th Pous they entered into an agreement the principal clause of which runs thus: "If by chance the condition of either party becomes deplorable or if either party voluntarily wants to transfer the whole or a portion of his interest in the said tank or it becomes necessary to execute kot or simple mortgage of the tank, it must be to the other party. If it becomes necessary for any party to execute absolute sale, or kot simple mortgage of the whole or a portion of that property for any reason, then the party or their successors-in-interest transferring or mortgaging their share do so to the other party or their successors-in-interest." This is followed by another clause to the effect that if any party fails to carry out this agreement he will be mulcted in damages to the extent of Rs. 1,000. There is a further clause which is as follows: "We both parties or our successors-in-interest will be bound to carry out the conditions aforesaid. We both parties down to our sons and grandsons and successors-in-interest shall possess the tank with its water and banks in equal half share."

The plaintiff's case is that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 secretly executed a kobala in favour of their wives (defendants Nos. 3 and 4) conveying a 6-annas of the tank and that defendant No. 5 has attached the remaining 2-annas in execution of a fraudulent claim. The plaintiff, therefore, prays for specific performance of the contract aforesaid, namely, that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 may be directed to convey their share in the tank to the plaintiff by virtue of the aforesaid contract. Both the Courts have found that the plaintiff is not entitled to specific performance of the contract in respect of 6-annas, transferred to defendants Nos. 3 and 4 which transfer they have held to be benami, the property not having passed from defendants Nos. 1 and 2. With regard to defendant No. 5, however, they have agreed in holding that the covenant is enforceable and have directed the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to execute a conveyance to the extent of 2-annas share and ordered the plaintiff to deposit a share of Rs. 50 to the credit of the 5th defendant and on such deposit being made directed the defendants to execute a kobala in favour of the plaintiff conveying to him absolutely the two-annas share in the tank. It has been further ordered that the attachment by defendant No. 5 should be withdrawn and that the money thus deposited by the plaintiff may be withdrawn by defendant No. 5. Against this decree defendant No. 5 has preferred S. A. 1915 of 1921 and defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4 have preferred S. A. 328 of 1922, raising in both the appeals the same contentions. There are several points taken by the appellant but the one which requires consideration and is sufficient to dispose of these appeals is that there is no covenant against involuntary alienations. The view taken by the Courts below that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are restrained in fact, though not expressly, from allowing the properties to be attached is not correct and I think that the contention of the appellant ought to prevail. The law is now firmly established by authority that where property is sold off or leased out with a covenant attached to it that the vendor or lessee, will not be entitled to transfer the property to any one but to the vendor or lessor such a covenant does not apply to involuntary alienations. There are a number of authorities on this point but it will be enough to refer to a few of them, namely, the cases of Nilamadhav Sikdar v. Narattam Sikdar (1), Golaknath Roy Choudhury v. Manmatha Nath

AVANTIKA PRASAD SHUKUL v. GUR BAKSH

Roy Choudhury (2), and Promode Ranjan Ghose v. Aswini Kumar Nag (3). This view has been adopted by the other High Courts also. In fact, so far as reported cases go, it was first considered by the Bombay High Court in the case of Tamaya v. Timappa (4). The Madras High Court has also held the same view from a long time and has lately asserted it in the case of Parameswari v. Vittappa (5). I, therefore, hold that in this case also the covenant restraining alienation by sale or mortgage does not extend to an involuntary transfer. In this case this principle applies with greater force. The property originally belonged to defendants No. 1 and 2. They sold one-half of it to the plaintiff. The agreement that came into existence did not form any part of this transaction but was executed subsequently. It cannot be said that this covenant attaches to the land for, in the first place, the covenant which the plaintiff now seeks to enforce is not a covenant which runs with the land came into existence long after conveyance. As it stands, it may also very well be argued that this covenant is bad as it contravenes the provisions of section 107, Transfer of Property Act. It may also be argued that it is bad on the ground of its offending the rule against perpetuity as it not only binds the parties but also their heirs ad infinitum. There is another objection as to why the plaintiff's suit should not succeed. The two-annas share which is the subject-matter of this appeal has not yet been alienated. The defendant No. 5 has attached this share in execution of a decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 which has been found by the Court below to be bona fide. The real cause of action, therefore, has not yet arisen. On this ground also I am of opinion that this appeal should succeed.

The result is that these appeals are allowed, the decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the plaintiff's suit will stand dismissed. The defendant No. 5 is entitled to his costs in all the Courts. The defendants No. 1, 3 and 4 are entitled to their costs of this Court; but they will bear their costs in the Courts below.

Before a suit for ejectment can be held to be maintainable under the provisions of section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act, the plaintiff must show a title in ejectment against the defendant. [p. 805, col. 2.]

Where a mortgagee seeks to eject his mortgagor from the mortgaged property on the ground that the latter is his tenant, the primary evidence of the relationship of the parties must consist of the terms of the mortgage-deed. [p. 805, col. 1.]

Though a deed of mortgage is a conveyance, yet, when the mortgagee seeks to enforce the covenant in it relating to possession of the mortgaged lands, it is open to the mortgagor to set up the equitable defence of the mortgagee not having performed his part of the mortgage contract. [p. 806, col. 1.]

Appeal against decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 10th April 1923, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Rae Bareilly, dated 24th January 1923.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Appellant.

Mr. Radha Krishna, for the Respondent.

The facts will appear from the following order, dated the 27th August 1923, of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner:—

This is a second appeal under the Oudh Rent Act. The plaintiff-appellant claimed against the defendant under the provisions of section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act a certain amount of rent for certain plots of land which are mortgaged to him by the defendant. He also prayed for the relief of ejectment. The Court of first instance gave a decree to the plaintiff in respect of both the reliefs. On appeal by the defendant the learned District

AVANTIKA PRASAD SHUKUL v. GUR BAKSH

Judge of Rae Bareilly dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the pleadings raised questions of title between the mortgagor and his mortgagee in respect of the possession of the plots mortgaged and, therefore the suit as brought was not maintainable under the section mentioned above.

It is difficult to resist the contention of the plaintiff-appellant that he is entitled to the reliefs which were granted to him by the Court of first instance if he is "entitled to eject the defendant as a trespasser" but in view of what I am going to say shortly it is not necessary to decide this point just now. One thing is clear and it is that the plaintiff must show a title in ejectment as against the defendant before the suit can be held to be maintainable under the provisions of section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act. The lower Appellate Court has referred to two rulings in support of the opinion which it has formed with regard to the provisions of that section but both of these rulings were given before that section was amended by Act IV of 1921. Now, to establish a title in ejectment the primary evidence, in the nature of things, must consist of the terms of the deed of mortgage itself, more so in the present case when one of the pleas of the defendant is that on the conditions of the deed of mortgage the plaintiff was not entitled to possession. Strangely enough, however, none of the parties have produced either a certified copy of the deed of mortgage or the original deed. It seems to me that the non-production of the deed is an inherent defect without remedying which this suit cannot be properly decided. Both sides are agreed that the deed of mortgage be brought on the record as evidence in the case. I, therefore, direct the plaintiff-appellant to produce the original deed of mortgage dated the 8th April 1920 within fifteen days from this date. A date for the hearing of this appeal will be fixed after the deed of mortgage mentioned above has been produced. In the event of the plaintiff failing to comply with the order just now made, the appeal shall stand dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are given in my order of the 27th August 1923. The original deed of mortgage referred to in that order has been produced by the plaintiff-appellant. The learned pleader for the respondent accepts the genuineness of the deed. I have consequently ordered it to be admitted as evidence in the case. The deed is one of an ordinary usufructuary mortgage. The amount of money in lieu of which the mortgage is made, is Rs. 5,400. Out of this sum, the amount of Rs. 2,815 is left with the mortgagee for payment to certain creditors of the mortgagor. These creditors are specified in the deed of mortgage and so are the amounts due to each of them from the mortgagor. The mortgagee undertook to pay off these creditors either himself and, in that event, to obtain a receipt from them, or to allow the mortgagor to make the payment in the presence of the mortgagee in which case, the former would obtain the receipt for the payments made and deliver it to the mortgagee. Subsequently to the covenant relating to the payments mentioned above, occurs the stipulation on the part of the mortgagor to put the mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged property from the date of the mortgage. The defence for the suit asking for the reliefs of the recovery of rent and of ejectment under section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act was, that the plaintiff failed to fulfil the conditions of the deed of mortgage inasmuch as he did not satisfy the previous creditors of the mortgagor as was agreed upon in the deed and, consequently, the plaintiff was not entitled to the reliefs for which he had prayed. This defence was considered to have no bearing on the plaintiff's claim by the Court of first instance. The Court of first appeal has dismissed the suit on grounds other than those which arise out of the defence just now mentioned.

The learned pleader for the appellant has argued that the mortgage is the conveyance of the property, and consequently it gives him a perfect title to possession of that property and the defendant's plea that the previous creditors have not been paid up is not a ground on which the suit of the plaintiff can be resisted.

It is not disputed that the mortgage is the conveyance of the lands mortgaged but this fact alone does not, in my opinion, entitle the plaintiff to the reliefs which he wants to obtain in the present suit. On my interpretation of section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act, the plaintiff must show a title in ejectment as against the defendant as I have already expressed myself in my previous order of the 27th August 1923. For the purposes of the decision of this appeal it has been assumed to be that the plea of fact set out in the defence already quoted that the plaintiff-mortgagee has not satisfied the obligation which rested on him under the mortgage-deed to pay off the previous creditors of the mortgagor is correct. This being so, I am clearly of opinion that, though the deed of mortgage is a conveyance, yet, when the plaintiff seeks to enforce the covenant contained in it relating to possession of the mortgaged lands, it is open to the defendant to set up the equitable defence of the plaintiff not having performed his part of the same contract. It is not possible to hold that the defendant should be deprived of that defence for the reason that the plaintiff has chosen to sue him under section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act instead of bringing a suit for possession and damages in a Civil Court. The equity of defence is clearly supported by the second part of clause (b) of section 24 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877). Further, under section 37 of the Indian Contract Act, IX of 1872 the mortgagee is under a legal obligation either to perform or offer to perform his part of the contract. It is assumed that he has not performed it and there is no offer made in the present case to do it. On these grounds I am driven to the conclusion that the decree of the lower Appellate Court should be maintained.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Where defendant in a suit falling within cl. Mr. C. M. Lobo, for the Judgment-Creditors.

Mr. Gulabrai Nihalchand, for the Judgment-debtors.

ORDER.—A notice was issued under O. XXI, r. 37, Civil Procedure Code, to the judgment-debtors M. R. F. Nazareth and C. F. B. D'Souza to show cause why they should not be arrested in execution of a money-decree with costs against them for Rs. 2,461-9-0 and subsequent interest and costs. The defendants contend that they are agriculturists and claim protection under section 21 of the Deccan Agriculturist's Relief Act, XVII of 1879.

The defendants were sued as proprietors of two trading concerns carrying on business as wine merchants at Karachi in the names of C. V. D'Costa & Co., and Vincent & Co., and as having further jointly and severally guaranteed payment for the amounts which may become due by the two firms. They were described in the heading of the plaint as merchants and landlords residing at Karachi. They filed a written statement disputing the correctness of the amount and the prices charged for the goods supplied, and also denied their liability for interest. They did not, however, deny that they were not the proprietors of the two firms or that they were not merchants. They did not either expressly raise the plea that they were agriculturists or claim to be tried under the provisions of the Deccan Agriculturist's Relief Act. When the suit was called on for hearing they were absent, and it was decreed ex parte against them.

Mr. Lobo on behalf of the plaintiffs has contended that as in their defence to the action the defendants failed to raise the plea that they were agriculturists, it is not open to them now to put forward this defence and has relied on the recent ruling in Mulji v. Goverdhandas (1). Mr. Gulabrai for the defendants has attempted to distinguish the Bombay ruling on the ground that as the defendants in the Bombay case were residing outside the jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court, it was necessary for them to raise the plea of their status, as in the event of the Court holding that they were agriculturists the Court would have no jurisdiction to go into the merits of the case, while in the present case the defendants resided within the jurisdiction of the Karachi Court and, therefore, it was not necessary for them to raise this plea during the trial of the suit. It is not asserted that the status of the defendants has changed since the date of the decree, and any subsequent change in their status would not avail them: Cf. Balchand Chaturchand v. Chumilal Jagjivandas (2). It is not contested that the nature of the suit is one which does not fall within clause (w) of section 3 of the Deccan Agriculturist's Relief Act. The provisions of sections 7 and 12 of the Deccan Agriculturist's Relief Act are mandatory; section 7 of the Act imposes a duty on the Court to examine an agriculturist defendant as a witness unless for reasons to be recorded by the Court it deems it clearly unnecessary so to do. Section 12 of the Act imposes a duty on the Court to examine both the plaintiff and the defendant as witnesses and, further, to inquire into the history and merits of the claim in suits falling within the purview of the clauses (w), (y) and (z) of the Deccan Agriculturist's Relief Act where the amount of the plaintiff's claim is disputed. Lalji Asandas v. Mahomed Ali (3) and Musammam Begum v. Topanmal Hiranand (4). In the present case the defendants did dispute the claim, the correctness of the account and the prices for goods supplied. If the defendants were agriculturists it would be the duty of the Court to examine them as required by section 7 of the Act and also to examine them and the plaintiffs and to inquire into the merits of the case "with a view to ascertaining whether there is any defence to the suit, first, on the ground of fraud, mistake accident or otherwise, and, secondly, with a view to taking an account between such parties" as required by section 12 of the Act before passing any decree against them unless for reasons recorded in writing the Court considered it unnecessary. As the defendants have not been examined as witnesses and the history and merits of the claim have not been inquired into in accordance with the provisions of the Deccan Agriculturist's Relief Act, the decree of the Court can only be maintained on the assumption that the defendants were not agriculturists on the date of the decree. Can it then be said that the point whether the defendants were or were not agriculturists was not a point involved in the suit? I am of opinion that though the status of the defendants was not expressly put in issue, it must be deemed to have been decided by necessary implication. I hold that, on the principle underlying section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, it is not now open to the defendants to argue the question of their status in execution proceedings.

I disallow the objection and order a writ to issue for the arrest of the defendants.

JUDGMENT.

Jwala Prasad, J.—This is an appeal by Masudan Lal and his brother Saligram against the order of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 25th May 1922, disallowing his application to set aside an auction-sale held in execution of a mortgage-decree.

The mortgage-decree was passed on the 14th November 1914, and the sale of the mortgaged properties took place on the 21st March 1919, which was confirmed on the 9th December, 1920. One of the properties sold was Gossaingon alias Bishunpur Gopi. Two-annas eight-pies, the share of Mr. Das, son of R. S. Das, one of the judgment-debtors, was purchased by Masudan Lal, on the 17th February 1915, in execution of his money decree. Masudan Lal obtained possession of the aforesaid 2-annas 8-pies of Gossaingon on the 6th June 1915 and got his name mutated in due course in Register D of the Collectorate. On the 13th May 1919 the entire 16-annas of Gossaingon was sold in execution of a Road-Cess Certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act and purchased by one Mahendra Narayan Das. In that certificate Masudan Lal and Salig Ram, the appellants before us, and Shyam Sahay and others were judgment-debtors. On the 6th August 1921, Mahendra applied under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside the sale of 16-annas of Mouza Gossaingon. His application was numbered Miscellaneous Case No. 125 of 1921. While this was pending, on the 11th August 1921, Masudan Lal and Salig Ram made a similar application to set aside the sale of 2-annas 8-pies of the said mouza and this was numbered Miscellaneous Case No. 129 of 1921. The applicants in both these cases applied for stay of delivery of possession which the mortgagee sought to obtain under his purchase of the 21st March 1919 in execution of the mortgage-decree of 14th November 1914.

On the 13th August 1921 the Subordinate Judge held that the decree-holder was not entitled to obtain dakhaldchani with respect to 2-annas 8-pies share purchased by Masudan Lal and Salig Ram. In spite of this order, the Subordinate Judge apparently stayed delivery of possession with respect to the entire 16-annas.

Then the decree-holders came in revision to this Court, and a Division Bench of this Court remanded the case to the Court below for giving delivery of possession over 13-annas 4-pies of the property in question.

The record of the case was received back in the Court below on the 30th March 1922, and the Subordinate Judge then proceeded with the hearing of the applications for setting aside the sale. Evidence was then taken, which consisted of documents marked Exhibit 1 (sale certificate of Mahendra), Exhibit 2 (sale certificate of Masudan Lal) and Exhibit 3 (Register D). The hearing concluded on the 20th May 1922, and after the arguments of the parties judgment in the case of Masudan Lal and Saligram (Miscellaneous Case No. 129 of 1921) was delivered on the 23rd May 1922, with the result that the Court held that Masudan Lal had "no such interest as can be said to be affected by the sale and he has therefore no right to apply for setting aside the sale."

MASUDANLAL v. RAM GULAM SAHU

Now it is contended in this Court that the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is erroneous and that Masudan Lall and Saligram had interest in the property which was affected by the sale and, therefore, they had a right to apply under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Code. The learned Subordinate Judge held that whatever interest Masudan Lall and Saligram had acquired by their purchase on the 17th February 1915 in execution of their money-decree was extinguished by the subsequent purchase of the entire mouza on the 13th May 1919 by Mahendra Narayan Das in execution of the Cess Certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act.

Mr. Jayaswal contended that the purchase of Mahendra was wholly void, and consequently it did not affect the interest acquired by Masudan Lall and Saligram. It is said that Mahendra is son-in-law of Shyam Sahai, one of the judgment-debtors in the certificate-sale, and that the purchase was benami by the judgment-debtors themselves. In support of this Mr. Jayaswal relies upon the finding of the Court in the objection of Mahendra Das in Miscellaneous Case No. 125 of 1921 wherein the Subordinate Judge held that "the judgment-debtor was the real objector in the name of his son-in-law with a bogus purchase." Mr. Jayaswal says that a judgment-debtor has no right to purchase any property in a sale held under the Public Demands Recovery Act, and refers to rule 43 of schedule 2 of Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act (Act XIV of 1914). That rule runs:—

"When a tenure or holding, situated in an area in which Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, or Chapter XVI of the Orissa Tenancy Act, 1913, is in force, is put up for sale in execution of a certificate for arrears of rent due in respect thereof, the certificate-debtor shall not bid for or purchase the tenure or holding."

The prohibition contained therein applies only to a sale of a tenure in execution of a certificate for arrears of rent due from the tenure. It does not apply to sales held in execution of certificates for any other dues, such as, cess. The execution with respect to a certificate for cess will, therefore, be governed by the general provisions of the Civil Procedure Code which, enjoins no prohibition upon a judgment-debtor making any purchase, though in r. 72, O. XXI, it enjoins upon the holder of the decree not to purchase without the express permission of the Court. This aspect of the case was apparently overlooked by Mr. Jayaswal, and the plain reading of rule 43 was also missed. It may also be pointed out that the purchase by a judgment-debtor of a tenure or holding with respect to which the prohibition contained in section 43 applies does not in itself render the sale void but that it can be avoided upon an application made by the decree-holder or any other person interested in the sale. This is obvious from clause (2) of rule 43. In no case, therefore, the sale in question in which Mahendra appeared as purchaser, dated the 13th May 1919, was a void sale, assuming that Mahendra was only a benamidar of Shyam Sahay, one of the judgment-debtors, and the latter was the real purchaser. The sale of the property in execution of the certificate for cess, dated the 13th May 1919, therefore, stands, and the effect of that sale was to extinguish the interest of Masudan Lall and Saligram.

It is then contended that no possession was delivered to the purchaser of the certificate sale, namely, Shyam Sahay or Mahendra, and consequently Masudan Lall continued to be in possession of the property which he had obtained on the 6th June 1915 and being in such possession he had interest in the property which was affected by the auction-sale in which the respondents purchased the property. But the title of the purchaser in the certificate sale did not depend upon the delivery of possession in order to perfect his title. It vested in him from the date the sale took place. The further proceedings of obtaining sale-certificate or dakhalehahi are merely in furtherance of the sale which took place on the 13th May 1919. The possession of Masudan Lall and Saligram after their right, title and interest passed to the purchaser in the certificate sale was merely on behalf of the purchaser in the latter sale. The possession of Masudan Lall and Saligram could not, therefore, be held to be on their own behalf, which they were entitled to protect. They have, therefore, no interest by virtue of their purchase. In this view the case relied upon by Mr. Jayaswal in Smith's Leading Cases, volume II, page 741, Asher v.

MASUDANLAL v. RAM GULAM SAHU

Whitlock (1), does not apply. No satisfactory evidence has been given as to the possession of Masudan Lal and Saligram after the 13th of May 1919. Some Chalans for payment of the revenue, though not exhibited in the Court below, were shown to us. They showed payments, prior to the certificate sale, of revenue and cesses by Masudan Lal and Saligram. It was also not stated before us that any Government revenue or cess was paid after the certificate sale. Therefore, as a matter of fact, they failed to prove their possession over the property. It would appear from a reference to register D that the names of Masudan Lal and Saligram do not now stand registered, but have been expunged, and in their place the name of the mortgagee-purchaser has been recorded. The entry in Register D is of no avail to the appellants to show their interest in the property based either upon title or possession. The entry is liable to be corrected, and, as a matter of fact, has been corrected.

The next argument of Mr. Jayaswal has been that inasmuch as the real purchaser at the certificate sale was one of the judgment-debtors Shyam Sahay, his purchase was that of a co-sharer and must be held to enure for the benefit of the other co-sharers, Masudan Lal and Saligram and others. In support of this Mr. Jayaswal has relied upon the following cases Jotendra Mohun Tagore v. Devendro Monee (2); Janki Singh v. Debinnandan Prasad (3), which went up to the Privy Council and the judgment whereof is reported in Deonandan Prashad v. Janki Singh (4), and Faizar Rahman v. Nimma Khatun (5). These cases have no application to the present one. In those cases the sale was brought about by the default, laches, or even fraud of one of the co-sharers who purchased the property. Therefore, it was held that the co-sharer stood in fiduciary relationship with other co-sharers in the property and he could not take advantage of his own laches or fraud so as to deprive the other co-sharers of their interest in the property. No such thing has been shewn in the present case. We cannot presume that the sale under the certificate of arrears of cess was brought about by Shyam Sahay, one of the judgment-debtors, on account of his own default, laches or fraud. The appellants had ample opportunity to prove that Shyam Sahay was guilty in having caused the sale of the property after the record was received by the Subordinate Judge from the High Court. It appears from the order sheet, extracts from which I have quoted above, that ample opportunity was given to the appellants, and in fact they had their witnesses also summoned; but no evidence was given at the hearing except the aforesaid documents Exhibits 1, 2 and 3 referred to above. We have, therefore, to base our inference upon those documents alone. Mahendra's certificate simply shows that the sale had taken place on account of arrears of cess due from the judgment-debtors among whom Masudan Lal and Saligram's names also appeared. The only possible inference is that they along with other co-sharers had equally defaulted. Therefore, the certificate-sale extinguished their interest in the property which vested in the purchaser at that sale whether he was Mahendra or one of the judgment-debtors Shyam Sahay. Upon the evidence, therefore, in the case the Court below is right in holding that the purchase by Masudan Lal and Saligram, in 1915, of 2-annas 8-pies of Gaosaingaon alias Bishunpur Gopi was of no avail to them and they ceased to have any interest after the 13th May 1919 when the entire village was sold in certificate sale.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 51 (d), O. XL, r. 1—Receiver—Appointment in form prescribed—No power reserved—Possession whether necessary for validating appointment. Power of owner to lease—Reference by Receiver to Court—No order passed—Lease by Receiver—Validity of.

A Receiver may be appointed even when the property has not been attached.

In the absence of reservation of any powers, the Receiver has full powers of the owner with reference to the property when his appointment is made in the form provided in the Code of Civil Procedure, expressly giving full powers under the provisions of O. XL of the Code. [p 812, col. 1.]

The validity of the Receiver's appointment does not depend on his taking possession of the property, but the powers commence immediately on his appointment by the Court. [p. 812, col. 2.]

The appointment of a Receiver operates as an injunction against the parties, their agents and persons claiming under them from interfering with his possession except by permission of the Court. [p. 813, col. 1.]

The owner of the property is incompetent to deal with the property including a lease from the date on which the Receiver is appointed in respect of the same. [p. 814, col. 1.]

The failure of the Court to pass orders on the reference of a Receiver does not invalidate a lease if it was within his competence to grant it under the terms of his appointment. [p. 814, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the First Subordinate Judge, Hoshangabad, in Civil Suit No. 18 of 1920, dated the 6th January 1922.

Messrs. G. L. Subhadar, and Mr. J. Sen for the Appellant.

Sir B. K. Bose, and Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are lengthy and complicated, but the only point now in dispute may be comprised within a very small compass. The essential facts are that the father of the defendants Nos. 2-4 sued the defendant No. 1 Baliram and got a decree. In execution of that decree a Receiver of the defendant's estate was appointed. After the appointment of the Receiver the defendant No. 1 leased his land to defendant No. 5. Subsequently, the Receiver let the same land to the present plaintiff. There was thus a contest between the plaintiff Kaluram and defendant No. 5 Deo Baksh for the possession of the land, and the present suit is brought by the plaintiff for damages for crops out and removed by defendant No. 5 from the land in suit.

The Subordinate Judge, Hoshangabad, awarded the plaintiff Rs. 2,532. Defendant No. 5 appeals against this decree. The plaintiff also put in a cross-appeal against the amount awarded; he does not press that and it will be accordingly dismissed.

The whole of this case depends on the powers of the Receiver from whom the plaintiff derived his title. There is no dispute as to the actual facts except as regards the possession and the value of the crops that had been removed. Most of the facts of this case will be found set out in the order-sheet of the Court executing the original decree and in the judgment of this Court in revision application arising out of these execution proceedings which is Exhibit 5 D-10, but, as I have stated, most of these facts are not material as the remaining defendants are no longer on the record. Defendant No. 1 has not appealed and the contest is now between plaintiff Kaluram and defendant No. 5 Deo Baksh and arises merely out of their respective leases.

There is no dispute as to the dates. The Receiver was appointed on 3rd December 1917; on 26th January 1918 security was dispensed with; and the lease to defendant No. 5 by defendant No. 1 was in January 1918, admittedly after the appointment of the Receiver. The right to hold the land was put to auction by the Receiver and sold to the plaintiff in March 1918, and a written lease in his favour was executed in June. So it is not disputed that the Receiver had been appointed on the date when the defendant No. 5 took the land from the defendant No. 1. The issues in this case are mainly those of law, namely, the powers of the Receiver.

It has been contended on behalf of the appellant that as the Receiver never formally took possession of the defendant No. 1's land, he had no power to deal with it, and reference is made to two cases of this Court, one Exhibit 5 D-10 in this case and the other Second Appeal No. 477 of 1921, decided on 8th July 1922 and reported in Ram Krishna v. Ganpati (1). The land of defendant No. 1 being occupancy tenancy land could not be attached, and it is admitted was never attached. The order appointing the Receiver was passed on 3rd December 1917 and the order of appointment is Exhibit P-9 and also 5 D-2, which will be found in the paper-book, dated the 26th November 1917. This is in the form prescribed in the appendix F, form 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is the form for the appointment of a Receiver under O. XL, r. 1. That form refers to the attachment of property and was copied apparently in its entirety as admittedly there is no attachment of property. It has, however, been contended that the powers of a Receiver to manage property to the exclusion of the judgment-debtor or rather the inability of the judgment-debtor to deal with the property, while it is under the management of the Receiver, depend on section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code, and, therefore, unless an attachment is made the Receiver has no power to deal with the property. Now, from section 51, Civil Procedure Code, it is clear that a Receiver may be appointed where the property has not been attached. The appointment of the Receiver in this case is made in the form provided in the Code of Civil Procedure which expressly gives him full powers under the provisions of O. XL, Civil Procedure Code, and it must, therefore, be taken that he had all the powers under O. XL, r. 1 (d), and as no powers were reserved he had all the powers of the owner with reference to the property.

The principal contention of the appellant is that unless the Receiver took formal possession of the property, he had no power to deal with it, and he, therefore, contends that he had no powers to lease it.

The second ground is that the Receiver applied for the orders of the Court as the plaintiff was unable to pay the lease money till after the harvest and that as no orders were passed the lease cannot have been supposed to have been sanctioned. Now, with regard to the powers of the Receiver it has been held by the Calcutta High Court in Hudson v. Morgan (1), that the Receiver's title to possession accrued on the date of his appointment, for as regards the rights of third persons the appointment of a Receiver does not take effect or date back by relation to a period prior to his appointment. It seems also that the appointment of the Receiver is complete on the entry of an order of appointment although he may not be able to take actual possession of the property until the security is approved. This is a clear authority for the proposition that the validity of the Receiver's appointment does not depend on his taking possession of the property, but the powers commence immediately on his appointment by the Court, which in this case was November 1917.

It will be necessary to consider whether this Court has held a contrary view as contended by the appellant. The first of the two cases referred to is 5 D-10 which is the order of this Court in revision proceedings. I need not go into the history of these proceedings. It is sufficient to say that there were several applications by the plaintiff and defendant No. 5 with regard to the appointment of the Receiver. The Subordinate Judge refused to remove the Receiver. In 1918 there were appeals against this order to the District Judge; neither the plaintiff nor the Receiver were parties to these proceedings and before the District Judge there was a compromise between the decree-holders, defendants Nos. 2-4 and defendant No. 1, as a result of which it was arranged that the property should go into the possession of defendant No. 1. This is stated by the plaintiff to be collusive, but we are not concerned with it because, admittedly, neither the plaintiff nor the Receiver were parties to it, nor can they be bound by an order passed behind their backs. The plaintiff and the Receiver then appealed to this Court and Exhibit 5 D-10 is the judgment of my learned predecessor in that matter.

The observations on which the appellants rely are as follows. "Without a formal order

(1) Ind. Cas. 856; 86 C. 713; A. L. J. 724 13 C. W. N. 654; 9 C. L. J. 653.

DEO BAKSH v. KALURAM

deciding whether Deo Baksh could be removed or not the Receiver was not entitled to place Kaluram in possession and I know no authority for the view that the Receiver could oust the judgment-debtor's lessee merely on the ground that his order of appointment was prior to the date of the lease. It does not appear that any attachment of the holding was effected at any time so that section 64, Civil Procedure Code, which makes any private transfer of attached property void as against all claims enforceable under an attachment has no application. That the mere appointment of a Receiver has a legal effect similar to that of an actual attachment does not appear from any provision of the Civil Procedure Code or from any reported case of which I am aware." These remarks must be regarded as obiter dicta.

It was held in Mahommed Zohuruddeen v. Mahommed Noorooddeen (2), that the appointment of a Receiver operates as an injunction against the parties, their agents and persons claiming under them from interfering with the possession of the Receiver, except by permission of the Court.

It would appear, therefore, that the judgment-debtor or his lessee could not interfere with the possession of the Receiver or the plaintiff, his lessee, unless with the permission of the Court.

The other case on which the appellant relies is Ramkrishna v. Ganpati, (3) of this Court in which it was held that "there was no appointment of a Receiver, but taking for the purposes of this case that a Receiver was appointed on 30th April 1918 under clause (a) of r. (1) of O. XL it is very clear that from the terms of that rule that mere appointment does not immediately vest the property in the Receiver. The transfer of the property to his possession, actual or constructive, and the conferral of special powers on him require specific orders under clauses (b), (c), (d) of the same rule and no such order was passed at that time.

Later on it is stated that even if the order of 30th April 1918 was an appointment it is impossible to hold that of itself it vested the property in the Receiver, that is to say, in the Court—much remained to be done before that could happen. and it was not done till 22nd December 1918, nearly four months after the tenant against whom the decree was being executed had been ejected, and the land had passed to the Makuzar."

It will appear that this case can be at once distinguished from the present case on the ground that there was no proper order of appointment at all or at most there was a mere order of appointment under clause (a) of rule 1 of O. XL there was no order that the should take possession.

In the present case the order of appointment, as I have said, was in form 6 of Appendix F, of the Civil Procedure Code which gave the Receiver full powers under the provisions of that order, which includes the power of taking possession, although no formal order for removing the judgment-debtor from possession was passed. The judgment-debtor himself was in possession so clause (2) of r. 1 of O. XL, Civil Procedure Code, has no application. It has been held in England that so far as respects parties to the action, the rents and profits of the estate over which a Receiver has been appointed are bound from the date of the order for the appointment: Lloyd v. Mason (4) and Codrington v. Johnstone. (5). It has also been held that a Receiver of lands does not take actual possession unless the order specifically directs him to do so: cf. Ex parte Evans (6). The same case lays down that the appointment of a Receiver of the rents of land at the instance of a judgment-creditor, though conditional on the Receiver's giving security, on registration operates as an immediate delivery of the land in execution, and when the security is afterwards given the order relates back accordingly: cf. Re. Shephard (7).

I have referred to Kerr on Receivers and Woodroffe on Receivers. It is stated there that the effect of the appointment is to remove the parties to the action from the possession of the property, subject to this that the Court cannot remove from the possession or custody of the property any person when the parties to the suit or some of them have not a present right so to remove. A Receiver of land never takes actual possession. He only receives the rent but not by virtue of an estate or title vested in him, but merely as an officer of the Court upon the title of some persons parties to the action. He has the power of leasing under the order appointing him.

On considering the law both English and Indian on the subject I am of opinion that the property must be held to have vested in the Receiver in the present case from the date of his appointment and that from that date the owner (judgment-debtor) was incompetent to lease it. This being so, the lease by the judgment-debtor to the appellant was void as against the Receiver and his lessee and the view of the lower Court is, therefore, correct.

As regards the point raised that the Court passed no order on the Receiver's reference to it regarding the postponement of the payment of rent till after the harvest, this is not of great importance. Under the terms of his appointment he had the power to lease though in important matters he is required to obtain the direction of the Court: Balaji v. Ramchandra (8). The failure of the Court to pass orders on his reference would not, in my opinion, invalidate the lease, which was within the competence of the Receiver to grant under the terms of his appointment.

The appellant has admitted in Exhibit P-8 that the Receiver took the land under his management.

The Insolvency Act has nothing to do with this case as the claim is solely against appellant (defendant 5) who is not an insolvent.

As regards plaintiff's possession which is disputed it is admitted he got the jowri. The question of plaintiff's possession has been fully discussed in paragraph 30 of the lower Court's judgment. The plaintiff was entitled to possession under the lease from the Receiver and he is entitled to damages from the person by whom he was wrongfully kept out of possession. It is immaterial whether he has paid the rent to the Receiver.

(8) 19 B 660; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.), 442.

The view of the lower Court is, in my opinion, correct.

The lower Court has considered the question of the value of the crops at great length and the only modification required is that in Schedule A attached to the plaint (Paper-book page 6) the plaintiff has valued the Bhusa at 4 baskets per rupee, whereas the Subordinate Judge has taken 2 baskets per rupee. The amount awarded for Bhusa by the lower Court is Rs. 472. This must be halved and the decretal amount accordingly reduced by Rs. 236. With this modification the decree of the lower Court, is confirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs.

APPELLANT

TODAR MAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—
RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. XXI, s. 15—Joint mortgage-decree—Execution by one decree-holder—Property purchased by decree-holder, whether for benefit of other decree-holders.

A mortgage-decree was passed in favour of several co-mortgagees. One of the decree-holders issued out execution of the decree subject to the reservation of the rights of his co-decree-holders, and himself purchased the property of the judgment-debtor setting off the purchase-money against a portion of the decretal amount;

Held, that the purchase must be deemed to have been made for the benefit of all the decree-holders and that the decree-holders other than the purchaser were entitled to recover from the latter their proportionate shares of the property.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Budaun, dated the 14th March 1923.

KHUB CHAND v. TODAR MAL

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a very clear case. One Sewa Ram, a mortgagee, left four sons who were entitled to his mortgagee rights on his death. These persons secured a decree for sale of the mortgaged property for a sum exceeding Rs. 1,200. This decree was put in execution in September 1916 by Khub Chand, defendant No. 6, alone. The learned District Judge has found that when Khub Chand applied for execution he expressly reserved the rights of his co-decree-holders, but for this reservation it is possible that the Court would have declined to execute the decree under O. XXI, r. 15, sub-clause, (2), Civil Procedure Code. The property of the judgment-debtors was put up for sale and was purchased for a sum of Rs. 5,562 in the name of the decree-holder Khub Chand. No money was paid in cash by him but the price was set off against part of the decretal amount. Khub Chand obtained a sale certificate as well as the delivery of possession and has admittedly remained in exclusive possession of the property ever since.

One of the co-decree-holders has brought the suit for recovery of possession of his one-fourth share in the property as well as mesne profits.

Both the Courts below have decreed the suit holding that the purchase must be deemed to have been made on behalf of and for the benefit of all the decree-holders.

In my opinion the view taken by the Courts below is perfectly correct. The property was purchased in lieu of a part of the decretal amount which had belonged jointly to all the decree-holders. Execution had been ordered subject to the reservation of the rights of the co-decree-holders. One decree-holder, therefore, cannot be allowed to purchase the decree exclusively for himself and realise his share of the decretal amount leaving nothing for the co-decree-holders. In equity and justice, therefore, the sale must be deemed to have taken place in favour of all the persons who were interested in the decretal amount.

The learned Vakil for the defendant-appellant has relied on a case of this Court reported in Ganeshi Lal v. Jagannath (1). It may be that that case is distinguishable from the present case inasmuch as the facts of that case were somewhat different. There the co-mortgagees had not joined in the suit at all, but had been arrayed as pro forma defendants. The decree was in favour of one mortgagee alone. Then at the time of the auction-sale it appears that the decree-holder had purchased the property for himself in spite of the protest raised by the other mortgagees. On those circumstances, the Court was of opinion that the other mortgagees had no interest in the property purchased at auction-sale though they might have had a right to insist on the deposit of the purchase-money in Court. But even if that case on principle were not distinguishable from the present case it would be impossible for me to follow it as it would then be contrary to the view expressed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ganga Sahai v. Kesri (2). In this latter case Ganga Sahai one of the co-decree-holders, had applied for execution of his mortgage-decree against the mortgagor and his application had stated that execution was sought subject to the rights of the other mortgagees. The purchase, however, was made by Ganga Sahai himself in his own name and the purchase-money was set off against the decretal amount. Their Lordships held that the properties in question must be deemed to have been purchased for the benefit of all the mortgagees and that the co-decree-holders were entitled to recover from Ganga Sahai their proportionate share of the properties purchased by him in execution of the joint mortgage-decree, in fact the present case is quite parallel to it.

In my opinion, therefore, there is no force in this appeal and I dismiss it under O. XLI, r. 11, Civil Procedure Code.

SARADINDU MUKERJEE v. GIRISH CHANDRA TEWARI

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CIVIL RULE 1090 OF 1923.

January 30, 1924.

Present :—Mr. Justice Suhrawardy.SARADINDU MUKERJEE AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS*versus*GIRISH CHANDRA TEWARI—OPPOSITE PARTY.Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. XLVII, r. 1.—Execution of decree—Dismissal for default—Restoration, application for—Review—Appeal, whether lies.

An execution case was erroneously dismissed for default and the decree-holder applied for restoration of the case by way of review and also headed his application under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. The application was allowed :

Held, that the application for restoration was one under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code and the mere fact that it was also described as an application for review did not give the judgment-debtor a right of appeal against the order of restoration.

Rule against the order of the District Judge of Nadia, dated the 9th July 1923.

Babu Girija Prosanna Rai Choudhury (with him Babus Romesh Chandra Sen and Bankim Chandra Banerji), for the Petitioners.

Babu Tarakeswar Pal Chaudhury, for the Opposite-Party.

JUDGMENT.—The facts relating to this Rule are that the petitioners (who are the decree-holders) attached in execution of their decree certain properties belonging to the judgment-debtor. A claim was preferred by a certain person in respect of two of those properties. The petitioners applied for the issue of the sale proclamation and it was ordered on the 13th February 1922 that the sale proclamation might issue on their depositing costs. On the 18th March 1922 the claim was allowed and two of the properties were released from attachment. On the 18th March the petitioners applied for the issue of fresh sale-proclamation in respect of the remaining properties. The order passed thereon was that the 11th May 1922 be fixed for the sale and that the sale proclamation should issue on the petitioners' paying the necessary costs. On the 11th May, the following order was passed. "Correct process not filed and no further steps taken. The execution case be dismissed for default." In the petition which has been presented to this Court it is alleged that the petitioners were asked by the officer-in-charge of the Execution Department to take back the sale proclamations previously filed and to file correct ones. The petitioners thereupon put in two correct proclamations and two new proclamations and offered to deposit costs for the usual advertisement in the newspapers. They, however, did not alter the original date that was put on the processes because they say that the dates were to be put in by the officers of the Court under r. 11, sub-rules (1 and 4) of the General Rules and Circular Orders (Civil) of the High Court. On the 11th May, it is further alleged that their officer went to the officer-in-charge of the Execution Department and was given to understand that the sale day was again fixed for the 13th July. These allegations have not been contradicted and I must take them as they stand, as it appears that the learned Munsif who had to enquire into this matter believed this state of things. On the 11th May the Court passed the following order: "Correct processes not filed. No further steps taken. Execution case be dismissed for default". It does not appear from the order, nor have I been enlightened upon this point, as to which portion of the processes filed was incorrect. But I take it, as has been alleged by the petitioner, that the incorrectness lay in the wrong date that was allowed to stand on the proclamations. Thereafter, the petitioners applied for setting aside the order passed on the 11th May and for restoration of the execution case. The application was headed under O. XLVII, r. 1 and section 151, Civil Procedure Code. That application was registered as one under O. XLVII, r. 1. It was presented not before the officer who passed the order on the 11th May, but before his successor and it was heard by another officer succeeding the latter. The learned Munsif who heard this application purported to treat the application as one under O. XLVII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code. After considering the circumstances of the case his conclusions were summed up in these terms: In any view it appears that there are good grounds for restoring the case to file and setting aside the order of dismissal passed in this case. There was an appeal from this order of restoration of the execution case to the District Judge. The learned District Judge held that the application under O. XLVII, r. 1 was incompetent inasmuch as there were contraventions of r. 2, not having been presented to the Court that passed the order sought to be revised. In this view he decreed the appeal and allowed the order of dismissal passed on the 11th May to stand.

Against this order this Rule is directed and it is urged that the Courts below were wrong in placing the petitioners' application under O. XLVII, r. 1, as it was in reality an application under section 151, Civil Procedure Code. The same point was raised before the learned Judge and he was of opinion that the provisions of section 151 could not be invoked in the present case because the Court, in the exercise of its inherent power, cannot assume jurisdiction to grant a review where it is expressly forbidden by the Legislature. This view is correct if the application was made by the petitioner under O. XLVII, r. 1. I have quoted the ordering portion of the Munsif's judgment which looked as if the order was passed under O. IX, r. 6 (2), if that provision of the law be applicable to execution proceedings. The learned Munsif seems to have been of the opinion that the mistake was due to the Court and that the petitioners were not at fault. It is admitted by the learned Judge that this is a very hard case. The learned Judge further observes in determining the question of costs that the order dismissing the petition for execution was wrongly passed and he does not think that he should also allow the appellant's costs. It is, therefore, conceded that the order passed on the 11th May was wrongly passed. That being so, I think it is a fit case in which I should interfere in the exercise of my revisional jurisdiction either with the order of the learned District Judge on appeal or with the order passed by the Munsif on the 11th May 1922. It was no doubt an error on the part of the petitioners to have headed their application as one under O. XLVII, r. 1 also. Probably it was prepared for presentation before the officer who had passed the original order, but his departure made the application for review infructuous. But it also purported to have been made under section 151 on the ground that it was due to the mistake of the Court that their execution case was dismissed for default. Though the learned Munsif treated it as an application for review of judgment, it was open to the petitioners to argue before him that it was an application under section 151. A similar view was taken under very similar circumstances in the case of Abdul Rahaman Saha v. Shahana (1). If it was not an application under O. XLVII, r. 1 but an application under section 151 clearly no appeal lay to the District Judge. I should, therefore, set aside the order of the District Judge in appeal restoring the order of the Munsif passed on the 11th May 1922: and I further set aside the order passed by the Munsif on the 11th May 1922 and restore the execution case to its file. As these proceedings are the result of the fault of no party, I make no order for costs in any of the Courts.

DEFENDANTS.

Cutchi Memons—Succession—Inheritance—Hindu Law—Muhammadan Law—Joint family property—Presumption—Commensality—Partition amongst Muhammadans—Property acquired by one member—Jointness—Burden of proof.

In matters of succession and inheritance Cutchi Memons are governed by Hindu Law. [p. 826, col. 2.]

There is no such thing as joint family property under Muhammadan Law and the presumption of Hindu Law that money spent by a member of the family came from the joint fund is not applicable to Muhammadans. [p. 827, col. 1.]

YUSIF MAHOMED v. ABUBACKER IBRAHIM

Amongst Muhammadans mere commensality is insufficient to prove jointness in estate.

In a partition-suit amongst Muhammadans the burden of proof that property acquired by one member only was purchased out of the joint fund, is on the members who allege it.

Mr. Jhamatmal Valiram, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Khanchand Gopaldas, for the Defendant No. 1.

Mr. Gordhandas A. Kikla, for the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this suit are Cutchi Memons. Plaintiff is Yusif, son of Mahomed, defendant No. 1, is his paternal uncle Abubacker and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are the daughter and wife of Ahmed, deceased, the brother of Mahomed and Abubacker. The suit is for partition of immoveable and moveable property the latter consisting of cash, ornaments and furniture detailed in the schedule attached to the plaint and the former of a house purchased by Abubacker in 1917 for Rs. 29,500. The allegations in the plaint are that Mahomed, the father of the plaintiff, who died in 1917, Ahmed who died in 1906 and defendant No 1 were brothers, sons of Ibrahim Hassan, Ibrahim died in 1896 and it is alleged that both in his life time and after his death they lived together, their earnings were thrown into a common fund, and they were joint in food and estate. In his life time Ibrahim did the business of supplying provisions to residents at Manora. After his death Ahmed carried on the business and after Ahmed's death, defendant No. 1, Abubacker, has been attending to it. It is alleged that though Mahomed did not actively participate in the supply of provisions at Manora owing to his physical incapacity, his legs being paralysed and he could move about only with the aid of crutches, yet he materially assisted in the Manora business by writing up the accounts, helping in the purchase of provisions and effecting settlement of disputes that arose with the customers. Whilst Ahmed and Abubacker attended to the Manora business, plaintiffs say that Mahomed engaged himself in cane work which he could manage with the aid of servants in spite of his crippled condition, and contributed his earnings to the common stock. It is also contended that Ahmed, during the period that he managed the Manora business, also placed his earning in a common fund and as Abubacker has purchased the property in suit with the aid of the joint funds, he is responsible to the plaintiff, as the son of Mahomed, for his share in it. With regard to the cash, ornaments and furniture which it is alleged have been wholly appropriated by defendant No. 1, plaintiff asks that his share in them be awarded to him as they are joint family property. The suit was filed on the 19th July 1919 on a Court-fees stamp of Rs. 10 and for the purposes of jurisdiction the subject-matter of the suit was estimated at Rs. 80,000, but the plaintiff contends that he is in joint possession of the family properties with defendant No. 1. In the plaint, as originally filed, the only defendant was Abubacker. Plaintiff amended his plaint later by bringing on the record Amibai, the daughter, and Mariam, the widow, of Ahmed deceased.

In the plaint, as originally framed, it is alleged that the parties to the suit, being Cutchi Memons, are governed by Hindu Law in matters of inheritance and succession and that they were possessed of joint family property which remained unpartitioned. In his opening address to the Court, Mr. Jhamatmal, for the plaintiffs set out a case which appeared to me not to be borne out by his allegations in the plaint and I suggested to him that an amendment of his plaint was essential if he intended to establish the case that was outlined in his address. He accordingly applied for the amendment of his plaint and for para. 1 of the original plaint he desired to substitute the following:—"That the plaintiff's father Mahomed, son of Ibrahim, defendant No. 1 and Ahmed, son of Ibrahim, father of defendant No. 2 and husband of defendant No. 2, are all three brothers and by caste, Cutchi Memon, and as such, according to custom and usage applicable to the parties, are governed by Hindu Law in matters of succession, inheritance and property." And in lieu of para. 4 of the original plaint, the following para: "plaintiff claims partition of these properties as joint family properties acquired either by inheritance or survivorship and from the joint earnings of the members thereof, during the life-time and thereafter of Ibrahim, the common ancestor of the parties, the parties and their other deceased ancestors having continued to live, work and own property jointly up to the date of death of the plaintiff's father Mahomed. It is further submitted that plaintiff and his father were either joint tenants or tenants in common, with the defendants in regard to the said properties and according to custom and law plaintiff is entitled to seek partition of the said properties."

Mr. Khanchand for defendant No. 1 strongly objected to the amendment application being granted as, apart from the time that had elapsed since the filing of the suit, he contended that the plaintiff was attempting to make out a new case which was not set out in the original plaint. It is true that four years have elapsed since the suit was filed, and were it not for the suggestion that emanated from the Court the plaintiffs would have proceeded to trial of the suit as originally framed. In view of the grounds as propounded by Mr. Jhamatmal on which the plaintiffs seek relief, the plaint is rather inartistically drawn but I do not think that the amendment sets out a new case. It only seeks to amplify and state more specifically the grounds on which the plaintiff's case is based. Mr. Khanchand for the defendant urged that in the plaint as first filed there was no reference to the joint earnings of the brothers nor did the plaintiff assert that the Hindu Law, not only as to succession and inheritance but also as to property governed the parties to the suit. But the original plaint does emphasize the point that the brothers were possessed of joint family property and by implication that their earnings were joint as they not only lived together but were joint in food, as to Hindu law being applicable to Cutchi Memons with its characteristic incidents as to the devolution of property is not to set out an inconsistent case but only to enlarge the grounds on which relief is sought. In my opinion the powers of amendment as vested in the Courts by O.VI r. 17, Civil Procedure Code, cannot be circumscribed in the manner that defendant No. 1's pleader would have me to do and I think all such amendments should be allowed as may be necessary for determining the questions in controversy between the parties. I, therefore, allowed the amendment and was prepared to safeguard the interests of Mr. Khanchand's client against any prejudice that may be caused to him by the amendment, but he did not desire to file any supplementary written statement or to amend the issue but preferred to proceed forthwith with the hearing of the case. As regards defendants Nos. 2 and 3 they make common cause with the plaintiff and had nothing to urge against the amendment.

In addition to the moveable property described in the annexure to the plaint and of which partition is sought, there are five immoveable properties in respect of which plaintiff originally claimed partition. Two of these were plots Nos. 74 and 63 with buildings thereon situated in the Rambagh Quarter, Karachi. These originally belonged to Hussan, the father of Wahidino and Ibrahim. The parties to this suit desired that the dispute between them as regards these properties should be referred to the joint arbitration of Messrs. Lobo and Jhamatmal, pleaders. There were other persons that were interested in the estate of Hussan who also signed the reference. The award is Exhibit 15. I shall have to refer to it later in my judgment. The rights of the parties are concluded by this award and the dispute between them as regards these two properties is withdrawn from the jurisdiction of this Court. The other two immoveable properties, Plot No. 75 situated in the Serai Quarter and Plot No. 3 with buildings thereon situated on the Port Trust land, admittedly belonged to Wahidino, the brother of Ibrahim. Wahidino and his immediate heirs being dead, the only male descendants were plaintiff and defendant No. 1 and again the parties, that is, plaintiff and defendant No. 1, appointed Messrs. Lobo and Jhamatmal as Commissioners to partition the properties between them. This has been done and the Commissioner's report accepted by the parties is on the record.

The present suit is, therefore, confined to the rights of the parties to Plot No. 76, with buildings thereon purchased by Abu Backer in July 1917 situate in Serai Quarter, and a share in certain jewellery, cash and furniture to which I shall advert later.

The position taken by defendant No. 1 as formulated in his written statement may be summarized as follows:—He denies that he and plaintiff's father were joint in food or estate or that they lived together. Plot No. 76 was purchased by him in his name and with his earnings and he has been in exclusive possession of it and the plaintiff iff has no interest in it nor defendants Nos. 2 or 3. He denies that he had in his possession any jewellery, cash, or furniture to which the plaintiff or defendants Nos. 2 or 3 are entitled.

With regard to the position of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in this suit it is necessary to set out the following facts. This suit was filed on the 10th July 1919, as I have observed, against defendant No. 1 only. On the 27th October 1919 an application was made to bring on the record as co-defendants Nos. 2 and 3. This application was granted on the 13th November 1919. On the 10th October 1919 Mr. Lobo undertook to file a Vakalatnama on behalf of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 but none was filed nor any written statement on their behalf. Issues were framed on the 11th March 1920 and the suit set down for hearing on the 26th October 1920. It was only on the 23rd June 1923 that defendants applied to file their written statement. Mr. Aston, before whom this suit was then for disposal, after hearing the arguments disallowed this application. When the suit was called on for hearing before me defendants Nos. 2 and 3 filed their written statements and asked me to admit it on the record. I, however, declined to do so both on the ground of the previous rejection for which good reasons were given and also I was of opinion that after the lapse of four years since the institution of the suit and the absence of adequate reasons to justify so belated a written statement, it should not now be admitted on the record. Mr. Kikla who represented defendants Nos. 2 and 3 stated that he did not press for any adjournment if the written statement was accepted but its acceptance would render it necessary for the plaintiff to file a rejoinder and I thought it imperative to proceed with the hearing, of a case that had been awaiting disposal for four years.

The issues framed in the case were the following:—

1. Are Jumnabai widow of Usman son of Umer, Rabiabai, Asibai, Karimabai daughters of Wahidino, necessary parties to the suit?
2. Is the suit sufficiently stamped?
3. Did plaintiff, his father Mahomed, son of Ibrahim, defendant No. 1 and Ahmed, son of Ibrahim, form a joint family? If so what was the joint family property?
4. Is plaintiff entitled to a share in Plot No. 76 sheet B21 and the cash and jewellery shown in the schedule attached to the plaint?

5. What provision should be made for defendants Nos. 2 and 3?

6. What order should be made as to costs Covers paras. 10 and 12 of the written statement.

7. Is the defendant No. 1 entitled to credit for expenses incurred by him in connection with the estate of Wahidino?

8. General.

Issues Nos. 1, 5, 7 are not pressed and issues, 3 and 4 form the crux of the case and I address myself to their discussion. It has been established that Ibrahim in his life time did what is called the "Mannora business," that is, the supply of provisions to the European residents of Manora, a privilege that is only enjoyed by those who hold a license for the purpose from the Port Officer. How long he did this business and what was the income earned by him, and whether he left any cash or other property at the time of his death are not shown. It is clear that his three sons lived with him till his death, Mahomed being the eldest, next Ahmed, and the youngest was Abubackar, defendant. The evidence adduced by the plaintiff as to the brothers living together and being joint in food and estate and, above all, their earnings being thrown into a common fund is certainly divergent and the witnesses are not agreed to the actual state of things in the plaintiff's family. Some of the witnesses are related to the plaintiff, some have drawn largely on their imagination in their attempt to support the plaintiff's case but some appear to me to have made an honest attempt to state the facts as far as they are within their knowledge and in my view, the following facts may be taken as established on the evidence in the case:—

We must start with the fundamental consideration before our mind that plaintiff is the son of Mahomed and that it is in this capacity that he claims a share in the property in suit. It is true that the property of Hassan, the father of Ibrahim remained unpartitioned after his death till the suit was filed. This consisted of the two buildings on the two plots Nos. 74 and 63 to which I have referred above, but these remained unpartitioned even in the life time of the two sons of Hassan, viz., Wahidino and Ibrahim. They were partitioned only after this suit was filed and in them others had an interest besides the parties to this suit. Hence they afford no indication of the brothers Mahomed, Ahmed, and Abubacker being joint in estate and the other sharers in Hassan's property were admittedly not joint with Ibrahim or his sons.

Equally, the partition of the property left by Wahidino between the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1 after this suit was filed does not necessarily lead to the inference that the brothers were joint in estate. The male descendants of Wahidino died after him and but for this unfortunate incident, Wahidino's estate would have fallen neither to the lot of the plaintiff nor defendant No. 1. It is true that after the death of Abdur Rahman, son of Wahidino, Abubacker managed the estate of Wahidino but he did so at the request of the widow of Abdur Rahman and in the absence of any adult heir of Wahidino to look after it. There is no other immoveable property except that purchased by defendant No. 1 which is the subject matter of this suit. When it was purchased in 1917 Mahomed was still alive and there is no doubt that he urged his claim to a share in it which was immediately resisted by defendant No. 1. Admittedly, this property was purchased by defendant No. 1 and stands in his name alone and there is not the slightest doubt on the evidence that it had been exclusively in the possession of Abubacker since the purchase, in fact, plaintiff does not even venture to assert that it was ever in his or his father's possession. The allegation, therefore, that the three brothers were joint in estate has very little to support it so far as the immoveable property is concerned. It has, however, been strenuously urged that the purchase-money was drawn by defendant No. 1 out of the joint funds and that out of his own earnings it was impossible for Abubacker to accumulate the sum of Rs. 29,500 which was the purchase price.

This leads me to the consideration of the evidence as to the earnings of the brothers being joint.

I have remarked above that there is no evidence that Ibrahim left any property at his death.

It is in evidence that in Ibrahim's life time Mahomed was in the service of Nusserwanji and Co., for some years. After leaving this service he opened a shop for the sale of sundry articles at Keamari. This shop was carried on for about a year when it had to be closed owing to Mahomed's insanity and Mahomed was consigned to the Lunatic Asylum at Gidu Bunder for about six months. On his recovery he proceeded to Aden in some service and whilst he was still in Aden his father died. It has been impossible to elicit from the witnesses the dates as to the events mentioned above but it may be taken as established that in 1896, the year of the death of Ibrahim, Mahomed was in Aden. He remained at Aden for about a year. On his return he did the business of hawking goods in the shops at Keamari and started a tailoring shop. In 1897, according to the evidence of Yusif Rahimtulla, Ex. 20, a witness for the plaintiff "Mahomed was paralysed and he could not do any work after that and he had to be assisted by others to rise. He opened a shop for his son for caning work with the aid of two servants and Mahomed supervised." Almost all the witnesses are agreed as to Mahomed being afflicted with paralysis of the legs and could move about, if at all, with the aid of crutches. The evidence is practically uniform that this affliction befell Mahomed about 20 years before his death which occurred in 1917.

With this physical infirmity on him it is perfectly evident that Mahomed could not attend to the Manora business. It is, however, urged that his interest in the Manorabusiness is demonstrated by the assistance rendered by him to both Ahmed and defendant No. 1 in its management. It is said that he wrote up the accounts of the Manorabusiness which were dictated to him by both Ahmed and Abubacker every evening, it is also said that he helped his brothers in the purchase of provisions for Manora, that before the provisions were daily carted to Manora, they were brought in every morning at his cane shop where apparently they were sorted out and, lastly, that he advised his brothers as to the business. Now, with regard to Mahomed entering up the accounts of the provisions supplied at Manora, three account books were produced which plaintiff asserted were in the hand-writing of Mahomed. Defendant No 1, however, denies the assertion flatly and says that the hand-writing in the books is that of Ahmed. Certainly there is some evidence to show, independently of the account-books produced that Mahomed did write down the accounts of the provisions supplied at Manora but whether he did so daily and for what period the evidence is conflicting. Defendant No. 1 denies outright that Mahomed ever wrote up the accounts of the Manora provisions but I am not prepared to accept his unqualified denial. I think it quite probable that Mahomed did occasionally write up the accounts of the Manora business both in the life time of Ahmed and Abubacker but this circumstance has to my mind a very remote connection with Mahomed's interest in the Manora business so as to entitle him to a share in the earnings. Mahomed's children were fed and maintained by Ahmed and Abubacker and in consideration of this and as the eldest brother Mahomed rendered such assistance to his brothers as his physical condition allowed him to, it is difficult to draw the inference that Mahomed was a partner with either of his brothers in their earnings. Equally feeble is the argument as to the purchase of provisions by Mahomed. From the evidence I can only gather that Mahomed sometimes accompanied one or the other of his brothers in a carriage to the market when they went to make their purchases and Mahomed may well have done this more for the sake of an outing in the morning rather than to assist his brothers in the purchases. It is not alleged that he rendered any active assistance in the purchase of the provisions. Again, the provisions were probably brought to the cane shop of Mahomed before they were taken to Manora but this shop was situated on the Bunder Road, by which the brothers had to drive on their way to Manora, and their alighting at the shop and probably re-arranging the stock they had purchased could hardly be said to be a piece of evidence establishing the interest of Mahomed in the Manora business. It was also sought to prove Mahomed's participation in the earnings of the Manora business by the allegation that the dogcart which Mahomed used was still in the service of Abubacker. It is not apparent on the evidence whether this cart was purchased by Mahomed or Ahmed though all the three brothers have been using it and from this again the conclusion is deduced that the brothers were joint in their earnings. Mr. Jhamatmal was constrained to admit that each of these items by itself would have very little probative value but he urged that the cumulative effect of them was such as to lead to the only conclusion that the three brothers were joint in their earnings. In my opinion the evidence, even if taken collectively, cannot and does not establish that the brothers were joint in their earnings from the Manora business.

Now, so far as Ahmed and Abubacker are concerned, their only source of income was the Manora business, Mahomed was a physical and mental wreck. It is not shown that by any of his adventures before he took to cane work, he had either accumulated any savings or contributed to the family support. The only business that he attended to for about 15 years was the cane work. His son Yusuf says he earned about Rs. 200 per mensem out of this business, whereas Abubacker puts it down at Rs. 50 to Rs. 60. No account-books are produced though it is stated that accounts were kept of the earnings from the cane business. I will not go the length of saying that Mahomed was a debauchee but it appears from the plaintiff's own witnesses that he occasionally enjoyed the nautes of dancing girls and drank liquor. All this meant expence and it seems tolerably certain that Mahomed's earnings, which certainly could not have been Rs. 200 as stated, must have been exhausted upon himself.

On the evidence I have not the least hesitation in holding that Mahomed did not and could not have contributed anything to the joint funds even if these did exist.

It was urged that all the three brothers lived together as long as Ahmed and Mahomed were alive and had their food together and their earnings were kept jointly in a family box out of which the household expenses were defrayed. It appears from the evidence that Ibrahim and Wahidino, his brother, lived in the same compound but after Ibrahim's death there arose some dispute the particulars of which are not quite clear but Ahmed, Abubacker, the children of Mahomed (his wife being then dead) left the place and took up their residence in another house whereas Mahomed still continued in the same place. All the members of the family except Mahomed first lived in the house of one Abdulla Kadirdino and after a short time transferred themselves to the house of Bachal Kadirdino. Mahomed, after leaving the compound of Wahidino, first took up his abode in the house of Faizullah and then engaged the house of Sidik which is described as his otak. All these houses were no doubt in close proximity of one another. It is argued that Mahomed lived apart from the others as there was not sufficient room in the house of Abdulla Kadirdino and that Sidik's house was engaged by him as his otak for the purposes of his cane business. Now there is no doubt on the evidence that Mahomed, though living apart, had his meals with the others which were either sent to him at his residence or he came over to the family house where he partook of them. It is contended that, in spite of Mahomed living apart, I must hold that the three brothers lived jointly as they were joint in food and Mahomed's children lived with the others. So far as the three brothers living together is concerned, I have stated the facts as disclosed by the evidence and mere commensality is not sufficient to prove that the brothers were joint in estate. Much stress is, however, laid upon the earnings of the brothers being joint and this seems to be the crucial point in the case for, according to the plaintiff, it is out of the joint earnings that the immoveable property in dispute in this suit was purchased by Abubacker. Undoubtedly, it is difficult to procure evidence as to the internal condition of things in a family and Mr. Jhamatmal has pressed upon my attention the evidence, of Mariam, defendant No. 3, the wife of Ahmed. Before I touch upon her evidence it is necessary to premise that she is witness very much interested in the success of the plaintiff's case. Ever since the death of Ahmed Mariam and her daughter, defendant No. 2, have lived with defendant No. 1. It is only about two or three years prior to the suit that she lived apart owing to a disagreement with defendant No. 1. Her daughter is married to the plaintiff and in this suit Mariam complains as to defendant No. 1 not having returned all her ornaments and claims them from him. There is evidence on the record to show that at the intervention of some respectable members of the community defendant No. 1 was induced to return her ornaments which he did, and a list of the ornaments returned was prepared and signed by witnesses. Mariam, however, still charges the plaintiff with not having returned to her all her ornaments. Considering, therefore, the existing relationship between defendant No. 1 and Mariam it is hardly possible to look upon the latter as a disinterested witness and to my mind her evidence in the case has been clearly inspired by the motive of be-friending the plaintiff.

According to the evidence of Mariam, when she married Ahmed, both Ibrahim and Mahomed's wife were dead and defendant Nos 1 was then about 14 years of age. Mahomed, she says, was doing cane work, and had been a paralytic for two or three years prior to her marriage. She has resiled from the latter portion of her statement in her cross-examination for she said that Mahomed became a paralytic at the time of her marriage and attended to cane work about eight years after her marriage. The substantial portion of her evidence with regard to the joint earning is the following. "All the three brothers kept their earnings in one box. The key remained with my husband ever since my marriage. The key remained with Ahmed as he did the Manora business. After Ahmed's death the key remained with Abubacker. "Again, in her evidence later she says : " Mahomed brought cash and notes to the house when he worked at the cane shop but I do not know how much it was. Mahomed used to give the money he brought to Ahmed and Abu but I do not know how much it was. I do not know how much Mahomed earned a day. He said it was Rs 5 to Rs. 8 a day " Again, " the money that was spent in the house was given me by Mahomed. " But she contradicts herself again and says " when Ahmed was alive he gave me the money for the house hold provisions and after Ahmed's death, Abubacker. " It is mainly on her evidence that Mr. Jhamatmal has relied as to proof of joint earnings coupled with the pathetic plea that it was impossible for him to get any other evidence as to the condition of things in the management of the household. To my mind Mariam's evidence appears untrustworthy and I have little doubt that she had indulged in reckless statements at the sacrifice of truth. She has gone the length of stating in her evidence, though she admits she never saw what money or jewellery was lying in the cash box, that at the time of Ahmed's death there was a sum of Rs. 5,000 to 7,000 and this, she says, she learnt from Mahomed and Abubacker. Further, to show that all the brothers participated in the management of the household, she stated that Mahomed supplied the grain, Abubacker the vegetables and Ahmed the rest of the provisions. As the only adult female member of the house for some years after her marriage Mariam no doubt looked after the creature comforts of the other members of the family but her evidence as to the earnings being joint appears to me entirely unreliable. According to her, Mahomed was a paralytic when she married and incapable, therefore, of contributing to the support of the family. Ahmed was the only working man as Abubacker was then 14 years of age, and it was clearly Ahmed that supported his elder brother as he did his children. Mahomed's savings from his cane work seem to me a myth. Prior to Mahomed taking to cane work there is not a tittle of evidence on the record to show that Mahomed had any savings and after he started the cane business there is evidence of the plaintiffs own witness that Abubacker had to help him with funds: See Exhibit 26. Baumuttala Ishak a cousin of Mariam Abubacker has stated in his evidence that he occasionally helped Mahomed with money who otherwise quarrelled with him. Mr. Jhamatmal argued that this pecuniary aid to Mahomed was an indication as to the brothers being joint. I think otherwise, and in my opinion these money advances were rather intended to procure peace and prevent family squabbles. I may further observe that, even according to some of the plaintiff's witnesses, Mahomed had no concern in the Manora business. Thus, for instance, the witness Yusuf Rahimtulla, Exhibit 20, whose evidence Mr. Jhamatmal stated he accepted, says Mahomed never attended to the Manora business as he was lame. The Manora earnings were kept by Ahmed at first and after his death by Abubacker. They never gave any of these earnings to Mahomed. With regard to the accounts the witness says: "Mahomed kept the accounts for one or two years after Ahmed's death. Rahimtulla Isakh, Exhibit 23, witness for the plaintiff, says Mahomed had no concern with the Manora business."

Exhibit 26, Nur Mahomed, states Mahomed had no connection with the Manora business.

Two other incidents were relied upon by the plaintiff's pleader as supporting his contention that the brothers were joint in estate. One was that the ornaments of the wife of Mahomed were given to Halima, the sister of the three brothers, on her marriage. The evidence on this point is slender but, even assuming the truth of this statement, it is difficult to infer that the brothers were joint in estate or in their earnings. Mahomed probably had no use for these ornaments after his wife's death and hence may have handed them to his sister at her marriage. The second point was that the daughter of Mahomed had been married at the expense of Abubacker and that Abubacker defrayed half the expense of the marriage of defendant No. 2 with the plaintiff. This would be quite natural as he was the uncle of both and the father of Amibai was dead.

Taking all the circumstances into consideration, even the cumulative effect of the various incidents as to the alleged jointness, as Mr. Jhamatmal would have me do, I am far from being convinced on the evidence that Mahomed was joint in estate or in earnings with Ahmed and Abubacker. I am not even prepared to hold that the three brothers could be considered as living together as Mr. Jhamatmal argues, though they supplied Mahomed with his meals.

Now, if Mahomed is held not to have been joint with his brother either in estate or in his earnings, much less Yusuf, the plaintiff. In fact, the only basis of his claim is that he is the son of Mahomed. He states that he was about 14 years of age at the time of the death of Ahmed and, so far as the Manora business was concerned all that he did was to accompany Abubacker to Manora occasionally, it was probably a pleasure trip for him. He was maintained and supported by Ahmed and Abubacker, till he was about 15 years of age when, according to him, his father Mahomed started the cane business and he was made to learn it and he is still engaged in this business. Again, according to Yusuf, his father slept at the otak at night and spent also the day there coming to the family house where Yusuf stayed only for his meals. I need not enlarge on the claim of Yusuf independently of his father to any share in the property in suit because he clearly has none, nor did his pleader make the faintest attempt to establish it. I propose now to deal with the position of Ahmed in the family for it was argued by Mr. Jhamatmal that if it were proved that Ahmed and Abubacker were joint in estate, the presumption will be that Ahmed was also joint with them. This argument is, of course, based on the rather startling assertion made by Mr. Jhamatmal that the Hindu Law of joint family property is also applicable to Cutchi Memons. I shall advert to the legal aspect of the case later.

Notwithstanding the denial of defendant No. 1, I am inclined to hold on the evidence that on the death of Ibrahim, the Manora business was attended to by Ahmed. The contention of the defendant No. 1 is that after the death of Ibrahim, Ahmed took service with one Karim Ahmed and proceeded to Quetta from which place he returned after a year and opened a tea shop for a short time. Then his uncle Nur Mahomed Fakir Mahomed who also did the business of supplying provisions at Manora made over his business to Ahmed and it was this business that he carried on till his death. The object of this defence is apparently to show that it was not Ibrahim's business that descended to Ahmed. The evidence of some of the plaintiff's witnesses, particularly that of Rahimtulla Ishaq, Ex. 23, and Nur Mahomed, Ex. 26, is to the effect that at Ibrahim's death it was Ahmed that took up the Manora business. The probabilities would also point to it, for though the business in normal times may not be very lucrative, yet it was a source of income to the family which could not easily be despised and the fact that it continues in the family to the present day shows that it has been regarded as a valuable asset. Now, it is possibly the case that Ahmed did take service in Quetta and subsequently opened a tea shop but this was probably during the period that his license to supply provisions at Manora had been stopped by the Port Officer the prohibition having lasted for about three years. The evidence shows that when Nur Mahomed Fakir Mahomed ceased to supply provisions at Manora he succeeded in making over his customers to Ahmed and the latter did the business till his death. This would, therefore, tend to establish that though Ahmed did continue Ibrahim's business on his death yet he ceased to do it for about three years and Ibrahim's customers, therefore, must have passed into the hands of other suppliers and the business that Ahmed secured later was not the business of Ibrahim but that of Nur Mahomed Fakir Mahomed. Now, according to Abubacker, he helped Ahmed in the Manora business and he was fed, clothed and supported by Ahmed and was married at his expense. Abubacker who describes himself as 38 years of age, must have been about 20 or 21 years old when Ahmed died, and in all probability he was satisfied with Ahmed supplying all his wants without giving him any salary. The position then was that, till Ahmed's death, he was the only earning member of the family and defrayed all the household expenses. Under these circumstances, there were no joint earnings of Ahmed and Abubacker nor was there any joint estate except that Ahmed and Abubacker were joint in food till the death of the former. What cash Ahmed left at his death is not apparent except Mariam's reckless statement that there was about Rs. 7,000 in the family cash-box. I am not unmindful of the statement of Abubacker elicited from him in cross-examination that he treated Ahmed's earnings as joint as between himself and Ahmed but this is obviously due to his regarding them as joint as he helped Ahmed in the Manora business. There is not a scintilla of evidence otherwise to show that Ahmed's earnings were joint. There now remains for consideration the argument that it was impossible for Abubacker to purchase the property in suit without the aid of the joint funds. It is argued that Abubacker's earnings from the Manora business could not have enabled him to accumulate the purchase price. The evidence for the defence on this point may be thus summarised.

After the death of Abdur Rahman the son of Wahidino Abubacker was asked by the widow of Abdur Rahman to manage the properties left by Wahidino and recover the rents. This Abubacker has been doing ever since 1912 and it does not appear that he shared the rents that he recovered with any of the other relatives of Wahidino. I do not for a moment insinuate that he has misappropriated them and the Commissioners in effecting a partition of Wahidino's estate took this point into consideration. But it serves to explain that Abubacker may have had the benefit of the rents besides his earnings from the Manora business. At any rate, the burden was on the plaintiff to prove that the Rs. 24,000 which Abubacker paid towards the purchase of the house in suit or any part thereof was taken from the joint earnings or from any part of the joint property, and this he has certainly failed to do.

On the merits of the case, my conclusions are that there was no joint property left by Ibrahim nor did the threebr others acquire any joint property. Also that they did not either live together nor were their earnings joint. They had a common table but this is no indication they were either joint in property or in earnings. Mahomed had no interest in the earnings of Abubacker in the Manora business, neither the plaintiff. And the purchase price paid for the house in suit was out of the separate estate of Abubacker. This would suffice to dispose of this case so far as the plaintiff is concerned. But in deference to the legal arguments addressed to me I shall touch upon them briefly. Mr. Jhamatmal boldly asserted that the Cutchi Memons were governed by Hindu Law, not only, in matters of succession and inheritance but also in property. He maintained that the characteristics of joint family property as applicable to Hindus would also be applied to Cutchi Memons though he was careful enough to say that the applicability must be justified by custom. The only evidence as to custom on which Mr. Jhamatmal has relied upon is the award which disposed of the property left by Hassan. By this award, as I have observed, the property of Hassan has not been divided only between the male descendants of Hassan but other female descendants have been allotted a share and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have been awarded maintenance. The property, therefore, has been partitioned according to Mr. Jhamatmal on the principles of Hindu Law, and this he says was according to the custom prevalent in the family. A perusal of the award clearly indicates that the arbitrators endeavoured to effect an equitable distribution of property left by Hassan amongst his various descendants, male and female, and there does not appear the remotest idea of enforcing any custom prevalent in the family. Besides, a custom cannot be proved by an isolated instance of this description scarcely a couple of years old. There is no other evidence of custom. I think the law is well settled that Cutchi Memons are governed by Hindu Law in matters of succession and inheritance alone. In Haji Usman Haji Ismail v. Haroon Saleh Mahomed (1), it was held that the application of the rules of Hindu Law by custom to the Cutchi Memons was limited to the rules of succession and inheritance and did not extend to the rules relating to the joint family property as applicable to Hindus. The view taken in this judgment and other recent judgments has been accepted by the Legislature for, in Act XLVI of 1920, in the Preamble the Hindu Law as applicable to Cutchi Memons is referred to as relating to succession and inheritance, and if the rules of Hindu joint family property were intended as applicable to Cutchi Memons, there would have been some reference to them. In Advocate-General of Bombay v. Jmbabai (2), it was held that it had never been proved affirmatively that Cutchi Memons had ever adopted as part of their customary law the Hindu Law of joint family or the distinction existing in that law between ancestral family, joint family and ancestral property; and that Cutchi Memons were subject by custom to the Hindu Law of succession and inheritance only. I think that the law is well established on this point and there is no room for divergence of opinion particularly in the present case where there is not a scintilla of evidence as to any custom rendering the principles of Hindu Law as to joint family property applicable to the parties.

Mr. Jhamatmal relied upon Abdul Kadar v. Bapubhai (3), as establishing that in cases of partition of property the same principles were applicable whether the parties were Hindus or Muhammadans, but a perusal of the judgment clearly shows the grounds on which their Lordships proceeded. In a suit for partition of joint property amongst Muhammadans the lower Court refused relief to the defendants as they had not paid the Court-fees and observed that this was not a suit for partition of joint family property between Hindus but a suit for partition between Muhammadans. It was with reference to this observation that it was held that a suit for partition of inheritance between Muhammadans is hardly distinguishable from a partition suit by Hindus. The judgment proceeded on a question of procedure only. Mr. Jhamatmal argued that, in the circumstances of this case, the burden of proof lay on defendant No. 1 in respect of his contention that the property in suit had been purchased out of his separate funds and relied on Seochurn Doss v. Musst Thookra (4). In this case the parties were Hindus, there were five brothers constituting an undivided Hindu family and one of them acquired personal property which with the aid of his brothers he established a banking business. It was held that such circumstances under the general principles of Hindu Law constituted a joint family property in which the brothers were entitled to share and that the burden of proof that such was only an ordinary partnership and not jointly acquired family property lies on the party claiming it to have been separately acquired. Had it been established in the present case that the price paid for the property in suit was acquired out of the joint earnings or with the pecuniary aid rendered by either Mahomed or Ahmed, the burden of proof would certainly lie on defendant No. 1 that it was his separate property. An analogous case to the present is that reported in Mohobat Ali v. Tafar Ali (5). 'The uncle and nephew lived together and land was purchased by the uncle in his name : held that the presumption was that the purchase was made by him exclusively, and that the burden was on the nephew to show that he supplied part of the purchase-money. "The presumption of Hindu Law that the money came from joint funds is not applicable to Muhammadans. There is no such thing as joint family property under the Muhammadan Law and even according to Hindu Law a business carried on by one of the co-parceners of a joint Hindu family is not a joint family business nor is every member of a joint family necessarily a partner therein. In the circumstances of this case, and on my view of the evidence recorded and the findings thereon, it appears to me perfectly unnecessary to make any reference to the other authorities that have been cited.

It follows on the conclusions that I have arrived at as to the property purchased by Abubacker being with his separate funds, it cannot be charged with any maintenance of defendants Nos. 2 and '3, the daughter and widow of Ahmed. I record my findings on this point as there is a specific issue raised.

With regard to the moveable property such as cash, furniture and jewellery no evidence has been adduced as to defendant No. 1 being in possession of any furniture that belonged to Mahomed or Ahmed or was the property of the family. In respect of the cash there is only the evidence of Mariam as to there being a sum of Rs. 6,000 to 7,000 in the family cash-box at the time of Ahmed's death. She does not profess to have seen this amount or any part of it in the box and there appears little foundation for her statement. It is very likely that there was some money in the cash box but it has certainly not been shown that any part of it either belonged to Mahomed or his son the plaintiff. As to the person that had the key of the box on Ahmed's death the evidence is conflicting, Mariam says that the key was with defendant No. 1 whereas he maintains that the key was with Mariam as the wife of Ahmed.

In respect of the jewellery no evidence has been led as to defendant No. 1 being in possession of any belonging to Mahomed or his wife or to the joint family. There was admittedly some jewellery of Mariam in the possession of Abubacker at the time Mariam separated from him. Ex. 21 is a list of the jewellery that was made over to Mariam by defendant No. 1 in the presence of witnesses, and there is no satisfactory evidence to show that all the jewellery that belonged to Mariam was not delivered to her.

My findings on the issues in the case are as follows :—

Issue 1. Unnecessary.

Issue 2. In the negative.

Issue 3. In the negative.

Issue 4. In the negative.

Issue 5. None.

Issue 6. Plaintiffs should bear the costs of defendant No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The following pedigree will explain the position of the parties :—

The plaintiffs are claiming the property of both their father Mahabir Singh and their uncle Pahlad Singh, the latter having died childless. The defendants are their surviving uncles and the son of a deceased uncle. The facts found by the Court below are that the defendants Nos 2 and 3 and the father of the first defendant separated from Mahabir Singh and Pahlad Singh, but that the two latter remained joint. This is a finding of fact supported by evidence and on this finding the plaintiffs are entitled to the property. The only point pressed by the defendants in appeal is that when once it was found that the defendants had separated from the remaining two brothers Mahabir Singh and Pahlad Singh, it was necessary to prove a re-union on the part of the latter. This goes beyond the rulings of the Privy Council on the point, and is in definite conflict with the ruling of this Court in Parsotam Das v. Jagannath (1). The principle laid down by the Privy Council in Balabux v. Rukmahai (2), and lately reaffirmed in Musammatt Jatti v. Banwari Lal (3), is that when the separation of one co-parcener is proved there is no presumption that the others remained united. There is in fact no presumption remaining either way and an agreement amongst the remaining co-parceners either to remain united or to re-unite (both alternatives are given in the judgment of Balabux v. Rukmahai (2) must be proved like any other fact. This point was definitely ruled in Parsotam Das v. Jagannath (1), where it was held that if separation of one member takes place it is not the necessary result in law that the other members must be taken to have separated inter se. They may have separated or they may have remained united. In this case the evidence proves, and the Court below has found, that they remained united. On this finding the appeal fails and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 66—Proclamation of sale—Court fixing order of sale properties—Appeal, whether lies.

An order directing that properties advertised for sale in a sale proclamation be sold in a particular order is administrative in its character and is not appealable.

Mr. P. Somasunlaram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under sections 47 and 96 of the Civil Procedure Code against an order made by the District Judge directing the sale of two items of properties, items 1 and 2, according to the order in which they were advertised for sale in the proclamation, that is, directing item 1 to be sold first and then item 2. The judgment-debtor, the appellant before us, had, without notice to the decree-holder, got an order from the District Judge that item 2 should be sold first and then item 1. This was an ex parte order which on the decree-holder coming to know of it, was sought by him to be altered so that the sale might take place according to the order in the sale proclamation itself. No doubt, the decree-holder stated as his reason in his application that item 2 was his own property and was wrongly included in the decree as chargeable with the decree amount. The District Judge has not gone into that question at all or given any finding about it. He set aside his original ex parte order and directed that the property be sold according to the sale proclamation, that is, item 1 first.

The judgment-debtor appeals against that order, and a preliminary objection has been taken by the learned Vakil for the decree-holder that no appeal lies and reliance has been placed by him on Sivagami Achi v. Subramania Aiyar (1). The case before us certainly seems to be covered by that ruling as the order of the District Judge was merely one settling one of the items of the sale proclamation, namely, the order in which the property was to be sold. It was held in the Full Bench case that a District Judge acted not judicially but only administratively when he settled the sale proclamation and, therefore, the order in that case was not one which came within section 241 of the old Code, corresponding to section 47 of the present Code. We are bound by that ruling unless we can agree with the argument of the appellant that the alteration of the wording of O. XXI, r. 66 of the new Code which corresponds to section 287 of the old Code, has altered the position altogether. The only additions in the new Code which have been pointed out are that power is now given (1) to give notice to the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder to be present when the terms of the sale proclamation are settled and (2) to insist, upon every application for an order for sale under the rule to be accompanied by a statement signed and verified in the manner prescribed for the signing and verification of pleadings and containing, so far as they are known to or can be ascertained by the person making the verification, the matters required by sub-rule (2) to be specified in the proclamation, namely, as to the revenue assessed upon the property as to the incumbrance to which the property is liable, as to the amount for the recovery of which the sale is ordered, and other things which the Court considers material. It is argued that these provisions show that the Court is acting judicially and it is also urged that the omission of section 288 supports that argument. It seems to us that these two additions do not alter the position at all. They simply give power to the Court to have the parties before it in settling the sale proclamation and their affidavits so that it may get the help of the parties in settling it. The Full Bench in Sivagami Achi v. Subramania Aiyar (1), adduced as the most important reason for holding that a Judge, acting under section 287, was acting administratively and not judicially that special power was given to him under that section to summon a person when the Judge thought it necessary to do so and examine him in respect of matters on which information was wanted by the Court and to require him to produce documents. The argument of the Full Bench was that, if the Court was acting judicially in the matter, such power need not have been expressly given but the Court would have the power to do so under its general powers without an express section provided for that purpose. That provision is left intact in the new Code and it is not altered and the argument, therefore, applies to the new Code. No doubt, the referring Judges in the Full Bench case did allude to the fact that section 288 also corroborated their opinion for it was argued that a special protection for a Judge need not have been given by a special section of the Code if that officer was acting as a Judge, as he would be protected under the Act for the protection of Judicial Officers. That argument no doubt will not now apply because the provision has been omitted, but we think that the omission of the provision does not lead to any conclusion that the Court now acts in a judicial capacity rather than in an administrative capacity in settling the terms of the sale proclamation. Section 288 was really put in by way of abundant caution and, as it was found to be unnecessary, it has been deleted and not because of any change in the law. We think that the ruling in, Sivagami Achi v. Subramania Aiyar (1), still governs the case and that no appeal can be allowed in a matter like the one before us where the Court merely settles the order in which the properties are to be sold. Our attention was drawn to a decision in Vedavyasa Aiyar v. Madura Hindu Sabha Nidhi Co., Ltd., (2) but that case is distinguishable from the present case, for there their Lordships were able to come to the conclusion on the facts of that case that what was decided in that case by the lower Court was not the order in which the properties were to be sold but whether the properties of one mortgagee or of another mortgagee should be sold first. On that view they held that the order was one affecting the rights of two defendants inter se and, therefore, it was a matter which would come under section 47 of the Code. Whether this is a right view or not we are not called upon to say for here no such question arises. This is merely a matter of settling the order in which the sale is to take place. Sivagami Achi v. Subramania Aiyar (1), has been followed and applied even to cases from the original side by the learned Chief Justice and one of us in Zinobar & Sons v. Hasscock & Banghnull (3). In these circumstances, we hold that no appeal lies in the present case and dismiss it.

Under the circumstances, we do not allow any costs to either side in this appeal.

Hindu Law—Maintenance—Agreement fixing rate of maintenance permanently by widow, whether binding.

An agreement by a Hindu widow not to claim enhanced maintenance is a binding agreement and must be enforced.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bezvada, in O. S. No. 34 of 1919.

Mr. V. Suryanarayana, for the Appellants.

Messrs. V. Ramadoss and V. Rama Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff is the widow of the deceased brother of the 1st defendant's father and she brought this suit for maintenance and obtained a decree. The defendants now appeal.

When the plaintiff brought her suit originally she ignored the existence of certain documents executed in 1913, Exs II and IV, whereby her right to maintenance was fixed at Rs. 75 per annum but after the written statement was filed she amended her plaint and alleged that these documents were not binding on her and that she was entitled to maintenance at a higher rate. The Subordinate Judge found that the documents of 1913 were not obtained by undue influence and that the plaintiff had executed her counter-part with full knowledge of its contents and effect; but he held that the stipulation in that document that she would not claim any higher rate of maintenance in the future was not binding on her apparently because the first defendant's father had not similarly undertaken that he would never claim a right to reduce the rate of her maintenance. On this ground he held that the plaintiff was not bound by her agreement.

The argument advanced by Mr. Ramadoss on behalf of the respondent is, that in no circumstances can a Hindu widow enter into a valid agreement agreeing to relinquish her right to claim enhanced maintenance in future; but we have been referred by the learned Vakil for the appellant to cases of this Court in which the right of a widow to relinquish her right to enhanced maintenance in the future has been recognised. In two unreported cases, Appeal No. 12 of 1920 and A. A. O. No. 316 of 1918, it has been definitely held that an agreement by a widow not to claim enhanced maintenance is a binding agreement and must be enforced. The case in Subramania Pattar v. Vembammal (1) is not a direct authority, because in that case there was only an agreement to receive maintenance at a certain rate for life and it was there held that that did not amount to a release of the widow's right to increased maintenance in the future; but it is clear from the judgment that the learned Judges recognised the possibility of a widow releasing her right, such a release being binding upon her. As against this, Mr. Ramadoss has referred us to several cases, not one of which is exactly in point, but which go to show that an agreement or a decree for maintenance at a specific rate is always subject to alteration in the future if the circumstances of the family necessitate such a change: vide, Gopikabai v. Dattahoya (2) Raju Venkattappa Nayanin Varu v. Raja Thimma Nayanin Varu (3) and Bangaru Ammal v. Vijayamachi Reddiar (4). They undoubtedly recognise the fact that an agreement to receive maintenance at a particular rate is not binding for all time; but none of them is an authority for holding that, when the agreement goes further and binds the widow not to claim a higher rate even in changed circumstances, it is not binding on her. The cases we have already referred to cited by the appellant are authority to the contrary and we entirely agree with the views therein expressed. In that view, these documents Exs. II and IV are binding on the plaintiff and she is not entitled to any higher maintenance.

It was then sought to support the decree of the lower Court on the ground that the finding that Exs. II and IV were executed with the plaintiff's knowledge of their contents and effect was wrong. The argument put forward here was that the plaintiff being a woman had not had the opportunity of extraneous advice and that she had been induced by her brother-in-law, the 1st defendant's father, to execute these deeds. In the first place, that was not her case in the plaint where she alleged that she was deceived into putting her signature to some documents of the contents of which she had no idea and in her evidence she also stated that it was only after the written statement in this suit was filed that she understood that the maintenance deed was in existence. In the evidence as put forward the only thing that appears, even if we believe the witnesses, is that neither the plaintiff's father nor her brother were present when the maintenance deed was executed; but it is admitted that one Veerabhadra Ayyar, who is closely connected with the plaintiff's uncle and manages his estate, not only attested the document but identified the plaintiff at the Registration Office. On this evidence we think that the Subordinate Judge's conclusion is perfectly right.

It is then urged for the respondent that she ought to be given a right of residence because that was not expressly released in the documents executed by her and it is contended that the right of residence is a separate right from that of maintenance. Without our deciding that point, however, the first defendant has agreed that the plaintiff should be allowed a room which is to be built on the site adjoining the family house in Nandigama for her residence. Therefore, while allowing the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower Court, we give a direction that the plaintiff be given one room to be built as above.

The respondent will pay the appellants' costs throughout,

A Court directed payment to a decree-holder out of funds standing to the credit of a suit, but the application for payment out was not made till some years after by the legal representative of the decree-holder and then the order was passed and payment made. On an application for further execution being taken out more than 12 years from the date of the original order but less than 12 years from that of the payment:

Held, that the Court could properly be said to be acting as the agent of the judgment debtor within the meaning of the proviso to Art. 183 of the Limitation Act, and the payment ordered by the Court could save limitation as the payment made by an authorised agent of the defendant.

Mr. S. Doraisami Iyer, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Aiyengar, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to execute the decree in C. S. No 188 of 1903 by the transferee-plaintiff, and the only question is whether the application is barred by limitation. The decree is dated 14th December 1904. An appeal was filed against that decree which was also dismissed on 27th February 1906. On the 9th May 1908, execution was applied for and sale was ordered on 21st July 1908. The property was sold on 1st May 1909. The 1st defendant applied to set aside the sale and that application was dismissed on 29th September 1909. An order was passed on the 6th October 1909, giving leave to execute the decree as regards the balance

SABAPATHY CHETTY v. SHANMUGAPPA CHETTY

The plaintiff decree-holder died shortly afterwards and his estate vested in the Administrator-General of Madras. He applied for payment out of the net sale proceeds and an order was passed on 9th January 1912, ordering payment to be made. The present application was filed on 1st February, 1923.

The order of the 6th October 1909, as regards payment, runs as follows: "That the Registrar of this Court do from and out of the sum of Rs. 26,250 standing in his hands to the credit of this suit pay to Messrs. Madras Sales and Agency Co., the auctioneers herein the sum of Rs. 289-14-6 as and for their commission as auctioneers and expenses of sale; and he do pay to the plaintiff herein the sum of Rs. 24,710-1-6." The plaintiff died without receiving this money. An application was made by the Administrator-General of Madras, who was appointed administrator pendente lite in respect of the Testamentary Suit No. 1 of 1910 relating to the estate of the plaintiff, for the payment of the sum of Rs. 25,932-7-6 and an order was made on the 9th January 1912, directing the Registrar to pay this sum to the Administrator-General. The question is whether this order of the 9th January 1912, saves the period of limitation.

The Article applicable to cases of this kind is Article 183 of the Limitation Act. It provides a period of 12 years to enforce a judgment, decree or order of any Court established by Royal Charter in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction the period to run from the date when a present right to enforce the judgment, decree or order accrues to some person capable of releasing the right. The proviso, however, provides that the period of twelve years should be computed from the date of payment or acknowledgment in cases where some part of the principal money secured thereby or some interest on such money has been paid, or some acknowledgment of the right thereto has been given in writing signed by the person liable to pay such principal or interest, or his agent, to the person entitled thereto or his agent." Article 182 of the Limitation Act refers to execution of decrees or orders of any Civil Court not provided for by Article 183. The period is three years and varying periods are given in the third column as the date from which the period is to run. The first question is whether when a payment has been ordered by a Court that Court can be said to be acting as the agent of the judgment-debtor. This question has been decided in Thangishetti v. Duja Shetti (1), and Govinda Pillai v. Dasai Goundan (2). The ground of the decision is thus put by Coutts-Trotter, J., in his judgment: "If a debtor's assets are so placed either by his own act or by operation of law that if some one other than he alone can realise them for the purpose of making payments due from him, then the act of that other in operating upon the debtor's assets must be treated as the act of the debtor himself, the volition of the debtor in such a case being neither requisite nor relevant. If that be so, it appears to me that the words 'his agent duly authorised in that behalf' in section 20 of the Limitation Act are satisfied by the act of the Judge of the Court which authorises the payment; and that his handwriting is rightly described as that of the person making the payment." The payment ordered can, therefore, save limitation as the payment made by an authorised agent of the defendant. Article 183 also refers to the actual fact of payment and not to any order directing payment.

The main contention of the defendant is that, as the order of 6th October 1909, directed payment to the decree-holder of this identical sum he could have obtained payment at once and the fact that he delayed to obtain payment could not operate to extend the period of limitation, that he should have executed the order of 6th October 1909, and that as that was the only order which could be enforced period began to run from the date of that order and not from the date of subsequent payment made in pursuance of it. There is a great deal of force in the contention that a person cannot by his own volition defer receiving payment and thus keep the decree alive for his benefit. But what I have to see is the actual language of the Article and not any sequence that may arise on the application of that language. Article 183 applies only to payment and where the Court orders payment and the authorities are that the Court so acting is the agent of the defendant, the requisites of Article 183 are satisfied. As regards Article 182 the cases reported in (Venkatroyalu v. Narasimha (3), Kerala Varma Valiya Rajah v. Shangaram (4), Koomayya v. Krishananna Naidu (5), Bapu Chand v. Mogut Rao (6), and Thangi Shetti v. Duja Shetti (1), take the view that payment out of a sum from Court is a step-in aid of execution under Article 182, Cl. 5. But Hem Chander Chowdry v. Brojo Sundres Debee (7), Fazal Imam v. Metta Singh (8), and other cases take a contrary view. If the payment out of Court, irrespective of the date of order on which payment is ordered, is a step-in-aid of execution, I think that it can be held with equal force that the actual payment under Article 183 would be the starting point of limitation. I confess there is a great deal to be said in favour of the Calcutta view; but I am bound by the Madras decisions. I am, therefore, of opinion on the authorities of the Madras High Court that this application is not barred by limitation. I stay execution for one month to enable the defendant, if so advised, to appeal and get stay of execution.

C. P. Tenancy Act (Act I of 1898)—Absolute occupancy tenant—Transfer of holding—Malguzar lambardar, whether can avoid transfer.

A malguzar lambardar has a right of re-entry if an absolute occupancy tenant transfers the holding without his consent Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Wardha, dated the 31st January, 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 105 of 1920.

Mr. D. T. Maugalmurti, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. W. Kathale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaint on which this litigation commenced states that plaintiff, the present respondent, was the sole malguzar lambardar of Khel C, in Mouza Sonegaon, Tahsil Wardha. One Govind Parashram was the absolute occupancy tenant of the following fields : Nos. 229, 230, 237 and 238, area 45, 12 acres, jama Rs. 49-4-0. He gifted 9 acres of land out of these fields to defendant and on 22nd September 1918 executed a deed of gift in favour of the donee. With the land Govind Parashram transferred a well and 12-annas interest in three mango trees and one babul tree standing thereon. That document has been registered and in pursuance of its provisions the defendant took possession of the land which is now numbered as 229/2, 230/2, 237/2 and 238/2. No notice of the intention to transfer was given by Govind Parashram as required by the provisions of the Tenancy Act and the transfer in favour of the defendant not being consented to by the plaintiff lambardar is not binding on him. It was contended that the transfer, being in contravention of the provisions of the Tenancy Act, possession of the defendant over the land was illegal. He is a mere trespasser and liable to be ejected. Plaintiff asks to be put in possession of the land, well and the trees and costs.

In his written statement the defendant states inter alia that "defendant's father was the original tenant of those fields. He was indebted to Govind Parashram on a mortgage. He was also indebted to one Amritrao Bhojer of Sonegaon. The latter had brought a suit against the defendant's father and obtained a simple money-decree. Fearing the attachment by Amritrao, the defendant's father entered into an agreement with Govind Parashram to the effect that the latter should purchase the fields, if attached and brought to sale by Amritrao and should take only 34 7/2 acres of land out of the entire area commensurate with the aggregate amount of mortgage-debt and

GANPAT v. MANOHAR HARBAJI

Amrit Rao's debt in satisfaction of his mortgage-debt and debt of Amritrao Bhojor and leave out the remaining 11 acres for the defendant's father. After this agreement was over, the fields were attached and sold and were purchased by Waman Nanji subject to the mortgage as benami for Govind Parashram. Waman Nanji then re-sold formally the fields to Govind Parashram. The latter then began to change, but through the intercession of some persons he agreed to execute a deed of gift in respect of 9 acres of land, a well and the mango trees in these fields. Accordingly, he executed the gift-deed mentioned in the plaint. But it was executed nominally in favour of the defendant. The defendant's father was the real person to be benefited by the gift. The defendant lives with his father and the fields are ancestral. The defendant is the only son of his father. The defendant is in possession of the 9 acres of the fields with his father. The auction-sale, re-sale and the gift mentioned above amount to a single transaction whereby the original tenant parted with a portion of his holding reserving a portion for himself. As the original tenant is in possession himself, he cannot be ejected.

It was further pleaded that plaintiff has no right to question the arrangement between Govind Parashram and defendant, as Govind Parashram was a tenant whose tenancy had been continued as one and indivisible in spite of this arrangement; it was further pleaded that the transaction in question had taken place with the consent of the then lambardar Gangadhar represented by his mother Saraswati Bai. Plaintiff was not the then lambardar. He being under the lambardar was bound by the consent of the lady. Defendant is not a trespasser and cannot be ejected. It was further stated: "The suit has been filed after the new Tenancy Act has come into force; under this law the landlord has no right to be placed in possession of a holding transferred without his consent. He can claim only pre-emption before a Revenue Officer. The change effected is only one of procedure and consequently the new Act is retrospective. Plaintiff cannot maintain the suit for ejectionment."

For the plaintiff it was admitted that Govind Parashram was the tenant of all the fields in dispute and could not transfer under the Tenancy Act even a portion of the absolute occupancy holding without the consent of his landlord and the transfer is thus void against the plaintiff. The transfer took place before the new Tenancy Act came into force and the right to eject the defendant accrued to the plaintiff under that Act; it is not a question of procedure only. It was denied that Saraswati gave a consent to the transfer.

The case went to trial on the following issues:—

- "(1) Whether the plaintiff has a right to avoid a transfer of a portion of absolute occupancy rights under the Tenancy Act?"
- "(2) Whether the plaintiff's rights is governed by the old Tenancy Act or by the new one and whether he has a right to pre-empt only and not eject?"
- "(3) Whether Saraswati Bai consented to the gift on behalf of the then lambardar?"
- "(4) Whether the transfer to defendant is benami for the defendant father and whether tenancy can be said to have revived to him and plaintiff cannot eject him?"

There was an additional issue on remand as follows:—

- "(5) If consent of Saraswati Bai is proved, whether she had ceased to be lambardar because partition proceedings were started at the time? Whether she was served with a notice not to consent to any transfer during the pendency of the partition proceedings, if so, what effect it has on the alleged consent?"

The first Court held that the plaintiff had no right of re-entry over the portion gifted to the defendant because Govind Parashram's holding was one indivisible and the plaintiff had a right to recover the rent of the portion gifted away from him. The first Court based its decision principally on the unreported case of Lachman Pinjara v. Ganjapuri (Second Appeal No. 203 of 1905, dated 4th August 1905).

The lower Appellate Court says that the unreported decision has been materially shaken by the reported decision in Madhoo v. Umrao (1) and holds that the reasons given in the reported case at page 148 in support of the landlord's right of re-entry apply with equal force to the present case. It finds the landlord in the present case has a right to eject the transferee assuming that there was a genuine transfer and that such transfer was not consented to by the landlord. It set aside the decree of the lower Court and remanded the suit for decision on merits. Against that order the present appeal has been filed.

Here the case of Jodhray v. Daulat (2) is relied on as is Nilkanth v. Bhagwant (3) which, however, is a case of ordinary tenancy. Nakulsao v. Ramadhusao (4) is quoted for the respondent.

I am inclined to the belief that the decision of the District Judge is correct, and that the landlord in the present case has a right to eject the defendant transferee in possession "assuming", to quote the words, "that there was a genuine transfer by gift and delivery of possession and that such transfer was not consented to by the landlord." In this view the order of remand is correct and I confirm it and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) s. 103 B (8), Ch X—Record of Rights, entry relating to local custom—Presumption—Burden of proof—Custom entitling raiyats to abatement of rent on inundation, whether unreasonable or vague.

An entry in the Record of Rights of a mauzah that if inundation takes place the raiyats are to get a rateable or proportionate deduction of rent from their landlords, is an entry of a local custom, and is not outside the purview of Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The presumption of correctness laid down in section 103 B (3) of the Act, therefore, applies to the entry, the effect of the presumption being that the burden of proving the custom recited in the entry is taken from off the shoulders of the tenants, and the landlord is bound to prove that no such custom exists. [p. 840, col. 1.]

Case-law discussed.

The custom recited in the above entry is neither unreasonable nor vague. [p. 838, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Rankin, J.—This is an appeal by the landlord in a suit brought by him to have an entry in the Record of Rights corrected. The entry is with respect to a Mousah called Dakhin Aukhua and it is contained in what is called Part II of the general khatian in respect of that Mousah. The entry is to the effect that in that Mousah, if inundation takes place, the raiyats are to get a rateable proportionate deduction of rent from their landlords. The judgment under appeal proceeds upon the basis that that entry attracts the presumption under section 103 B, sub-section (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act; in other words, that it shall be presumed to be correct until it is proved by evidence to be incorrect. Accordingly, the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has approached, first, the plaintiff's evidence and he has examined into the question whether that evidence, first of all, taken by itself, succeeds or fails to rebut the presumption of the correctness of the entry. Having dealt with the plaintiff's evidence and having come to the conclusion that it does not rebut the presumption, he says that, in the circumstances, it is not necessary for him to consider the evidence on the defendant's side in detail; but he proceeds to consider it with a view to see whether there is material in the evidence adduced by the defendants which assists the plaintiff in his contention that the Record of Rights is incorrect, and comes to the conclusion that the oral evidence on the defendant's side rather supports than detracts from the correctness of the entry. Having dealt with the case with a view to decide whether there is any ground for supposing that custom alleged in the Record of Rights is bad for any reason and having negatived that suggestion, he upholds the Record of Rights, allows the appeal and dismisses the plaintiff's suit.

The main contention of the plaintiff-appellant is that the entry in question is not entitled to the presumption of correctness laid down by section 103 B of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the reason which is relied upon to take the case out of that provision is that it is not an entry in respect of a particular tenancy in the khatian which is appropriated to a particular tenant or set of tenants but is an entry in the general khatian—a statement of a rule obtaining in the village; not of a particular stipulation obtaining as between an individual landlord and an individual tenant. Such an entry of a general character, it is contended, is not within the contemplation of section 103 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I propose, first, to deal with this contention.

By section 101 of the Act, the Local Government, in some cases with the sanction of the Governor General-in-Council, and in some cases without, may take an order directing that a Survey be made and a Record of Rights be prepared and by clause (4) of that section "the Survey shall be made and the Record of Rights prepared in accordance with rules made in this behalf by the local Government." The particular order governing the present case is not in evidence and no point has been or can be made upon any specific term in that order. When we come to section 102, we find that it provides that "where" an order is made under section 101 the particulars to be recorded shall be specified in the order and may include, either without or in addition to other particulars, some or all of the following." It will be seen, therefore, that it is for the local Government by its order to specify what is to be included for the purposes of the Record of Rights and it is not limited to the things which are mentioned in section 102. Moreover, the Survey is to be made and the Record of Rights prepared in accordance with rules to be made by the Local Government. Now, the particular things mentioned in section 102 not being exhaustive, it is pointed out that the general tenor of the language of section 102 is directly applicable to entries affecting particular tenancies. The present entry comes nearest, at all events, to sub-clause (h) which is "the special conditions and incidents, if any, of the tenancy." The provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act as regards the method of making and preparing the Records of Rights provide for the preliminary publication of a draft. The Revenue Officer is to publish the draft in the prescribed manner, that is, in a manner to be prescribed by rules. He is to consider any objections which may be made to any entry or to any omission therefrom. After doing that, he is finally to frame the Record and to cause it to be finally published in the prescribed manner and he may publish separate draft or final records for different local areas, estates, tenures of parts thereof. It is after that final publication that the presumption of correctness is attributed to the record by the Statute.

In the present case, for the Mouzah now in question, there is a khatian of the following character. There are really five matters dealt with as general matters applicable to the Mouzah as a whole. The first matter is irrigation. As to this, there is a statement that there is no rule for irrigation but that the lands are watered by rain. Then comes the question of trees. It is said that the raiyats have full right in trees grown by them. As to other trees, their rights are governed by their contracts. As to grazing, it is said that the raiyats have a right to pasture the cattle by custom or usage. Then, weights and measures states how many seers there are to a maund and so forth. Lastly, comes paragraph 4a which is headed by some vernacular words which may be translated as special stipulation or special rights, and, under that heading, is the statement which I have already referred to as the entry now in question. It appears that particular khatians given to particular tenants in the Mouzah contain a reference by number to this general khatian. So that, in effect, what has happened is that, instead of repeating in each tenant's khatian as regards this Mouzah the various stipulations or terms stated in Part II of the general khatian, the Revenue Officer has done the same thing by reference. He has set forth once and in full the stipulations. He has not repeated them in each particular tenant's khatian.

Now, it was not apparently contested in the Courts below nor I think until Mr. Sen came to reply that the purport and effect of the entry now in question were to state a custom of the Mouzah. Certain it is that the plaintiff thought that it stated a custom. It is quite clear that all the other items are statements of the tenant's right and, speaking for myself, I cannot doubt that the entry now in question is, in substance, not merely a statement that the landlord of this Mouzah had in times past been kind enough to his tenants to make a remission but is, as in other entries, in the general khatian, statement, as it says, of a special right. I cannot, therefore, feel any doubt that this is an entry of a local custom and nothing short of it.

So far as the presumption of correctness is concerned, I am of opinion that there is no ground for holding that a statement as to the custom of a Mouzah is outside the purview of Chapter IX of the Bengal Tenancy Act. On the contrary, I can imagine no more valuable part of a Record of Rights than the part which states the alleged customs. The provisions for publication, 'for objections', all apply. There can be no reason for implying a prohibition so far as regards the recording of such very necessary matters and, unless it was allowable in some way or another to deal with the matter of local custom, it may well be doubted whether the preparation of a Record of Rights would be worth the trouble and expense. As regards the manner in which they are to be recorded, I see no reason to think that in the present case, the Record of Rights was in any wise contrary to the terms of the order under section 101 or in any wise contrary to the rules made in this behalf by the local Government under clause (4) of section 101. It will be no doubt a matter for the local Government to consider very carefully when it lays down in detail the scheme for preparing a Record of Rights whether entries made in the general khatian are or are not sufficiently brought to the notice of the tenants or of the landlords in all cases by the provisions which the rules make in that behalf. In the present case, it appears that a reference to the general khatian was inserted in the individual khatian copies of which no doubt were, in due course, furnished to each of the tenant and to the landlord as required by the rules. That, however, is a matter over which the local Government by its rules has power of complete provision. There is nothing in the Act itself that would entitle us to lay down that the particular method as shown in this case is contrary to the Statute or outside the purview of the same. It has been suggested that in such cases a person desirous of bringing a suit under section 106 to correct a statement of a general character might have to implead the whole of the neighbourhood and might be very much embarrassed. I fail to see in the case of a tenant why it should not be sufficient for him to debate the matter with his own landlord, and I do not think that there is, in fact, any difficulty as indeed in the present case the landlord's suit seems to show. However that may be, it is, in my opinion, not possible for us to lay down that a general khatian such as this is outside the scope of the Bengal Tenancy Act or outside the powers of the local Government to arrange for under their powers to make rules. In my opinion, therefore, the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court was quite right in commencing his study of this case by giving to that entry the presumption of correctness until it was proved by evidence to be incorrect. On this footing, I fail to see that the judgment under appeal can be successfully challenged at all.

The present case is not one in which it can be contended as a matter of law that the custom is unreasonable or is too vague. In my judgment, the custom is manifestly reasonable and is not too vague.

UMESH CHANDRA DURBAR V. CHOWDHRY JAMINI NATH MALLICK

It was suggested to us, however, that we should go into the findings of fact upon each side with a view not merely to see whether the plaintiff in the end had rebutted the correctness of the Record of Rights but from a point of view much more favourable to the appellant. It is said that, after all, there has been evidence given on both sides and, when evidence had been given on both sides the mere question of onus is of no great importance. Now, that is a proposition which I confess to have met with more than once and, as we have been referred to the cases in which it is said to have been laid down, I would like to say a word or two about it.

It is perfectly true that, in contested cases of fact, a great deal of time is constantly wasted in discussing mere propositions of law about the initial onus. In some cases of second appeals, that is almost the only way in which hostile findings of fact can be dislodged but before Courts of fact it is very often a purely vain employment for the simple reason that the onus shifts as each fact is brought to notice and it is generally wrong to select one particular fact arbitrarily and claim the benefit of the onus whereas, if other particular facts had been selected, the onus might have been the other way, still the proposition that we are now invited to accept is not only much too broad but in result might have a very extraordinary effect.

Now, the first case which seems to have stated the proposition is a case of the Privy Council (Kundal Lal v. Musammatt Begumunnissa) (1). In that case, the suit was to enforce a mortgage-bond. The defence was that the bond had been paid off as appeared by endorsement on the back of the bond. The plaintiff replied that the endorsements were fictitious and fraudulent and the question went to trial in that way. The learned trial judge who saw the witnesses came to the conclusion that the endorsements were forgeries. The High Court came to an opposite conclusion and the Privy Council said this: (it is a judgment delivered by Viscount Haldane.) "It is no doubt true that the initial burden of proof rests on the appellant in such a case as this both on general grounds and by reason of the provisions of section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act. But this burden is one which shifts easily as the evidence is developed and their Lordships do not, after considering facts which appear to them to be sufficiently established in the two suits, attach much importance to the question on whom the initial onus lay." From that point of view, having come to the conclusion that it was more probable that the bond had not been paid off, their Lordships restored the decision of the trial judge who had come to that finding. That is, it seems to me, a perfectly justifiable and intelligible principle. In the case of Saturatnam Aiyar v. Venkataswala Goundan (2) decided by the Privy Council, the judgment being delivered by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, a comment was made upon a passage in the High Court's judgment. The plaintiff was a Pattadar and the question was whether certain tenants had a permanent right or not. The High Court said "We hold that the mere fact of the plaintiff being Pattadar does not entitle him to any presumption in his favour." The Privy Council said: "This proposition is open to the construction that the burden lay on the plaintiff not only to establish his title but also to negative the defendant's claim to permanency and if this is what was meant it was wrong. But the sentence that immediately follows shows a truer perception of the position. The learned Judges there say: "We also hold that even if that fact could be of any use to him the various circumstances proved unrebutted by anything in the plaintiff's favour necessarily raise a presumption that the defendants have occupancy rights." Sir Lawrence Jenkins went on to say: "The controversy has passed the stage at which discussion as to the burden of proof was pertinent; the relevant facts were before the Court and all that remained for decision was what inference should be drawn from them." The case most relied upon before us was the decision of this Court in Jogenulra Nath Saha Choudhury v. Moharaja Jagadindra Nath Roy Choudhury (3). There, the learned Judges, after referring to the two cases which I have already dealt with, said this: "Where, as in the present case, evidence has been adduced by each of the contestants in support of their respective cases and the relevant facts are before the Court, the question of burden of proof is immaterial and importance should not be attached to the question on whom the initial onus lay." They went on to find that the Subordinate Judge had correctly held that the case for the defendant had been completely negatived by the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff. Now, if that proposition is to be laid down in such a manner as contended for in the present case, it is manifest that the intention of the legislature in enacting that the Record of Rights should be presumed to be correct until it is proved by evidence to be incorrect might be entirely overthrown. The truth is that just as the law imposes a very heavy burden on a person who has to prove a custom—we have had a very careful and forcible exposition of the burden that is upon the person who has to prove the custom—so, when the burden is put upon the other person's shoulders and the presumption is in favour of the custom, the litigant claiming the benefit of the custom a very valuable right indeed. It is the intention of the Bengal Tenancy Act in matters such as this, the Record of Rights which is prepared with great care and publicity should be attached to it, a great presumptive value. It cannot be denied that, if the plaintiff adduced evidence insufficient to rebut the presumption and the defendants led no evidence at all, the plaintiff must fail. Can it then be contended that, if the defendant goes further and adduces some evidences in support of the record of the benefit of the presumption is lost to the defendant and he is in a worse position than if he had adduced no evidence at all? Plainly not. It seems to me, therefore, that the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court handled this matter in a manner what was entirely warranted by the Bengal Tenancy Act. All the burden, heavy as it is, of proving the custom was by the record taken off the shoulders of the tenants. The landlord may show that the custom is unreasonable or vague and he may, by evidence show that, in fact, no such custom obtains. If that is the true form of the question, in my judgment, the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has dealt with it correctly. For these reasons, it seems to me that the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs—hearing fee 3 gold mohurs.

Mukerji, J.—I entirely agree.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, Jageshwar Pant of Nagpur, commonly known as Auyaji, was sued along with others by Pandurang, the elder of his two sons, for partition of a third share in the property of the joint Hindu family of which they are members, and the plaintiff has been given a decree for a quarter share, as it was held that Jageshwar's wife was also entitled to an equal share with the rest. Jageshwar Pant, who was the second son of Jaiwant Rao Bakshi, was taken in more or less informal adoption at his birth in 1874 by his mother's father Tukaram Bhut, the complete ceremonies being performed after Tukaram's death by his widow in 1881. The only defence to the claim was that the adoption was never made, and was invalid if it was made, so that Jageshwar Pant had been in wrongful possession of the whole property for over forty years, though he never knew or suspected it, and it must, therefore, be regarded as his self-acquired property. On his behalf the futility has at last been recognised of denying the fact and the validity, except in one respect, of his adoption as the son of Tukaram Pant, which has been accepted and recognised by himself and all the world since his birth in 1874 or, at any rate, since his formal adoption in 1881. The futility of the denial is emphasised by his describing himself in his own petition of appeal as the son of Tukaram and using Tukaram's surname of Bhut instead of his natural father's which is Bakshi.

The plea on which the appellant's legal advisers relied mainly in the lower Court and almost entirely in this Court is that the adoption of a daughter's son is invalid, being expressly forbidden by the Hindu Law. As his first wife belonged to the same gotra as the Bakshi family, the necessary implication is that the union was incestuous and the plaintiff is the bastard result of that incest. This appears to have been brought clearly to his notice, but he seems undeterred by the unsavouriness of the plea from allowing it to be pressed. It is, indeed, probable that Jageshwar Pant does not even now understand that that plea is being taken on his behalf. His deposition as his own fifth witness is a welter of untruths so obvious and so grotesque as to suggest that there is at least some truth in the statement made by more than one witness that the father who begot him was a lunatic.

It is almost impossible to find any sense or connected meaning in that deposition at all, but the gist of it seems to be this. He has been regarded as the adopted son of Tukaram Bhut from the day of his birth and is so regarded still, by himself and all the world. He is now, however, prepared to take the speculative plea that he is not the adopted son of Tukaram Bhut, not because he thinks or even suspects that there is any truth in it but because, if that plea happened to succeed, he would get the whole of the property and his son would get none of it. He does not, for a moment, believe that he is not the adopted son of Tukaram Bhut, and his only reason for thinking the plea might, perhaps, succeed is that on one occasion, ten or twelve years ago, he was told that he was not really the adopted son of Tukaram Bhut. No details or reasons were given to him, and at first he could not remember who it was that told him this, though later he appears to have said it was his real mother Jhingu Bai. All this seems to refer to the fact of his adoption. He apparently admits that the matter of the invalidity of the adoption of a daughter's son never entered his head till it was suggested to him by his pleader as a good defence to this suit.

JAGESHWAR v. PANDURANG

He only mentions the matter once in his deposition, in answer to a question in cross-examination and it is harder to get any sense out of that answer than out of the rest of his deposition, so that it does not seem to have remained in his head very firmly or very long.

Insistence on such a plea as that on which his case now rests is, however, a matter of taste, with which we are not concerned, nor need we consider the morality of the position Jageshwar Pant has chosen to take up in contesting the validity of his adoption at all; we have to examine its legality only. The remarks in the judgment of the lower Court on the motives that led him to take such a line of defence and the weakness of his own personality and the strength and unscrupulousness of that of his instigator are outside the case. As long as the moral sense of the community does not reprobate the taking of such a plea, as it does in most civilised countries of the world, strictures in judgments of the Courts will never prevent their being taken. The function of the Courts is to examine them as cold questions of law.

There appears to be nothing in the case that would legally estop the appellant from taking the plea of the invalidity of his own adoption. The representation made was not of a fact but of a proposition of law, and it was held by a Bench of this Court in Govind v. Mt. Chandrabhaga (1), that such a representation cannot effect any estoppel under section 115 of the Evidence Act. In that case the person who had made an adoption was allowed to plead and prove its legal invalidity against the person adopted. But, anyhow, it could not be said that the plaintiff in this case was damaged or induced to make any change in his position by being told untruly that the adoption of his father by Tukaram Pant's widow, made long before he was born, was not legally invalid.

There is no question of estoppel, but there is a question of adverse possession, of which one side only has been considered, and that not correctly. It seems to have been assumed that if Jageshwar Pant's adoption could be proved to have been invalid, he must be regarded as having been in possession of all the property of Tukaram Pant on his own account, as a trespasser and not as the son of Tukaram Pant, from the date of the invalid adoption. But it is beyond question that he went into possession of that property as the adopted son of Tukaram Pant, and held it in that capacity alone till after the institution of this suit, and indeed the net result of his contradictory pleadings and deposition seems to be that he regards himself as holding it in that capacity still.

In Dalton v. Fitzgerald (2) cited by the Madras High Court in Appa Rao v. Gopala Rao (3) Lopes, L. J., said: "If a man obtains possession of land claiming under a deed or Will, he cannot, afterwards, set up another title to the land against the Will or deed though it did not operate to pass the land in question, and if he remain in possession till 12 years have elapsed and the title of the testator's heir is extinguished, he cannot claim by possession an interest in the property different from that which he would have taken if the property had passed by the Will or deed." Similarly, in this case Jageshwar Pant cannot claim to have acquired, merely by possession, an interest in the property of Tukaram Pant different from that which he would have taken if the property had rightly passed to him as the son and heir of Tukaram Pant.

But there is another side to this matter of adverse possession which has not been considered at all. The plaintiff Pandurang at his birth admittedly came into actual joint possession with his father of an undivided half share in the whole of the property. That was reduced to a third share on the birth of his half-brother, but he claims no more than that now. Of that third share he has been in possession since his birth, a great deal more than twelve years ago, along with his father, and later his half brother also, but in derogation of their title to possess the whole, that is to say, adversely to them. Even, therefore, if the property could be regarded as the self-acquired property of Jageshwar Pant, the plaintiff would still have been in adverse possession as a tenant-in-common of an undivided third share in the property for more than the statutory period, and he is entitled to claim partition of that share.

JAGESHWAR v. PANDURANG

The appeal must, therefore, fail whether the adoption was valid or not. In view, however, of a possible further appeal it is necessary to record a finding on that point also. Jageshwar Pant's real mother was Jhingu Bai, the daughter of Tukaram Pant, and the adoption of a daughter's son is expressly forbidden by the Mitakshara. It lay, therefore, with the plaintiff, who asserted the validity of this prima facie invalid adoption, to prove the existence of a local custom in derogation of the Hindu Law as laid down in the texts. The locality of the custom he alleges does not seem to extend beyond the City of Nagpur, though it would be sufficient for him to prove that it existed in even a smaller area.

In Parma Nand v. Shiv Charan Das (4) Shadi Lal, C. J., a Hindu Judge, in reference to the validity of an exactly similar adoption in the Khairi caste of Amritsar, said there was "no doubt that the force of the doctrine of the Hindu Law prohibiting the adoption of a daughter's son has been considerably weakened." The weakening of the prohibition was, in that case, regarded as sufficient to justify the Court in holding the alleged custom to be established, in the absence of all evidence to the contrary, by six proved instances, all of which were apparently modern as three of them were proved by the persons adopted and the other three by the persons who made the adoptions.

Of the instances of the adoption of a daughter's son which have been proved here, one is of course that of Jageshwar Pant himself, and that is really sufficient of itself, for the purposes of this case at least, to prove the existence of the custom among the Maharashtra Brahmans of Nagpur. One of the very few things that do emerge clearly from his deposition is that he himself and all the Maharashtra Brahmans, with full knowledge of the facts, have accepted from his birth and still accept his adoption by his mother's father as valid. That is an admission that the conscience of the members of the community had come to regard such an adoption as permissible by custom in spite of the prohibition in the Hindu Law, which is mentioned as the standard proof required in such cases by Sargent, C.

J., in Patel Vandravan Jerkisan v. Patel Manilal Chunilal (5).

The acceptance of the custom as good law by the conscience of the whole community is, however, very fully proved without any admission by Jageshwar Pant himself. Seventeen witnesses on both sides, in addition to Jageshwar Pant, speak of the matter. They are all either representatives of the leading families of Nagpur, including the Bhut and Bakshi families, or persons who are authorities on the personal and customary law of this community. Five of them were present at the formal adoption in 1881. From the statements of all of them it is abundantly clear that the adoption of the daughter's son was made advisedly, with full knowledge that the legality of such an adoption had been questioned but with the conviction existing in the minds of the whole community that it was legal. The same question had been much discussed between 1874 and 1877, that is, between the actual adoption of Jageshwar Pant at his birth and the formal performance of the ceremonies, in connection with a suit instituted to set aside the adoption of a sister's son in the Munshi family. That suit ended in a judgment of this Court in 1877 in which the learned Judicial Commissioner held that the adoption was not invalid, relying mainly on the unanimous opinion of certain Shastris of Nagpur who stated that it was permitted by the texts by which their community is governed.

Further, not only was the adoption regarded as legalised by custom when it was made, but with a few others of the same sort, it has also been treated as perfectly legal ever since, though the real relationship of the parties to all of them and the original prohibition of the Hindu Law were matters of common knowledge. The most striking instance of this is in the fact that Jageshwar Pant was allowed to marry the niece and foster child of one of the most respected inhabitants of Nagpur, ordinarily known as Doctor Daji Saheb (P. W. 13), a Rao Bahadur and an Honorary Magistrate, who is of the same gotra as the Bakshi family. If there had been any doubt whatever about the validity of the adoption, the marriage would never have been permitted, as, if Jageshwar Pant were still a Bakshi, the union would have been incestuous.

It was not really necessary to support this proof of custom by further instances specially after the existence of the custom had been admitted by the defendant, though it was denied for him. Those instances that have been proved may, however, be shortly discussed. The conscience of the community was fully awake to the matter after the Munshi case, and the adoptions that are proved to have been made and to have been accepted as valid are among families of considerable standing, so that it cannot be said that they were accepted in ignorance either of the point of law involved or of the relationship of the parties to each adoption. Anand Rao Kaptan (P. W. 3) was adopted in 1873 or 1874 at the age of five by his mother's father. Chintaman Rao Diwale, (P. W. 6) a Pleader, adopted the son of his brother's daughter, which is very nearly the same thing. The adoption in the Munshi family, which was made in 1868, was apparently of a sister's son and Narayan Rao Wadabhat (P. W. 15) also says he himself was adopted by his mother's brother, though he may have used the word brother loosely for first cousin. These well known instances further strengthen the finding at which we have already arrived, that among the Maharashtra Brahman community of Nagpur the prohibition of the Hindu Law of the adoption of a daughter's son or of a sister's son has been abolished by custom.

The appeal of Jageshwar Pant will accordingly be dismissed and he will be ordered to pay all the costs incurred by the respondent Pandurang. Two of the other respondents were separately represented, but that was in support of their own appeals against parts of the decree and they also supported this appeal. They will, therefore, pay their own costs as respondents here. The value of the relief claimed in appeal is wrongly stated to be Rs. 24,029-8-0. That is the value of the third share in the property originally claimed by Pandurang. But the decree allots him only a quarter share worth Rs. 18,022-2-0, and in his appeal Jageshwar Pant is claiming three-quarter shares, that is, property worth Rs. 54,066-6-0. The pleader's fee entered in the schedule of costs will accordingly be calculated on that sum. The plaintiff Pandurang put in a cross-objection claiming a third share in the property in place of the quarter share given to him. This was not mentioned in argument nor does there appear to be anything that could be said in support of it. It must be taken to have been abandoned and the respondent Pandurang will pay the costs incurred in connection with it.

JUDGMENT :—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by Babu

NARAIN DAS v. BEHARI KAHAR

Narain Das against three defendants (1) Behari Kahar, (2) the Municipal Board of Gorakhpur, and (3) the Secretary of State. The plaintiff was the owner of a house or adjoining houses lying to the south and west of two triangular pieces of land lying between the northern and eastern walls of his house or houses and the street, painted pink in the map forming part of the decree of the trial Court. The land in question was nazul, that is to say, belonged to Government and that is why the Secretary of State was made a party. It had been handed over to the Municipal Board by Government for management and the Municipal Board had leased it to Behari Kahar on the 23rd of January 1918 for a period of 30 years for building purposes. The plaintiff came into Court on the allegation that Behari Kahar had made certain constructions on the northern portion of this land which interfered with his right of easement both of access and of light over that portion of the land, and with regard to the eastern portion, he alleged that Behari Kahar intended to build on that portion in such a way as to interfere with his easements of access and light and air on that side also and he, therefore, prayed that the buildings on the northern side be removed and that a perpetual injunction be issued restraining the defendants from building on the eastern side in a way which might interfere with plaintiff's easements.

The trial Court decreed the suit against all the three defendants. All three defendants appealed and their appeals were decided by one judgment and all were decreed. The plaintiff comes here in second appeal only against the decree of the lower Appellate Court so far as it set aside his suit against Behari Kahar. The Court below held that, in order to prove his case it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove that he had enjoyed the easements which he claimed for a period of 62 years, and it came to the conclusion that so far as the piece of land on the north was concerned it was not proved that that part of the house had been in existence for anything like 60 years. The learned Judge seems to have been of opinion that that portion of the plaintiff's house could have been in existence for probably about 20 years. With regard to the eastern side of the house the lower Appellate Court has held that that was in existence probably for over 60 years.

Having come to the conclusion that the northern portion of the plaintiff's houses, that is to say the junglas or barred windows and that phatak or gate and darwaza or door had not been in existence for anything like 60 years and, that being so, the plaintiff had failed to establish the easements which he claimed over that portion of the land in dispute, because that land admittedly belong to Government and, therefore, under section 15 of the Indian Easements Act the plaintiff must prove uninterrupted user for at least 62 years, and for this reason it held that the plaintiff's suit must fail; with regard to the eastern portion of the land in dispute the Court held that although the plaintiff had established the easements which he claimed it was premature to ask the Court to issue an injunction because although there was every probability that Behari Kahar would build on that land there was nothing to show that he would build in such a way as to interfere with the rights of the plaintiff and, therefore, the Court dismissed this portion of the suit also, merely warning Behari Kahar that if he did build on this eastern portion in any way so as to interfere with the plaintiff's easements he would have to bear the consequences. Incidentally, the learned Judge, who inspected the premises, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had a means of ingress an egress through a door on the west side of the house and that so long as the defendant Behari did nothing to encroach on the plaintiff's convenient means of approach to this door, the plaintiff could claim nothing more. He, therefore, added in his judgment a note to the effect that the defendant should do nothing that would interfere with the land immediately in front of this door. This however, was not included in the decree which formally set aside the decree of the trial Court and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff comes here in second appeal and urges three points. The first is that the limitation applicable was 20 years and not 62 years. Counsel on his behalf has quoted three cases, Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Debi (1), Pullanappally Sankaran Nambudri v. Vittil

(1) 32 C. 129 (P. C.); 31 I. A. 203; 8 C. W. N. 809; 6 Bom. L. R. 765; 1 A. L. J. 585; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 698.

FIRM OF JESSARAM BHAGWANDAS v. RATANCHAND FATEHCHAND

Thalakat Muhamod (2), and Kutha Perumal Rajali v. The Secretary of State for India (3). In my opinion none of these cases is applicable to the present case. They have nothing whatever to do with the question of easements. The land over which the plaintiff claims his easements undoubtedly belongs to Government and, therefore, in order to establish his right of easement he must prove user of the kind mentioned in section 15 of the Act for a period of at least 62 years. If he fails to establish an easement over that land it seems to me that he cannot establish easement against a person who is merely in occupation of that land, for a less period. An easement is a right which attaches to one piece of land or building over another piece of land and you cannot have an easement in my opinion over a piece of land against A and not against B. It seems to me that on this point the Court below was right, and if that is so then the finding of fact that the windows and doors and gates on the north side have not been in existence for anything like 60 years concludes that portion of the case.

Next, it is urged that on the finding of the Court below that the plaintiff has established 60 years user over the land on the east the injunction should have been granted. Here again I think the Court below was right. It was within its discretion to grant an injunction or not. It clearly told the defendant Behari that he must not build on this portion of the land so as to obstruct any of the easements which the plaintiff had acquired, and practically told the defendant that if he did so it would be at his peril. I am not prepared to say that the Court was wrong in not granting this injunction. The third point is that the Court should not have said anything about the door on the west side of the plaintiff's house. This ground is raised in the second paragraph of the memorandum of appeal to this Court. I agree to this extent that it was unnecessary for the Court to have said anything about it.

The Court has only done so in order to tell the parties clearly what in its opinion were their rights. This portion of the judgment is not incorporated in the decree and really amounts to nothing more than an expression of opinion. The only way in which I could interfere with it would be, I presume, to order that particular sentence to be expunged from the judgment. In my opinion the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Mr. Khanchand Gopaldas, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit filed by the plaintiffs for taking accounts. The plaintiffs are agents who did brokerage work for the defendant and the latter contends that the plaintiffs as brokers have no right to claim an account being taken. The following issues are, therefore, by consent tried as preliminary issues :—

1. Have the plaintiffs a right to claim an account from the defendant ?

3. Is the suit as framed maintainable ?

There were two classes of cases in which an action of account lay at common law. Such an action could be brought against persons who though not trustees stood in a sort of fiduciary relationship, e.g., bailiffs and receivers. Again, a person naming himself a merchant might bring the action against another naming him as a merchant (see Snell's Principles of Equity, 18 Ed., p. 492). The right was extended by statute law so as to enable a joint tenant or tenant in common to obtain an account against another who had received more than his share of the rents and profits. In addition to this common law and statutory right the Court of Chancery had jurisdiction to order an account in aid of an equitable right as where a cestui que trust wanted an account from his trustee, or a mortgagor from his mortgagee, or a remainder man from a tenant for life. The Court of Chancery also ordered an account in aid of a legal right, e.g., when a principal wished to have an account from his agent, or the owner of a patent from the infringer. Equity also ordered an account when there were mutual accounts between the plaintiff and the defendant or where there were circumstances of special complication. But an agent could not as a rule obtain an account against his principal, for an agent has usually all the knowledge requisite to support his rights and requires no discovery and reposes no special confidence in his principal. Padwick v. Stanley (1). See also Bowstead on Agency 6th Ed., p. 268 ; where it is pointed out that where the accounts between a principal and agent are of so complicated a nature that they cannot be satisfactorily disposed of in an action at law the agent has a right to have an account taken in a Court of Equity. Padwick v. Hurst (2), but that it does not follow merely because the principal has such a right that the agent has a similar right Padwick v. Stanley (1). See also Storey on Equity, 3rd Ed., p. 190, where it is observed that an agent could not maintain a suit in Equity against his principal for an account unless he made out a special case. Horington v. Churchward (3), Smith v. Livecaux (4).

Under section 213 of the Indian Contract Act an agent is bound to render proper accounts to his principal on demand. Mr. Kodumal was unable to mention any section imposing a corresponding obligation to account on a principal. He could only refer to the general right of the agent to be indemnified by the principal and to the agent's right under section 219 to detain moneys on account of goods sold.

Mr. Kodumal relied on a passage in Halsbury's Laws of England (Vol. 1, p. 200) to the effect that an agent has a right to have an account taken and that unless the accounts are of a complicated nature they will be taken in an ordinary action in the Kings' Bench Division, but the cases cited in support of this principle viz., Padwick v. Hurst (2), and Harington v. Churchward (3), have already been referred to. The passage cannot in my opinion be interpreted as meaning that an agent has always a right, whether special circumstances exist or not, to claim an account against his principal. Reliance was also placed by Mr. Kodumal on a decision of the Privy Council in the case of Harinath Rai v. Krishnakumar Bakshi (5). But in that case it was the principal who was suing his agent and Lord Hobhouse pointed out that the suit was essentially one for account that nothing could prevent the defendant in a suit framed like that from claiming the benefit of an account if in his favour just as the plaintiff claimed it if a larger sum than he specified should be found due to him. There appears to me nothing in this decision to indicate that a principal is an accounting party to his agent or that the law relating to the rights and obligations of principals and agents has not been correctly stated by Snell and Bowstead and Storey in the passages to which I have referred.

Before being entitled to an order for an account the plaintiff in my opinion must satisfy the Court that the defendant is an accounting party. See Rajhunath v. Ganpati (6).

This the plaintiffs have entirely failed to do. The present claim has evidently been made in order to save the plaintiffs a certain amount of trouble and enable them to pay a somewhat lower Court-fee. Bhagwandas Jessaram, a partner in the plaintiff's firm, stated that it was necessary to have an account because brokerage was calculated on the actual number of pieces in the cases and that there was no other reason. In cross-examination, however, he admitted that brokerage was sometimes calculated on the average number of pieces in a bale and not on the actual number of pieces. He had great difficulty in pointing out one or two instances in his book showing brokerage was calculated on actuals and not on averages. His witness, Tarachand Tirdas, stated that the average is always taken. Another witness Naraindas Mohandas also stated that brokers are paid on averages but that merchants are bound to pay on actual figures if the broker demands it, but that the difference is generally insignificant. Menghraj Tarachand, a 3rd witness, stated brokerage is calculated on the average according to the piece goods imported. Lachiram Murlidhar also stated that brokerage is calculated on averages. Somnath Mithomal, another witness, admitted that he had filed a suit against the defendant for brokerage on an account prepared by him.

It is clear from the evidence of the witnesses that the brokers could get information about goods which were sent and did not arrive without obtaining an account from the principals. Plaintiff admitted there was no difficulty about exchange and that the only reason why he could not mention the exact amount due was that he did not know the actual number of pieces. In addition to the claim made by nearly every one of plaintiff's witnesses that brokerage is paid on averages there is also evidence of defendant's manager to that effect and since filing the suit, plaintiffs have applied for leave to amend the plaint with a view to suing for the specific sum of Rs. 3,022-1-3.

In my opinion plaintiff has entirely failed to prove that defendant is an accounting party or that any special circumstances exist making it necessary to order an account to be taken.

My finding on both issues 1 and 3 is in the negative. Plaintiff to pay defendants' costs. Costs of trying these issues.

With regard to plaintiff's application under O. VI, r. 17, Civil Procedure Code what the plaintiffs really wanted it seems to me was their brokerage and I do not think it is just that their claim should be defeated on the technical ground that, instead of claiming a specific sum, they sued for an account. I am of opinion that the plaintiffs have been badly advised and that the Court should allow the amendment in the special circumstances of the case, subject to the plaintiffs paying the requisite Court-fee and the defendants' costs up to date. The case of Charan Das v. Amir Khan (7) shows that the Court has jurisdiction to allow an amendment when special circumstances exist even though the effect of the amendment will be to take away from a defendant a legal right which has accrued to him by lapse of time.

I, therefore, allow the application. Plaintiffs however to pay defendants' costs up to date and to pay the requisite Court-fee within 7 days.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908) Sch. I, Arts. 82, 120, 144—Landlord and tenant—Occupancy tenant, constructions erected by, without permission of landlord—Suit for demolition and injunction—Limitation.

A suit by a landlord against his occupancy tenant for the demolition of certain constructions built by the latter on his occupancy lands without the permission of the former and for an injunction, is governed either by Article 32 or by Article 120 and not by Article 144 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act.

Lach Ram Rao v. Jangi Ram, 12 Ind. Cas. 108 ; 8 A. L. J. 914, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bulandshahr, dated the 9th of March 1923.

Mr. St. C. Thompson, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for demolition of certain constructions and for an injunction. The plaintiff's case, as set forth in the plaint, was that the defendant had on his occupancy lands built these constructions without his permission some five years before the suit. The defendant pleaded that these constructions were not new but had existed for some 40 years. When the case came on for hearing the plaintiff in his evidence stated that these constructions had been built some six or seven years before. On the other hand, the defendant's evidence was that they had been built some 15 years before. The Court of first instance in its finding on issue No. 3 came to the conclusion that these constructions were within six years of the institution of the suit. It held that the Article applicable was Article 120 and, therefore, overruled the plea of limitation raised by the defendant.

On appeal by the defendant the lower Appellate Court has, it appears to me, come to a quite different finding on the facts. It was not impressed by the plaintiff's vague statement that the houses were built six or seven years ago and there being no other satisfactory evidence to corroborate it, it came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had failed to prove that these constructions were made within six years of the suit. By implication it has inferred that these constructions must have been made more than six years before the suit. On this finding it dismissed the suit holding that it was barred by time.

On appeal the only point taken is that the claim is not barred by time. The learned Counsel who appears for the appellant argues that the Article 120 is not applicable but that Article 144 is applicable. He has cited no other Article except Article 144. It is manifest that Article 144 can in no sense be applicable. The houses were built on defendant's occupancy lands. The plaintiff does not allege in his plaint that he had actual possession of the lands and has ever lost possession. It is not a suit for possession at all. The landlord has not tried to avail himself of his right to eject under section 57 (b) of the Tenancy Act. Under the circumstances, Article 144 can have no application whatever. If the defendant has by building the houses on the occupancy lands perverted the property to a purpose other than that for which he has a right to use, then the claim falls within Article 32 of the Limitation Act and is governed by only two years' rule of limitation. In any event, Article 120 only applies both as regards the relief for demolition of constructions and for an injunction. I take the finding of the lower Appellate Court to be that the cause of action accrued in favour of the plaintiff more than six years previous to the suit. The claim is, therefore, on that finding barred by time. I am supported in this view by the rule of law laid down in the case of Lach Ram Rao v. Jangi Rai (1). The appeal has no force and I dismiss it.

Appeal against decree of the Sub-Judge, Kheri, dated 30th October 1922.

Mr. Bisheshar Nath, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Niamat Ullah and E. R. Qidwar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the appellants for the recovery of Rs. 36,299-5-0 by sale of the property mentioned in paragraph 2 (c) of the plaint by virtue of a deed of mortgage, dated the 29th July 1905, executed by Nasir Ahmed and Umrao Ahmad, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, respectively, and their parents, Nawab Ali and Mt Ushshaqunisa alins Mondan Begam, since deceased. The third defendant to the suit is the wife of the defendant No. 1.

On the 31st January 1922, an ex parte decree was passed by the Court below against all the three defendants. On the 18th April 1922, this decree was set aside as against the defendants Nos. 2 and 3. It was, however, maintained and still subsists as against the first defendant. The result was, that the trial of the suit proceeded as against the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 only.

In defence to the suit, the following pleas were raised: 1. That Mt. Mondan Begam was the sole and exclusive owner of the property in suit at the time of the execution of the deed of mortgage. 2. That she did not execute the deed. 3. That it was fictitiously executed by her husband, Nawab Ali, in his own interest.

At a late stage of the suit the defendants, on the 15th July 1922, presented a petition for permission to set up an additional plea that the deed, even if proved to have been executed by Mt. Mondan Begam, was obtained from her by the exercise of undue influence upon her by her husband Nawab Ali, and that she had no independent advice in the matter. On certain conditions this amendment of the defendants' pleadings was accepted and the propriety of it has not been challenged before us in appeal. The result was that the plea of undue influence set forth in the case is one of the two main issues in it. The other important issue was one of estoppel raised by the plaintiffs in paragraphs 14 and 15 of their replication.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the deed of mortgage was, as a matter of fact, executed by Mt. Mondan Begam; that the property mortgaged belonged to her alone; that the defendants were not estopped from setting up the exclusive title of Mt. Mondan Begam to the property which was the subject-matter of the mortgage; that Mt. Mondan Begam executed the mortgage in suit under the undue influence of her husband; that she was a pardah-nashin lady and entitled to the protection afforded by law and that she did not receive that protection in the transaction under consideration. On these grounds he has refused to give the plaintiffs the relief for the sale of the mortgaged property. He has, however, granted a simple money-decree against the defendant No. 2 and dismissed the suit altogether against the defendant No. 3.

We have already stated that the ex parte decree for the sale of the property in suit as against the defendant No. 1 was maintained. In the decree prepared after the trial of the suit, however, the learned Subordinate Judge has ordered that the share of the defendant No. 1 in the property in suit liable to be sold shall be less by the interest of the defendant No. 3 in that share. Besides the main appeal, we have also before us the cross-objections on behalf of the defendants-respondents, challenging the propriety of giving a simple money-decree against the defendant No. 2.

The first thing necessary to be stated at the outset is the fact that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the property in suit was owned by and belonged exclusively to Mt. Mondan Begam was not challenged at the hearing of this appeal by the learned Advocate, who argued it on behalf of the appellants. The finding is based on ample evidence to which reference is made by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment under appeal and it will serve no useful purpose to recapitulate that evidence in our own judgment. We, therefore, start with the cardinal fact that the other three executants of the deed in suit, that is, the husband and the two sons of the lady, had no interest in the mortgaged property and were consequently not competent to deal with it in any manner so as to bind that property by their acts collectively or individually. Another important matter, upon which the judgment of the lower Courts rests to a large extent, is the question of fact as to whether the plaintiffs-mortgagees were on the date of the mortgage aware or not of the real state of title in the property of which they took a mortgage. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that at the time of the mortgage the plaintiffs knew that the title to the property was exclusively with Mt. Mondan Begam. At the hearing of the appeal a faint effort was made to dispute this finding. After consideration of the evidence bearing on the question the conclusion at which we have arrived on this point is the same as that of the learned Subordinate Judge.

The plea of estoppel was the point argued before us by the learned Advocate for the appellants. In the first instance, reliance was placed, as it was in the Court below, on the provisions of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). The principle of law on which those provisions rest is a well-known rule of estoppel sometimes referred to as feeding the grant by estoppel. In cases falling under section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act the estoppel rests on the representation made by a transferor that he is "authorised to transfer" which representation subsequently turns out to be erroneous. But where the truth of the matter is known to both parties there can be no estoppel: See the decision of Sir Ford North in the case of Moheri Bilee v. Dharmodas Ghose (1). In the case before us, as a matter of fact, that the mortgagees knew that neither the husband nor the sons of Mt. Mondan Begam had any interest in the property of which they took a mortgage from them. We are, therefore, of opinion that the interest which the sons had acquired by inheritance from their mother on the death of that lady cannot be made the subject of the mortgage under the provisions of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). In this connection, it was further argued that the general principle of feeding the grant by estoppel would fasten the mortgage on the subsequently acquired interest of Mt. Mondan Begam's sons in the property in suit in spite of the fact that the mortgagees knew that these sons had no interest whatsoever at the date of the mortgage and in support of this contention reliance was placed on the case of Partridge v. Ward (2), wherein it is held that the newly acquired interest will pass under the assignment even though the defect in title is apparent on the face of the assignment. Possibly, the rule laid down in the decision just now mentioned would apply to certain cases in India as well but it cannot certainly apply to a case like the one before us. The plaintiffs, with their eyes open and with full knowledge of the utter absence of any title in the sons and the husband of the lady, took the mortgage in suit from them. The real bargain, therefore, between the mortgagees and those persons when stripped of its apparent form given to it in the deed of mortgage was that they mortgaged such an interest of theirs as amounted to nothing more or less than the chance of surviving the lady and acquiring a share in the inheritance. A transfer of such an interest is clearly forbidden by section 6, clause (a) of the Transfer of Property Act. If we permit this mortgage to be given effect to we would be transgressing a clear provision of law. The mortgage of those interests was a fraud on the law as observed by the learned Subordinate Judge and no Court of justice can countenance it. Further the plea of estoppel, on which the learned Advocate for the appellants relies, is clearly a rule of equity and may be expressed in other words to be that no person shall be permitted to derogate from his own grant. The mortgage before us, so far as the interest of those three persons is concerned, was void under section 23 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) in view of the provisions of section 6, clause (a) of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) as we have pointed out above. The principle of equity relied upon by the learned Advocate for the appellants cannot be given the effect of validating a void contract. In this connection we may refer to the decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the case of Sumsuddin v. Abdul Husain (3). The principle of estoppel, therefore, fails.

(1) 30 C. 53J; 30 I. A. 111, 7 C. W. N. 411; 5 Bom. L. R. 421, 8 Ssr. P. C. J. 371 (P. C.).

DWARKA PRASAD v. NASIR AHMED

On the question of undue influence, the first line of attack was that the onus of establishing it rests on the defendants. As regards the question of burden of proof, no hard and fast rule can be laid down in the sense that the rule should apply to all cases. The determination of initial onus of proving a certain fact depends on the particular circumstances of each case, and onus also shifts from time to time during the progress of the trial as the evidence develops and facts are established. What are the facts of the present case? It is admitted that Mt. Mondan Begam was a pardah nashin lady. She had inherited considerable property from her father. The entire management was in the hands of her husband, Nawab Ali, who, to quote the learned Subordinate Judge, used to receive and expend the entire income without reaching the lady's hands. Nawab Ali was in such relations with his wife and sons that they would implicitly and quietly obey him and would do anything which he would tell them to do." In these circumstances, we are of opinion, and our opinion is in agreement with the learned Subordinate Judge, that Nawab Ali stood in a position of active confidence to his wife, Mt. Mondan Begam. The evidence of Zamin Hussain (P. W. 7) whom the learned Subordinate Judge has accepted as a truthful witness, shows that "the transaction in suit was settled with the plaintiffs on behalf of the lady by her husband, Nawab Ali, and myself that is, Zamin Hussain." He also says that he acted under the instructions of Nawab Ali and Mt. Mondan Begam did not take any part in the management of the property. The provisions of section 111 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), therefore, apply to this case. In the present case the question is not merely that the lady knew what she was doing or had done but the further and vital question is "how her intention to act was produced, whether all that care and providence was placed round her as against those who advised her, which from their situation and relation with respect to her, they were bound to exert on her behalf," per Lord Eldon in Hughenin v. Baseley (4). (White and Tudor's Leading cases, 7th edition, Vol. 1, p. 247 at p. 264). To the same effect is the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Sri Kishan Lal v.

Musammatt Kashmiro (5). All those who could advise the lady in the matter of this transaction were expressly made a party to it. All avenues of protection and independent advice were, therefore, closed as against the lady. We have it in the evidence of Zamin Husain that the loan in suit was taken to pay off debts due from Nawab Ali. "It was applied in payment of Nawab Ali's debts. The lady and her sons received no part of this money." There is also evidence to the effect that a sum of Rs. 2,500 was spent out of the mortgage-money on the marriage of Umrao Muhammad, but this marriage came off at least two years after the execution of the deed in suit. It may be that Nawab Ali kept apart this sum in his own custody for the purpose of the marriage. For this reason alone the contract of mortgage cannot be made binding on the lady. It is quite clear to us that her sons as her representatives do not stand in any worse position. On the main points, therefore, the appeal fails.

It is also argued by the learned Counsel for the appellants that the sale of the share of the defendant No. 1 in the mortgaged property under the ex parte decree should not have been made subject to the interest which the defendant No. 3 has in that share. As we have said before, the defendant No. 3 is the wife of the defendant No. 1. She holds some interest in his share under an arrangement between them. This arrangement is evidenced by mutation in the name of the defendant No. 3. It would perhaps have been better on the part of the learned Subordinate Judge to have said nothing in this behalf in his judgment and the decree following the trial of the suit as against the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, but inasmuch as the deed of mortgage fails altogether as against these two defendants the result is the same.

As regards the cross-objections, we are of opinion that the claim for a simple money decree as against the defendant No. 2 is neither barred by time nor is opposed to the terms of the deed in suit. In fact, there is a clear provision of personal liability of the executants and there is also a promise to pay the money after fourteen years. The cross-objections also fail. The result is that we dismiss the appeal and the cross-objections with costs.

A dispute arose between the parties with reference to two mortgage-deeds in respect of which the sanction of the Revenue Officer had been obtained for the transfer of cultivating rights in Sir land. The dispute was referred to arbitration but all that the arbitrator had to decide was what sum was due under the mortgages and in what period of time it was to be paid. The arbitrator gave his award and a preliminary decree was passed in accordance with the award directing payment in a certain manner and allowing foreclosure in case of default. The decree-holders assigned the decree to one T the judgment-debtors failed to appeal against it and the decree was made final;

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 30th October 1922 in Civil Suit No. 16 of 1916.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. Bhawanishankar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The preliminary decree in Suit No. 16 of 1916 on the file of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, was based on two mortgages, one of Rs. 6,000, dated the 21st June 1904, and the other of Rs. 1,090, dated the 29th October 1908. The arbitrator had decided that Rs. 19,233-8-0 were due and were to be re-paid in 32 yearly instalments of Rs. 600 payable on Baisakh Suddi 15 each year, commencing in 1326 Fasli and ending in 1357 Fasli, the last instalment being of Rs. 633-8-0, interest at Re. 1-12-0 per cent. being payable on defaulted instalment. In default of the payment on any three instalments the whole amount became due, and on such default the property was liable to foreclosure. The award is filed and the decree asked for is on the award. There being minors in the case the Court sanctioned the award and passed a decree in its terms on 7th October 1916. On the 1st of March 1921 the decree was made final. An appeal was made to this Court, First Appeal No. 31 of 1921. It seems that the original plaintiffs assigned their decree by a registered instrument on the 5th February 1920 to Mst. Tulsabai, and she got her name entered on the record on the 19th August 1920. This Court in its judgment states:—

“The whole case put shortly is that the defendants pleaded in the lower Court that the claim in suit has been adjusted in part by a lawful agreement, but they were not allowed to give any evidence of that agreement, which they are clearly entitled to do.”

The final decree was set aside and the case was remanded for fresh decision. It was then found that the defendants' allegations with regard to the agreement with Tulsabai were not proved and that she was entitled to get a final decree in her favour, and that in default of payment the decretal amount by the 26th October 1922 the decree was to be made final. It was made final on the 30th of that month. Certain sir fields were covered by the decree and from these the defendants were ejected. They then applied for restoration to possession of the sir land on the ground that they became occupancy-tenants of that land on the passing of the decree. Sanction of the Revenue Officer to the two original mortgages mortgaging the sir had been taken, but it was contended that this did not cover the decree passed on the award nor yet the assignment. We have two appeals before us arising out of the same case, the present and First Appeal No. 18 of 1923.

The defendants contend in the memorandum of appeal that there was an agreement between Ganpatrao and Mst. Tulsabai under which Mst. Tulsabai was to pay Rs. 22,900 to the original decree-holder and get an assignment of the decree from him and was to be paid Rs. 2,000 by the appellant No. 1 Ganpatrao and the balance by instalments, and that she was not to apply for a decree absolute until there was default in payment of three instalments. They further contend that in the absence of sanction to transfer cultivating rights in the sir fields neither the award dated 1st August 1916 nor the assignment dated 5th February 1920 could validly transfer such rights to R. S. Deshpande or to Mst. Tulsabai, and that, therefore, the final decree in so far as it purported to transfer cultivating rights in the sir fields to the respondent was invalid and inoperative since the appellants became ex-proprietary occupancy tenants thereof.

In First Appeal No. 18 of 1923, which is filed by Tulsabai, an order of the Additional District Judge passed on an application for restoration of the judgment-debtor in suit No. 16 of 1916 is attacked. The Judge there held that the case was governed by the principle enunciated in the case of Narain Ganesh Ghatate v. Baliram (1), a decision of the Privy Council, and that the award in the present case was a fresh origin of the rights between the parties and, therefore, the sanction accorded by the Revenue Officer to the transfer of the cultivating rights in the sir land was inoperative and did not apply to the award, and that plaintiff's title to the cultivating rights in the sir land is vitiated by the decree passed in terms of the award which superseded previous mortgage rights. The Judge held that the assignment decree did not require any sanction of the Revenue Officer. The judgment-debtor's application was sanctioned and he was ordered to be restored to possession of the sir land with crops from which he was ejected in execution of the decree.

The facts in Narain Ganesh Ghatate v. Baliram (1) are not quite on all fours with those in the present case. In that case, by two deeds dated 1881 and 1884, certain mulguzari villages in the Bhandara district were mortgaged with all rights and appurtenances, including the right to occupy and cultivate the sir lands. In 1899 the mortgagee obtained a decree nisi for foreclosure, which expressly included the cultivating rights in the mortgaged sir lands. While proceedings for an order absolute on the above decree were pending, in 1905 the parties referred the whole case for disposal by the Board of Conciliation, acting as arbitrators. This Board made an award in 1905, whereby the amount payable and mode of payment were set out, and it was declared that in default of payment the creditor should be entitled to enforce the whole of his rights under the deeds of 1881 and 1884 against certain of the mortgaged villages specified in the award, the rest of the mortgaged villages being released from liability. The award was filed in Court and a decree nisi for foreclosure was made in accordance with its terms in September 1905. Default in payment having occurred, a final decree was made in June 1910. Dealing with the question as to the bearing of section 45 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1898, on the case, it was held by this Court that the arbitration award of February 1905 superseded and extinguished the foreclosure decree of January 1899, wherein the deeds of 1881 and 1884 had merged; that, therefore, the foreclosure decree absolute of 16th June 1910, whereby the judgment-debtors lost their proprietary rights in the sir lands, was not based on a document duly registered before the date (21st October 1898) on which the Tenancy Act came into force; and hence, that sub-section (6) of section 45 did not apply, and notwithstanding the contract award and decree to the contrary, the judgment-debtors had become occupancy tenants of the foreclosed sir lands.

In that case it is clear that the decree nisi had been obtained on the mortgage and then the matter was taken to the Conciliation Board which not only reduced the amount claimed but released from the claim a portion of the property mortgaged. The case here is that the arbitrator was apparently appointed to determine what amount was due on the mortgage-deeds of 1904 and 1908. By his award he released none of the property mortgaged. There had been certain changes, tenancy land becoming khushkash, and these were mentioned in the award. There can be no doubt that if the suit had been based on the two mortgage-deeds, without the intervention of the award on default of payment, the cultivating rights in the mortgaged sir would have gone to the mortgagee; and we have to consider whether, in view of the principle enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Narain Ganesh Ghatate v. Baliram (1), the facts of the present case are distinguishable from the facts there.

Their Lordships in their judgment, regarding the case they were dealing with, write : —

"It is a question of construction, not incapable of being argued and even decided either way, but their Lordships see no reason to differ from the decision appealed against."

Though it has been frankly admitted by the plaintiff's learned Counsel that if the award is the document on which the rights of the parties started he was bound by the decision in Narain Ganesh Ghatate v. Baliram, still he contended that there were other facts which prevented defendants from succeeding in their appeal and which entitled the plaintiff to cultivating possession of the hypothecated sir. This stand is taken on the preliminary decree which contained express mention of cultivating rights in sir. Plaintiff got possession of the sir on 30th November 1922. It is argued that when the contractual rights have been merged into a decree, they cease; and that the case is governed by the decree and the rights of parties must be regulated by the decree. Sundar Koer v. Bai Sham Krishun (2), a decision of the Privy Council, is quoted in support of this argument. It is contended that the Court executing the decree, must take the decree as it stands and has no power to go behind the decree or entertain an objection to the legality or correctness of the decree. This principle seems firmly established: see the cases of Kalipada Sarkar v. Hari Mohan Dalal (3), Ramnath Mulchand v. Gajanan Pandurang Limaye (4), Gomatham Alamelu v. Komandur Krishnamacharlu (5), Suradhani Dutta v. Sitoo Sheikh (6), Balaji Vithoba v. Balkrishna Raoji (7), Kodulal Agarwala v. Behari Kurmi (8), and Parkhit v. Chamra and Jagbandhu (9). It is further contended that the defendants having failed to appeal from the preliminary decree cannot, under the provisions of section 97 of the Civil Procedure Code, dispute the correctness of that decree in any appeal which may be preferred from the final decree. For the defendants no attempt is made to challenge the decision come to by the lower Court that the decree was assigned to Mst. Tulsabai in her own right, but it is contended that though they may not be able, under section 97, Civil Procedure Code, to challenge the correctness of the preliminary decree they can challenge anything that happened between the passing of the preliminary decree and the final decree, and that an executing Court can amend a decree. We are referred to Brijratan v. Jayanarain (10) in support of this proposition, but that case does not lay down that an executing Court can amend or vary a decree.

M. Subramania Aiyar v. Vaithinatha Aiyar (11) is a case which lays down that a decree passed after the death of the defendant and before his legal representative was brought on the record is a nullity. The next case quoted, Kushodhaj Bhukta v. Braja Mohan Bhukta (12) is not applicable. Another case quoted, viz., Jogeshwar Atha v. Ganga Bishnu (13), does not apply to execution proceedings.

It is further contended that the failure of the defendants to object in the face of an award to transfer cultivating rights did not estop him within the meaning of section 115 of the Evidence Act, and we are referred to Govind v. Mt. Chandrabhaga (14), Jagwant Singh v. Silan Singh (15) and Jhunka Prasad v. Nathu (16) with reference to this question. We think that as the award upon which the case is based flowed from the mortgages of 1904, and 1908, documents in which the sanction of the Revenue Officer had been obtained for the transfer of cultivating rights in the sir, it cannot fairly be said that the award itself created the present rights of the parties. That award was admittedly framed on the mortgages, and it seems that all the arbitrator had to decide was what sum was then due and in what period of time it was to be paid. It is not denied that the sanction given to a mortgagor's cultivating rights in sir would validate a decree as regards such rights in a suit brought on the mortgage, and we cannot see how, facts being as they are, the intervention of the award could prevent the plaintiff getting what the defendants agreed to give him. We think that the lower Court is right in finding that sanction of no officer was necessary to the assignment of the decree to Mt. Tulsabai. The assignment gave her the rights of the then plaintiffs in the suit. We further think that the defendants are precluded by section 97 of the Civil Procedure Code from questioning the correctness of the preliminary decree, and are opinion that an executing Court has not the power to enlarge, modify or change a decree.

KUMARASWAMI NADAR v. VENKATASAMI KOUNDAN

The result is we think that the appeal of the defendants must stand dismissed with costs, and that the order of restoration must be set aside and the cultivating possession of the sir land in the suit should be, as stated in the final decree, made over to the plaintiff in execution of that decree. The defendants will pay the plaintiff's costs of the defendant's appeal, while the plaintiff will get her costs in her appeal from the defendants.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 68—Official Receiver disallowing creditor's claim—Proceedings instituted by creditor against order—Official Receiver, whether necessary party—District Court, whether bound to take fresh evidence.

The Official Receiver is an officer of Court and there is no provision in the Insolvency Act which makes it obligatory on the District Court to have the Official Receiver made a formal party to proceedings under the Act, and the fact that he is not impleaded does not vitiate any order passed therein. [p. 858, col. 1.]

There is no provision in the Insolvency Act laying down any obligation on the District Court to take fresh evidence in matters brought before it although it would be open to the Court to take such evidence if it thinks desirable to do so. [p. 858, col. 2.]

Chinnamra Rowther v. Kumarachakravarti Aiyangar, 16 Ind. Cas. 966, distinguished.

In certain insolvency proceedings the Official Receiver allows the claim of a creditor only in part. The creditor applied to the District Judge praying that the whole of his claim be allowed. The District Judge granted the prayer and another creditor appealed to the High Court against the order :

Held, that inasmuch as the creditors were made parties and notice had been given to all of them, it was open to them to appear themselves before the District Court or to have moved the Official Receiver to represent the whole party of creditors before the Court and to state their objections and the proof tendered and that, therefore, it was not necessary to make the Official Receiver a formal party to the proceedings; [p. 858, col. 2.]

(2) that as the District Judge was merely considering the correctness of the order of the Official Receiver there was no objection to his acting on the evidence given before that officer. [p. 858, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Madura in C. M. P. No. 231 of 1920, in Claim No. 22 of 1918 (on the file of the Official Receiver), in I. P. No. 12 of 1914 on the file of the District Court of Madura.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises from an application made by the 7th creditor in the Insolvency proceedings of one Tirumala Goundan. The 7th creditor claimed to prove for Rs. 7,000. The Official Receiver allowed the claim in part but disallowed it in respect of the amount claimed under the Promissory Note Ex. B. The creditor then applied to the District Judge under section 68 of the Insolvency Act against the order of the Official Receiver and prayed that the whole of his claim may be allowed. The learned District Judge, after considering the circumstances of the case and the evidence, has granted him his prayer, and the present appeal is by the 15th respondent, one of the other creditors.

Two points have been taken before us as vitiating the order of the District Judge altogether. The first is that the order was passed without making the Official Receiver a formal party to the application before the District Judge. The creditors apparently were all made parties and notice had been given to all the creditors including the 15th respondent, the appellant now before us. He appeared before the District Judge and opposed the claim of the 7th creditor. Apparently, the Official Receiver was not made a formal party respondent to the application before the District Judge but we do not think that that can be treated as in any way materially affecting the order of the District Judge. It was open to any of the creditors either to appear themselves as the 15th creditor did to oppose the proof tendered by the 7th creditor before the District Court or to have moved the Official Receiver to represent the whole party of creditors before that Court and to state their objections to the proof tendered. The Official Receiver is after all an officer of the Court and there is no provision in the Insolvency Act, so far as we can see, which makes it obligatory on the District Court to have the Official Receiver made a formal party to these proceedings. If the Official Receiver wanted to be heard, there would have been no difficulty whatsoever in the matter as we have no doubt that the District Judge would have heard him. The Official Receiver has been made a party to this appeal before us, but he has not come here and complained that he has been prejudiced in any way by his not being heard on this matter in the lower Court. Reliance has been placed on Mangaluri Sivaramayya v. Singamahanti Bhujanga Rao reported in (1), by the appellant's Vakil in favour of his contention. But there we notice that the Official Receiver was directed to execute a document in favour of the creditor who required that the whole of the assets of the Insolvent should be transferred to him in accordance with an agreement which he entered into with the insolvent before the Insolvency. Whether in such a case as that the Official Receiver should be formally made a party and his objections heard or not, we need not consider here, for, in the present case, we see no reason why the Official Receiver should have been made a formal party as, in the circumstances of this case, it was as already stated, open to him to have come up and stated any objections that he might have had to the proof tendered. We may state that he knew of the proceedings that were going on in the Insolvency Court itself. In these circumstances, the first objection is not a valid one and is overruled.

The next objection is that the District Judge acted upon some statements made by the parties before the Official Receiver. Here, again, the District Judge was considering the propriety of the action of the Official Receiver which he had taken, as the evidence that was laid before him and the question which the District Judge had to decide was whether on that evidence, the order of the Official Receiver was a right one and should be supported. The case cited by the appellant's Vakil, Chinnameera Ravuthar v. Kumara Chakravarthi Aiyangar (2) had reference to an application under section 36 of the old Insolvency Act and related to the annulment of a document which the Official Receiver had applied to the Court to annul. The Official Receiver was himself the applicant and it was held that any statement taken by him could not be treated as evidence because the matter itself was being tried before the District Court as a matter between the alienee on the one side and the Official Receiver on the other. Such is not the position here at all. Here the District Judge is merely considering the correctness of the order of the Official Receiver, and in such a case as this we do not see any objection to the District Judge acting on the evidence given before the Official Receiver. Nor is there any provision in the Act itself for necessitating the District Court to take fresh evidence in such matters. We do not say that it would not have been open to the District Court to take such evidence, if it thought desirable to do so, but there is no provision laying down any obligation on the District Court to do so. In these circumstances, the two objections that have been raised to the order of the lower Court fail.

On the merits, the only argument addressed to us is that, as in a previous annulment proceeding this creditor had given up his interest in the land so far as his mortgage was concerned and agreed to treat himself as an unsecured creditor for the amount of consideration which, he should prove like any other creditor, his claim must be looked upon with suspicion. What the exact reason for his doing so was we do not know. But the fact that he did so cannot be taken as conclusive on the question that the money was not due as a personal debt.

No other ground has been alleged against the order of the District Judge. We, therefore, confirm that order and dismiss this appeal with costs of the 7th creditor to be paid by the appellant, the 15th creditor.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. XI, r. 21—Order directing discovery—Procedure—Order of dismissal, when should be made.

The terms of O. XI, r. 21 of the Civil Procedure Code contemplate two orders being made: (1) an order for the answer to the interrogatories or for the discovery or inspection of documents, as the case may be, within a specified time, and (2) upon the failure to comply with such an order, a further order dismissing the suit. [p. 861, col. 2.]

It is desirable that this course should ordinarily be followed and an order dismissing the suit should not be made unless the Court is satisfied that the plaintiff is endeavouring to avoid giving a fair and proper discovery. [p. 861, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from an order made by my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves on the 14th of May 1923.

The order was: "It is ordered that the further and better affidavit of documents filed by the plaintiff firm after the expiration of the time granted by the said order be taken off the file: And it is further ordered that this suit be and the same is hereby dismissed for want of prosecution."

The facts which it is necessary for me to mention for the purpose of my judgment are as follows:—

On the 2nd of August 1921, an order was made that the plaintiffs in this suit should file an affidavit of documents within ten days, such affidavit to be made by their gomasta. The affidavit was not filed within ten days, and it was not until the 3rd of January 1922 that the plaintiffs filed the affidavit sworn by the plaintiffs gomasta. On the 8th of February 1923, the defendants made an application for a further and better affidavit of documents by the plaintiffs and on the 14th of February the learned Judge made the following order:—

"It is ordered that within ten days from the date hereof the plaintiff firm do file a further and better affidavit to be made by all their members accounting for the various letters received by them from the defendant firm and specifically disclosing the entries in their account-books showing the names of the sellers of the goods referred to in the said petition, the dates on which such goods were purchased and the prices thereof: And it is further ordered that in default of the plaintiff firm filing such affidavit within the time aforesaid this suit do stand dismissed with costs on scale No. 2".

This order was not complied with. The further and better affidavit was not filed within the time specified by the order, namely, ten days, and no affidavit of documents, made by all the members of the firm, was ever filed. But on the 13th of March 1923 a further affidavit was filed: that was sworn by Motilal, one of the members of the plaintiff firm, on the 16th of March.

Certain correspondence took place which is to be found at pages 4, 5, 6 and 7 of the paper-book. On the 14th of March 1923 the plaintiff's Solicitors wrote as follows:—

"Please note that we have filed our clients' further affidavit of documents." It is to be noted that that was written a day after the affidavit was filed.

Then the defendant's Attorneys wrote as follows:

'Yours of yesterday received by us to-day.

"Please let us know when you have filed your clients' further affidavit of documents."

To that no answer was sent, and apparently nothing was done by the defendants until the 24th of April when the defendant's Attorneys wrote to the Registrar with reference to this matter, as follows, After referring to the order of the 14th of February 1923, they proceeded—"The plaintiff firm did not file any affidavit of documents within that time. On the 15th March last we received a letter from Messrs. Pugh & Co., the Attorneys for the plaintiff firm, informing us that the further and better affidavit of documents has been filed to which we sent an immediate reply asking them to let us know as to when they filed the affidavit of documents to which no reply has yet been received. From your office we came to learn and subsequently we saw that the affidavit has been filed and on the back of the said affidavit it is noted as follows, "Pursuant to order" of 14th February 1923 out of time.

"no steps taken"

Pugh & Co.

12-3-23.

"Requisition given

G. Sanyal

12-3-23."

"out of time

no steps taken

13-3-23."

(Then comes the final note)

"File

13-3-23."

That last note, as I understand was initialled by the Master.

The letter then proceeded :

"We do not understand, how the said affidavit can be filed on the 13th March last when the order directs that it is to be filed within 10 days from the 14th and in default the suit do stand dismissed with costs and we do not know how your office received that affidavit, as the order of the 14th of February last has been drawn up, completed, served on Messrs. Pugh & Co. and then filed in your office.

"Under the circumstances we shall be much obliged if you will kindly take the affidavit off the file and place the suit in the special List of suits."

The reply of the Registrar was as follows :

"With reference to your letter of the 24th instant asking that a further affidavit of documents filed by Messrs. Pugh & Co. on behalf of the plaintiff firm should be taken off the file as having been filed after the expiry of the time granted by the peremptory order of the 14th February last, I write to inform you that owing to the endorsement made by Messrs. Pugh & Co., that no steps have been taken and made on the 12th March and owing to the fact that the order itself was not signed until the 16th March and not filed till the 19th March the Ledger-keeper certified that the affidavit was out of time and that no steps have been taken and hence the order was given by the Master on the 13th that the affidavit be filed. The affidavit has obviously been wrongly filed but I am unable to take it off the file or to place the case in the special list of suits, unless Messrs. Pugh & Co consent or unless you obtain an order for that purpose."

Having received that letter from the Registrar the defendants gave notice of an application on the 5th of May as follows: "Take notice that an application will be made before the Sitting Judge in Chambers on the 8th May 1923 on the part of the defendant firm above-named for an order that the further and better affidavit of documents improperly filed on the 13th March 1923 be taken off the file and this suit be struck out".

This matter came before the learned Judge on the 14th of May; he had before him an affidavit sworn by the gomasta of the plaintiff firm in which he set out that none of the partners of the plaintiff firm was in Calcutta but that Motilal who had sworn the affidavit was in the Native State of Alwar and he had sworn it in Alwar and he had sent it down to Calcutta where it was received on the 12th March and filed on the 13th March, alleging that there had been no negligence; and then it was further alleged that, inasmuch as no steps had been taken by the defendant firm, the plaintiff firm was entitled to file the said affidavit.

The learned Judge, on the 14th of May 1923, made the order, which I have already read, and this appeal has been filed against that order of the 14th of May.

It was pointed out during the course of the argument that the second order of the learned Judge, which he made at the instance of the defendants, was really a superfluous order, inasmuch as the first order provided that if the affidavit were not filed within the time specified in the order of 14th February the suit should stand dismissed with costs and inasmuch as the affidavit was not filed within the time specified the suit was in fact dismissed; in other words, that the order of the 14th of February became, on the 25th of February, a final order dismissing the suit.

It was argued by the learned Counsel on behalf of the plaintiffs that the order of the 14th of February was no more than an interlocutory order; and that, inasmuch as the plaintiffs had appealed from the final order of the 5th of May, the plaintiffs were entitled to challenge the propriety of the order of the 14th of February, 1923, as well as the order of the 5th May.

In my judgment, that argument should not be accepted. In my opinion the order of the 14th of February became, on the 25th February, a final order dismissing the suit. It was open to the plaintiffs to appeal from that order if they so desired, and I suppose it was also open to them to make an application upon proper materials to the learned Judge to review his judgment by way of extending the time for the filing of the affidavit. The appeal with which we are now dealing, was filed on the 4th of June, 1923 and was limited to the order of the 14th May; and, therefore, as far as the order of the 14th of February was concerned, the appeal was long out of time even if it could be considered as an appeal against the order of the 14th of February.

The second point which the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs urged was that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to make the order of the 14th of February in the form in which it stands, and that it must be regarded as an order which was made entirely without jurisdiction, and, therefore, is a nullity.

The order was made in pursuance of the provisions of O. XI, r. 21, Civil Procedure Code, which run as follows.—“Where any party fails” to comply with any order to answer interrogatories, or for discovery or inspection of documents, he shall if a plaintiff, be liable to “have his suit dismissed for want of prosecution, and, if a defendant, to have his defence, if any, struck out, and to be placed in the same position as if he had not defended, and the party interrogating or seeking discovery or inspection may apply to the” Court for an order to that effect, and an order may be made accordingly.

There was no appeal by the plaintiffs from the order of the 14th February and in my judgment it is not necessary for the purpose of the disposal of this case to decide whether the learned Judge should have made the order of the 14th of February, 1923 in the form in which it stands. At present I am not prepared to hold that it was made without jurisdiction. It may be that the learned Judge was satisfied on the 14th of February 1923 that the plaintiffs were endeavouring to avoid giving a fair and proper discovery of documents. I am inclined to think that he must have been of that opinion first because of the preemptory nature of the order that the affidavit of documents should be made within ten days, secondly, because he directed that all the members of the plaintiff firm should make an affidavit and, thirdly, because of the matters which he specified that the plaintiff firm should disclose. I desire to make it clear, however, that I do not decide the question in this case whether the learned Judge had jurisdiction to make the order of the 14th of February in the form in which it stands. At the same time, I think it is desirable to add that, in my judgment, the terms of O. XI, r. 21 contemplate two orders being made. First, an order for the answer to the interrogatories or for the discovery or inspection of documents, as the case may be, within a specified time and, secondly, upon the failure to comply with such an order, a further order dismissing the suit. This is in accordance with the English practice, as to which reference may be made to Daniell's Chancery Forms (sixth Edition) p. 1027, the form being No. 1932 which order is made in pursuance of the English O. XXXI, r. 21, which is similar to O. XI, r. 21 in all material respects. It is desirable, in my judgment, that this course should ordinarily be followed, and it should be noted that an order dismissing the suit should not be made unless the Court is satisfied that the plaintiff is endeavouring to avoid giving a fair and proper discovery. It must, therefore, be assumed that, when the learned Judge made the second order, namely, that of the 5th of May 1923, the learned Judge was satisfied that the plaintiffs, by not conforming to the order which he had made on the 14th of February, were endeavouring to avoid giving a fair and proper discovery.

LAXMAN v. BHULABAI

That being so, in my judgment the learned Judge had jurisdiction to dismiss the suit, and, having regard to the facts of the case, I am not prepared to say that the learned Judge was wrong in the exercise of his discretion in dismissing the suit.

The last point which the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs urged was that this Court should exercise the jurisdiction which is given under section 5 of the Limitation Act, and extend the time for appealing from the order of the 14th February, 1923. In order that the provisions of that section should be available, it would be necessary for the plaintiffs to show that they had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within the time specified. I cannot see any grounds which would bring the case within the scope of that section. The terms of the order of the 14th of February were perfectly plain : and, I do not find that the defendants did anything to mislead the plaintiffs. As far as the Court is concerned, it is true that the Master directed the further affidavit to be filed ; but it has been explained by the Registrar that that would not have been done but for the endorsement which was put on the affidavit by the Attorneys acting for the plaintiffs.

Consequently, in my judgment, for the reasons, which I have mentioned, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Richardson, J. —I agree.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, B. L., for the Appellant.

Sir B. K. Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Raghu died leaving his widow Bhulabai, the 1st defendant. The plaintiff, Laxman, says that he is the reversionary heir to Raghu and brings his suit for a declaration that defendant No. 2 was not adopted by Bhulabai to her husband Raghu, and if adopted, the adoption was invalid under Hindu Law. The trial Court placed the burden of proving the adoption on the defendants and held that defendant No. 2 was not the adopted son of Raghu and that Raghu did not authorise his wife to make the adoption after his death. A decree was passed in plaintiff's favour declaring the adoption illegal and not binding on the plaintiff.

On appeal by the defendants the District Judge, Wardha, held, following Asharfi Kunwar v. Rup Chand (1), that the burden of proving that the alleged adoption is invalid and never took place was upon the plaintiff and has, therefore, set aside the decree of the first Court and remanded the case. Hence the present appeal.

The Allahabad case quoted has been dissented from in Rajgopala Reddy v. Sadasiva Reddy (2) a case in which the Allahabad ruling was considered. What I have to decide here is whether the Allahabad or the Madras ruling should be followed. I lean towards the Madras view, for it seems to me that there is no difference between a case like the present where plaintiff can only sue for a declaration and one where the reversioner seeks to enforce his right to possession. There is no doubt that if a plaintiff is entitled to claim immediate possession and asks for it, it would lie on those setting up an adoption in defence to prove it; and in the present case I think that once the plaintiff is established to be the reversioner, it lies on the defendants to establish the adoption. In this case here both sides have adduced evidence, the question of the burden of proof is of secondary importance but the burden, to start with, should be as I have above indicated.

With these remarks I set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case to that Court for a fresh consideration and a decision on the merits. No refund certificate will issue and costs will abide the result.

In rent suits in the Revenue Courts against occupancy tenants the Courts must award rent at the rates which are fixed upon the papers unless those rates are entered erroneously by a clerical mistake; and where there is a binding order of some competent authority, such as an order by the Settlement Officer under ss. 87 and 88 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, or under ss. 13 to 16 of the Agra Tenancy Act, the Court has no discretion but must allow the rent at the rates directed. If either the landlord or the tenant has any objection to those rates he must apply to the proper authorities to have those rates altered, but a Court trying a suit for arrears of rent has no authority in the matter. Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Bulandshahr, dated the 23rd March 1922.

Messrs. Abu Ali and Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr. St. C. Thompson, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Stuart, J.—This appeal raises a question of some importance. The facts are as follows :—

The plaintiffs-appellants are, according to the statements in the plaints, residents of Bulandshahr City. They own Zemindari in the village of Bahlimpura. The defendant-respondent is an occupancy tenant in Bahlimpura holding 8 highas and 3 biswas in occupancy tenancy. The plaintiffs sued the defendant for the rent of 1327 Fasli, that is to say 1919–20, and calculated the rental on a grain basis according to which it amounted to about Rs. 160 which worked out to Rs. 20 a higha. In the plaint it was admitted that the entry in the revenue papers showed that the defendant was liable only to pay Rs. 61 as cash rent and the plaint contained the argument—plaints in Revenue Courts frequently are argumentative—that a mistake had been made and that, somehow or another, the rent had been commuted from grain rent to cash rent without the knowledge of the plaintiffs or their ancestors. The argument continued that the rent had formerly been a grain rent and that it should remain as a grain rent. The defendant replied that in the progress of a recent Settlement the Assistant Settlement Officer had commuted the rent from grain rent to a cash rent on the 29th August 1918 and that he had tendered the rent as fixed by the Assistant Settlement Officer to the zeminars who had refused to accept it. The Assistant Collector who heard the case was not satisfied with the entry in the patwari's papers which show Rs. 61 as the amount of rent fixed upon this occupancy holding at the time of the Settlement but went into the question as to how that rental had come to be fixed. He ascertained that the rental had formerly been a grain rental but that the Assistant Settlement Officer had, under the provisions of section 88, Local Act III of 1901, commuted the grain rent into a cash rent. He considered, however, that that order of the Assistant Settlement Officer was null and void because upon enquiry it was ascertained that by a mistake not of the defendant but of some clerk in the Settlement Office notice had not issued to the plaintiffs in this case that these proceedings were in progress. He accordingly decreed the higher rental against the defendant. The defendant appealed to the District Judge who took the view that the rate of rent to be allowed was the rate fixed by the Assistant Settlement Officer.

YAQUB ALI v. DHAN SINGH

We are not concerned with the decision of the point whether the plaintiffs-appellants were or were not prejudiced by the omission to give them notice of these proceedings. We consider it exceedingly unlikely that they had no knowledge of the proceedings for, on facts before us, the Settlement authorities were commuting grain rents not only in respect of this holding but in respect of many others in the village. Ordinarily, these absentees would have an agent in the village who would generally be fully conversant with the proceedings of the Settlement Department. Further, the Settlement arrived at must have been put before them for acceptance. No attempt was made by the Assistant Collector to ascertain whether they had or had not been prejudiced in reality. The view which he took was that the Assistant Settlement Officer's order was ultra vires and that he should not decree the the suit according to the recorded rates but was obliged to go back to what had occurred before those rates were recorded and put the matter right. In other words, he arrogated to himself the functions of a Court of Revision over the Assistant Settlement Officer. In our opinion the matter is very clear in a case like this. In rent suits in the Revenue Courts against occupancy tenants the Courts must award rent at the rates which are fixed upon the papers unless those rates are entered erroneously by a clerical mistake, and where there is a binding order of competent authority, such as an order by the Settlement Officer under sections 87 and 88, Local Act III of 1901 or under sections 43 to 46, Local Act II of 1901, the Court has no discretion but must allow the rent at the rates directed. If either the landlord or the tenant has any objection to those rates he must apply to the proper authorities to have those rates altered, but the Court trying a suit for arrears of rent has no authority in the matter. This is sufficient to dispose of the appeal which, in my opinion, should be dismissed with costs on the higher scale.

Mukerji, J.—I wish to add a few words, having regard to the importance of the question involved. The argument addressed by the learned Counsel for the appellants to us seemed to take it for granted that the proceedings before the Settlement Officer were in the nature of a regular suit and that, therefore, the order passed could not bind a party who was not formally before the Settlement Officer. If we peruse carefully sections 87 to 90 of the Land Revenue Act of 1901 we shall see that no such procedure as that of a suit is necessary. Section 88 of the aforesaid Act lays down that an occupancy tenant among other tenants may apply for a commutation of rent. Section 89 says that when such an application is made it would be the duty of the Settlement Officer to commute the rent. Unless he has been specially authorised to refuse any such application, he cannot refuse it. He has to proceed as directed in section 87 of the Revenue Act. That section authorises the Settlement Officer to fix rent even on his own motion. Nowhere is it laid down that a tenant making an application should name any person as the opposite party to whom notice has to be formally sent. It would be the duty of the Settlement Officer or his Assistant Officer to issue notice to the parties concerned and to hear those who, according to his idea, may be interested in the matter. In the circumstances, the order of the Settlement Officer or his Assistant unless reversed in appeal is final, although no person whatsoever may have been informed of the proceedings. I am speaking of an extreme case.

BAYA v. BHAAURAO

The result is that the judgment of the Court below is perfectly right and I agree in the order proposed by my learned brother.

By the Court :—The appeal is dismissed with costs on the higher scale.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 63 (3)—Secondary evidence—Will—Copy prepared by Sub-Registrar—Hindu Law—Will—Revocation, what amounts to—Animus revocandi, proof of.

A Will was submitted for registration, but as the Sub-Registrar had doubts as to its execution he referred the matter to the District Registrar. The latter required a copy of the Will to be submitted to him. The Sub-Registrar prepared a copy of the Will and submitted it to the Registrar. The Will was not registered and in a suit relating to the Will the copy of the Will submitted by the Sub-Registrar to the Registrar was sought to be proved as secondary evidence of the Will;

Held, that the copy was admissible under section 63 (3) of the Evidence Act.

The Will of a Hindu may be revoked by parol and where definite authority is given by him to destroy the Will with the intention of revoking it, that is in law a sufficient revocation, although the instrument is not in fact destroyed.

I C—109

Civil Appeal No. 190 of 1921 decided on the 26th April 1922.

Mr. M. R. Dixit, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Paikaji held certain fields amongst other property. He died on 25th July 1912 leaving behind a widow by name Sakhu and a daughter by name Baya. He had a separated brother Ganpat whose son was one Doma, father of the plaintiff, Bhaurao. Bhaurao's case is that Paikaji executed a Will on 16th March 1912 whereby, amongst other dispositions, he bequeathed field Survey No. 18/2 of mouza Khadak Sawanga to him subject to the life interest of Sakhu. Sakhu died sometime in December 1920. The present suit was instituted on 8th April 1921 after the plaintiff's father had unsuccessfully contested the right of Baya to have mutation of names in her own favour on the ground that he was joint with Paikaji. The defence of Baya was that Paikaji did not execute any Will and that even if it was executed it was revoked and that Paikaji did not intend to act up, or give effect, to it. The story is that the Will was presented by Paikaji for registration but the Sub-Registrar did not register it as he thought that Paikaji and his wife were executants by reason of the provision in the Will that the property was to go to the legatee after the deaths of Paikaji and his wife. But that as his wife Sakhu was against any disposition of property by Will, Paikaji, on her desire and request, revoked it, and he being ill asked his wife to get it back from the Sub-Registrar's office, and thus decided not to get it registered. The defendant also relied on the circumstances that the document remained unclaimed in the Sub-Registrar's office, and that none of the heirs and legatees cared to enforce it so long, as indicative of the intention against giving effect to it. The Court of the first instance, with a view to ascertain the facts connected with the presentation, non-registration and return of the document, called for the record from the Sub-Registrar's office and examined one Maruti Balkrishna who was in charge of the office in connection with the record which he produced. Similarly, the Additional District Judge also had to send for the correspondence that passed between the Sub-Registrar and also the District Registrar in connection with the registration, etc., of the Will. The Court of the first instance framed the following two issues which are material for the purposes of this appeal :—

BAYA v. BHAURAO

- 1 Whether the deceased Paikaji, executed any Will on 16th March 1912 and bequeathed 18½ to plaintiff?
- 2 Whether the Will was revoked as alleged by defendant?

As the original Will was not available, the same having been returned to the defendant's mother, the Court of the first instance thought that the copy which was prepared by the Sub-Registrar for the purpose of being forwarded to the District Registrar for orders, was not admissible in evidence to prove the disposition and, consequently, the finding on issue No. 1 was that Paikaji executed a Will on 16th March 1912 but that it could not be definitely found that he willed 18½ in plaintiff's favour. As regards issue No. 2 it held, on the evidence of D. Ws. 3, 4 and 5, that when the notice from the Sub-Registrar was brought to Paikaji, he would not go to appear before the Sub-Registrar to have the Will registered; and the Court inferred that after his wife's exhortation he changed his mind and did not wish to give effect to what he put in black and white, and concluded that the document dated 16th March 1912 was "a scrap of paper" and found that the Will was revoked. The suit was accordingly dismissed by the Munsif of Yeotmal, who tried it.

In appeal the matter came up before Mr. R. M. Bhagade, 2nd Additional District Judge, who in a well considered judgment has upset both the findings and decreed the claim. His conclusions may be summarized as under :—

(1) That the original Will was produced by Paikaji but by reason of his non-appearance before the Sub-Registrar for getting it registered in spite of notice it remained unregistered and unclaimed and was, therefore, returned by the Sub-Registrar under the orders of the District Registrar to Paikaji's widow Sakhu on her application after the death Paikaji.

(2) That the Sub-Registrar having entertained doubts as to whether Paikaji or his wife should be treated as executants of the Will he made reference to the District Registrar and that a copy of the Will was ordered to be submitted, before the District Registrar could pass any orders upon the reference and that the Sub-Registrar's endorsement submitting the copy, which he made in the discharge of his official duty, that is, in compliance with the District Registrar's orders, was a true copy compared with the original. That such a copy was secondary evidence under section 63, clause (3), of the Evidence Act and particularly, as the original was proved to have gone into the possession of defendant's mother, the secondary evidence was admissible. As this evidence was held admissible, he concluded that the disposition with respect of Survey No. 18½ in favour of plaintiff was capable of being proved with the help of the copy and of the oral evidence given in support of it. That the evidence of alleged revocation was insufficient to show that the Will was really revoked, and that Paikaji really did nothing to revoke the Will and that the Will was not merely a scrap of paper as held by the Munsif. Against this decision the present appeal has been preferred and two points have been urged : (1) as to the admissibility of the copy, and (2) as to the revocation of the Will.

As the judgment of the Additional District Judge was an upsetting judgment I thought it desirable to go through the evidence at the stage of arguments addressed to me. After carefully considering the evidence and the probabilities of the case I am satisfied that the decision of the Additional District Judge on both the points is not incorrect. The circumstances point to a definite intention of Paikaji to make a disposition of his property by which he thought he would not only secure enjoyment of the estate to his widow for her life, but also provide his daughter, brother's son's son, and the presiding deity of one temple. Such a disposition is not inconsistent with the notions of a Hindu. It does not disinherit the natural heirs and there is nothing unusual about it. Not only do the plaintiff's witnesses support the disposition but even the defendant's witnesses who say that they had accompanied Paikaji to the Sub-Registrar's office also corroborate the plaintiff's evidence. Paikaji did not merely stop at the stage of intention but actually translated his intention into action by having the formal instrument of the Will drawn up, signed and attested. He seems to have also thought that the lodging or depositing of the instrument with the Sub-

BAYA v. BHAURAO

Registrar would make his intention to act up to it clearer still. The Registrar, in all probability, mistook his intention and considered that his wife's presence was necessary. It is equally possible that by intending to get it registered by the Registrar he wanted to leave no room for doubt as to his intention in the matter. The original document having been returned to the defendant's mother the true copy prepared by the Sub-Registrar was admissible under section 63 (3) of the Evidence Act.

As regards the plea of revocation on the ground that the deceased Paikaji did not get the Will registered, suffice it to say that it is not always the case that registration is resorted to only in respect of documents which are made compulsorily registrable by law. Wills executed by Hindus are not compulsorily registrable instruments. We cannot, therefore, impute to Paikaji an intention to treat the instrument as inoperative in case it remained unregistered. If the Registrar had not erroneously thought that it was an instrument not by himself alone but by himself and his wife and had he either admitted it to registration or accepted a deposit of it then and there on 16th March 1912 when it was presented to him by Paikaji, there would have been no trouble in the matter. It is the improper action of the Sub-Registrar which has created all this trouble. The District Registrar's orders which he sought for his guidance simply gave him direction to proceed according to law and did not throw much light on the question. It is clear from the evidence on record that the Sub-Registrar sent out a notice to Paikaji to attend before him but he did not care to attend. Exhibit P-2 which is an extract from the minute book shows that on 1st May 1912 he issued notice to both Paikaji and his wife calling upon them both to appear before him for making statements, but neither both nor any one of them appeared till 16th July 1912, and that the registration was refused on that date. If the alleged exhortation by his wife and her aversion was the immediate cause of Paikaji's refusing to act up to the disposition, the Sub-Registrar had presented him with a very good opportunity by asking them both to attend before him to do so. The evidence of D. W. 4 that Paikaji died 15 days after notice does not appear to be correct because he died on 25th July 1912 nearly three months after the date of notice. The evidence of other witnesses Nos. 3 and 5 clearly shows that the notice was brought for service 8 days after Akshayatri which fell on 20th April 1912, which is more or less consistent with the date 1st May 1912 mentioned in Exhibit P-2. It is, therefore, more likely that the notice was served sometime in the early part of May 1912. As the evidence shows, Paikaji was not so very ill at that time as to be incapable of attending before the Sub-Registrar. According to D. W. 5 the notice was brought to his baithak and was refused by Paikaji there. According to this witness it was after the execution of the Will that there was a dispute between Paikaji and his wife and so he cancelled it. Witness adds, "Paikaji received a notice from the Registration Office. He did not go there and said that he did not give effect to it and so he would not register it." He does not speak of any altercation or exhortation by the wife on the occasion of the service of the notice as is deposed to by other witnesses. He does not also speak to his illness being an excuse for the refusal to take notice. Witness No. 1 for defendant speaks of Diwaker, D. W. 3, having been sent for to read the notice. D. W. 2 says "a postman brought a notice. It was about signing a document which was executed by Paikaji. Paikaji said he was ill and so he refused it and said that he would bring back the document he had executed. At that time his wife said, why should he execute a document when he had daughter. Paikaji kept quiet saying that she would know everything." According to this witness Paikaji when asked to sign the notice, "said that he was very ill and would not, therefore, sign and he died two months afterwards. That Paikaji's daughter was there. Paikaji said nothing at all about the nature of document or where it was." D. W. 3 says that he was called and so he went over to read the notice. Apparently he read it and knew that it was a notice about the registration of the Will which Paikaji had executed. He says "Paikaji's wife got angry and he said that he would not take notice as he did not like to register it. His wife was getting angry and he said that he would bring back document or she should do after him". He says that Baya was there when the notice was brought. According to this witness Pai-kaji refused the notice but said nothing to him (peon). According to D. W. 4 during the illness of Paikaji notice was received while the witness was there. The notice did not mention the nature of the document. Paikaji's wife is said to have "asked Paikaji about the document" and he said that "he had willed away estate." Whereupon the wife said "why should he have executed it when he had a daughter." Paikaji said "if he felt better he would bring it back or else she should bring it back after his death. The witness says "no one suggested to Paikaji that it may be written on the notice" that the document was not to be registered." This witness has put the stamp of falsehood on the story told by every one of the witnesses by saying that Paikaji died 8 or 15 days after that. On the strength of this sort of evidence no Judge could be expected to return a finding in favour of revocation of the will. I think Mr Bhagade's conclusion, that this was insufficient, is perfectly correct and sound.

It has been held in Maharajah Pertab Narain Singh v. Maharanee Subhao Koore (1) and Venkayamma v. Venkat Ramanna Yemma (2) that the Will of a Hindu may be revoked by parol, and where definite authority is given by him to destroy his Will, with the intention of revoking it, that is in law a sufficient revocation, although the instrument is not in fact destroyed. There must be very cogent evidence to prove the animus revocandi which is so very essential for the purpose of revocation. At the time when the notice was brought to Paikaji, if he had made up his mind to revoke the Will, then there was nothing to prevent Paikaji who was himself literate and who had also the Patwari (D. W. 3) by his side to help him, and a Marwadi friend (D. W. 5) to advise him, from making the obvious endorsement on the notice that the will was cancelled and he did not therefore want to have it registered. The evidence about the authorisation of his wife to take back the Will has rightly been treated as discrepant and unreliable by the lower Appellate Court. The learned Additional District Judge's finding, that, in the present case, what Paikaji seems to have done is merely to have said to his wife that he would not go to have the document registered, and that this declaration does not show that the Will was really revoked, is sufficient for the dismissal of the second appeal.

In this view of the case I hold that the claim had been rightly decreed against the defendant. The present appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

ORIGINAL CIVIL SUIT NO. 725 OF 1922.

July 16, 1923.

Present :—Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, A. J. C.TULSIDAS KESHOWDAS—PLAINTIFFS versus
HASHIM AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS.

Mortgage—Interest at rate of one per cent. per mensem, whether penal—Post diem interest when allowed—Surety, liabilities of—Liability, how far extends—Failure of creditor to sue, whether discharges surety—Preliminary decree, effect of.

Interest at the rate of one per cent. per mensem on a mortgage-security is not penal and may be allowed.

Where a mortgage-deed does not expressly provide for payment of post diem interest but its provisions, taken as a whole, without exclusive attention to any one of them stipulate that interest is to run without any limitation as to the period of its currency, post diem interest ought not to be refused. [p. 870, col. 2.]

In the absence of anything to show that his liability was otherwise limited, a surety for payment of interest is liable to pay the same until the debt is naturally satisfied and not only for the time mentioned in a deed for payment of the principal amount.

The fact that post diem interest is recoverable from a mortgagor under the terms of the mortgage-deed and not by way of damages does not necessarily make the liability of the surety to pay interest co-extensive with that of the mortgagors. [p. 870, col. 2.]

The surety must never be charged beyond the precise terms of his engagement. [p. 870, col. 2.]

The mere forbearance on the part of the plaintiff to sue does not discharge the surety of his liability. [p. 871, col. 1.]

Mr. Thakursing Lalsing, for Plaintiff.

Mr. Ghulam Hussain, for Defendants 1 to 3.

Mr. Kewalram Jethamand, for Defendants No. 4.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for recovery of Rs. 12,000 claimed as principal and Rs. 3,860 as interest due on a mortgage-bond dated the 10th of June 1918, executed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and one Ramzan, since deceased, as principal-debtors and by defendant No. 4 in his capacity as surety for the payment of only the interest due on the bond. The legal representatives of Ramzan have been impleaded as defendants No. 3.

The only defence raised on behalf of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 is that the rate of one per cent. interest per mensem claimed by the plaintiff is penal and should be relieved against.

On behalf of defendant No. 4 it has been contended that under the terms of the mortgage-deed he had guaranteed the payment of interest for one year only as the deed provides for repayment of the principal amount at the expiry of one year; that interest for that period having been paid by the mortgagors he is relieved of any further liability under the deed; that the deed does not provide for payment of interest after the period of one year and, therefore, defendant No. 4 is not liable for post diem interest which can only be allowed by way of damages; that the plaintiff had consented to allow time for payment to the mortgagors and that the plaintiff had further failed to give notice to the defendant No. 4 of the failure of the mortgagors to pay interest regularly and that he is, therefore, discharged from his liability as surety.

The points which arise for decision are as follows:—1. Is the interest claimed by the plaintiff penal, and should it be reduced?

2. Is the defendant No. 4 liable as surety for payment of interest, and, if so, for what period?

3. General.

No evidence has been called on behalf of the defendants. The plaintiff, Ex. 4, and Ghulam Hussein Ex. 6, the attesting witness to the mortgage-deed, have proved payment of consideration and the due execution of the deed by defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 and the deceased Ramzan.

The decision of the both the points in issue depends on the construction of the mortgage-deed, Ex. 3. The deed provides for re-payment of the sum of Rs. 12,000 within twelve months from the date of the deed, and contains the following covenant for payment of interest:—

“We also promise to pay interest on the said sum of Rs. 12,000 at the rate of twelve annas per cent. and such interest to commence from the date hereof, and to be paid every month till payment of the said principal sum, but should we fail to pay interest for any three months, we shall be charged interest at the rate of one per cent. per mensem.”

The covenant with regard to the liability of the defendant No. 4 is contained in one single para. which is as follows:—“That Haji Suleman Umer agrees to pay interest in case the mortgagors fail to pay the same regularly.”

It is true that the clause for payment of interest at the enhanced rate of one per cent. per mensem does not provide in clear terms that such interest is to run from the date of default. Taking the document as a whole, the intention of the parties appears to be to provide for the enhanced rate of interest from the date of default and not from the date of the loan. The plaintiff has claimed interest at the higher rate from the date of default and not from the date of the loan. Assuming, however, that the interest of one per cent. per mensem is intended to run from the date of the loan and is as such by way of penalty, the interest of one per cent. per mensem on a mortgage-security is not so high as to entitle the defendants to relief. In Ramsunder Koer v. Rai Sham Krishin (1), their Lordships of the Privy Council did not interfere with the finding of the High Court awarding the agreed enhanced rate of Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem simple interest on a mortgage bond. In Ram Bhujawan Prasad Singh v. Nathuram (2), their Lordships of the Privy Council reduced the rate of interest charged by the plaintiff to one per cent. per mensem in a suit based upon a mortgage of property of a joint Hindu family at a high rate of interest where the co-parceners had contended that there was no legal necessity for the high rate of interest charged.

The rate of one per cent. per mensem as interest does not appear to me to be unreasonable and I allow interest at that rate from the date of default.

The mortgage-deed, Ex. 3, is very badly drafted. It is contended that, in so far as the deed provides for payment of the principal sum of Rs. 12,000 within twelve months, post diem interest cannot be claimed as interest provided for under the terms of the deed but as damages for detention of money, and, therefore, there is no liability on the surety defendant No. 4 to pay the amount of such damages. In Mathuradas v. Raja Naraindas Bahadur (3), their Lordships of the Privy Council held, on the construction of a mortgage-deed which provided for payment of the principal sum and interest within a year of the date of the deed, that interest after the expiry of the year could be claimed under the deed and not merely by way of damages for breach of contract. At page 145 of the report their Lordships have remarked as follows:— "The construction of the High Court ascribes to parties an intention that, however payment may be delayed beyond the fixed day, the debt shall carry no interest, that the creditor shall have no remedy provided by contract, but shall be driven to treat the contract as broken and to seek for damages which lie in the discretion of a jury or a Court, and are subject to a different law of prescription. It appears to their Lordships that though contracts are not frequently found to be of that imperfect nature, it is more reasonable to ascribe to the parties the intention of making a perfect contract especially when such a contract is of a very common kind and suitable to the ordinary expectations of persons entering into mortgage transactions."

In Bindler Singh v. Gangaswarai Sahu (4), their Lordships of the Privy Council held that, where the provisions of a mortgage-deed, taken as a whole, without exclusive attention to any one of them stipulate that interest is to run without any limitation as to the period of its currency, post diem interest ought not to be refused. Reference may also be made to the case of Manager Vothaba Timap Shanbhog v. Vigneshwar Ganap Hodge (5), the mortgage-deed, Ex. 3, contains a proviso on the part of the mortgagor to pay interest "till payment of the said principal" and not till the expiry of one year. The deed further provides for the mortgage-amount being realized from the sale of the property and for recovery of the balance of the amount, if any, with interest thereon from the person and other property of the mortgagors. Reading the document as a whole, there is no doubt that post diem interest is recoverable from the mortgagors up to payment of the principal amount under the terms of Ex. 3 and not as damages for breach of the contract.

The fact that post diem interest is recoverable from the mortgagors under the terms of the mortgage-deed and not by way of damages, does not, however, necessarily make the liability of the surety to pay interest co-extensive with that of the mortgagors.

The surety who is a favoured debtor must never be charged beyond the precise terms of his engagement. (Halsbury Vol. 15, paras. 909 and 914). The clause in question is somewhat vague and indefinite. If oral evidence had been given to indicate the surrounding circumstances, or to show the position of the parties, I should have welcomed it. It is probable that the surety never intended to make himself liable for payment of interest after the expiry of one year from the date of the deed. No evidence, however, has been offered on his behalf, and I must interpret the clause in Ex. 3 as it is, according to the rigid rules of evidence though they may present an appearance of artificiality and even inconsistency in any particular case as pointed out by Viscount Birkenhead in Richerford v. Richardson (6). Though a surety's liability will not be unduly extended, nevertheless it comprises all transactions which naturally and reasonably are entered into on the faith of the guarantee. In King v. Greenbill (7) by an indenture dated the 13th February 1834 made between J. G. the plaintiff and the defendant J. G. mortgaged certain property to the plaintiff for securing £ 600 with a proviso for re-conveyance to J. G., if he should pay the principal and interest by the 13th February 1835, and the defendant covenanted with the plaintiffs "that the defendant and J. G. or one of them would during the continuance of their mortgage-security pay the plaintiff the interest to become due in respect, of the loan by two even half yearly instalments on the 13th of August and the 13th of February. It was held that the defendants liability continued till the principal sum was paid and was not limited to the 13th of February 1835. At p. 335 Tindal, C. J., has stated as follows :—"For the defendant, it is contended that his liability is limited to these two half yearly payments, while the plaintiff contends that the defendant's liability for the interest is kept on foot until the debt is naturally satisfied and that the mortgage-security continues all that time, and certainly that seems to be much more reasonable construction. Is it likely that a party who looked for security from his defendant would be satisfied with so bad a contract as now suggested? The recital does not allude to the defendant's consenting to be a security up to a particular time and no longer." The present case is more or less similar to that of King v. Greenbill. I have given due consideration to the words "if the mortgagor fails to pay the same regularly", but I do not attach any greater importance to the word "regularly" than to imply that to mean "as it becomes due".

There is no evidence that the plaintiff consented to allow time to the mortgagors to pay the amount. The mere forbearance on the part of the plaintiff to sue will not discharge the defendant No. 4: Cf. section 137 of the Indian Contract Act. No authorities have been cited at the bar to show that there was any obligation on the plaintiff to give notice to the defendant No 4 of the failure of the mortgagors to pay the money or interest due thereon. Defendant No. 4 is not discharged from his liability by such failure.

I am of opinion that the liability of the defendant no. 4 is not limited to the period of one year only. The plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount of interest on the principal sum up to six months from the date of the preliminary decree, when the principal sum is payable by the defendants 1 to 3. The preliminary decree operates as a merger with regard to the liability to pay future interest and releases the surety from his liability under the deed. Feber v. Earl of Lathora, Gye, third party (8). In clause 3 of paragraph 6 of the plaint, the plaintiff has not claimed interest on the deficiency of the sale proceeds. Ex. 3 expressly provides such for deficiency and interest being recovered from the mortgagors, and the clause as to payment of interest by surety can not be extended to interest due on such deficiency.

My findings, therefore, are on issue No. 1 that the plaintiff is entitled to the rate of one per cent. per mensem from the date of default as against the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and that the amount claimed by him as interest up to date of suit is properly calculated. On issue No 2 that the defendant is liable to pay interest accruing due up to the date fixed by the preliminary decree for payment of the principal amount.

With regard to costs, I am of opinion that, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, I should allow to the plaintiff only the institution fee paid on the plaint and no further costs. The plaintiff delayed instituting the suit for a considerable time, and though the plaint was filed on 1st August 1922, the suit did not come on for hearing till July 1923 owing to the dilatoriness of the plaintiff, the plaintiff having thereby gained advantage of getting interest at one per cent. per mensem by such delay.

My finding on issue No. 3, therefore, is that the plaintiff is entitled to the usual preliminary mortgage decree for Rs. 15,860 costs of the suit limited to the institution and interest at the rate of one per cent. per mensem from the date of the suit to the date of the final decree as against defendants No. 1 to 3 and thereafter at 6 per cent. per annum, and to a decree for Rs. 3,860 and further interest on Rs. 12,000 at the rate of one per cent. per mensem from the date of suit to the date fixed by the prelininary decree for payment of the principal amount, the said amount to be recoverable from defendant No. 4. Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1897), Soh. II, Art. 11—Question of title—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court—Berar Land Revenue Act, s. 220 —Suit for declaration of grazing rights, whether cog-nizable by Civil Court.

A Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to determine questions of title, and a pronouncement made by a Small Cause Court on a question of title cannot affect the entries in the Revenue Records.

A correction of the Record of Rights means an actual alteration of the entries therein.

A suit for a declaration that certain land is reserved for grazing village cattle and that the malgusar has no right to let it out does not fall under any of the heads of s. 220 of the Berar Land Revenue Act, and is, therefore, cognizable by a Civil Court.

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, in Civil Appeal No. 112 of 1921, decided on the 24th December 1921.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, who are tenants in the village of Bor, sued for a declaration that fields Nos. 8 and 60 of that village are reserved for grazing the village cattle and that the defendant No. 3, who is a Malgusar had no right to let them to defendants 1 and 2. The Munsif of Sohagpur held that the field No. 8 could not be let out in contravention of the custom embodied in the wajib-ul-ars and that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have no claim to it. They did not claim field No. 60.

On appeal the District Judge of Hoshangabad held that the Record of Rights shows that field No. 8, was set aside for grazing purposes; that there had been no correction of the entry, and that the decision of the first Court was correct, and he consequently dismissed the appeal.

Defendants 1 and 2 make this second appeal.

The principal contention put forward is that the entry in the wajib-ul-ars is superseded by the orders of the Revenue Officers, actual correction not being necessary, and that the suit is not cognizable by a Civil Court under the provisions of section 220 of the Land Revenue Act. It is also pleaded that the suit is barred by limitation.

It is undisputed that the land is recorded in the wajib-ul-ars as grazing land, not to be brought under cultivation. It appears that an application was made by the residents of the village to the Revenue authorities against the letting of the land to the present defendants, but the Revenue Officers said they could do nothing as the land had been declared by the Munsif of Sohagpur, sitting as a Judge in a Small Cause suit, to be held under ordinary tenancy. The application was accordingly rejected and no correction was made in village records.

The land was entered as grazing land in the last Settlement under sections 78 and 79 of the Land Revenue Act and no suit was brought under section 80 of the Act to have the entry altered. The land is not shown in the defendants' patta; the village records show the land to be grazing land and no correction in the Record of Rights has been made under section 46 of the Land Revenue Act. The Small

BANS LOCHAN RAI v. JAGANNATH LAL

Cause Court had no jurisdiction to determine the question of title and the view of the Revenue authorities appears to be founded on a misconception. In any case, no action has been taken by them to make the correction, nor could any such correction be made on a pronouncement by a Small Cause Court.

Applications were put in by the plaintiffs under section 219 of the Land Revenue Act to eject the defendants, but no action has been taken. The only ground for holding the entry in the Record of Rights to be incorrect is apparently a decision by a Court having no jurisdiction. No question of limitation arises because the only order passed by the Revenue authorities was one declining to interfere. As to the argument regarding jurisdiction, the present case does not fall under any of the heads under section 220 of the Land Revenue Act, since the plaintiffs do not ask for any correction of the Record of Rights or for any ruling in respect of any of the matters referred to in that section. There has, therefore, been no correction of the Record of Rights, and the land which has been expressly declared to be common land, cannot be let out to defendants. Correction of the Record of Rights must mean an actual alteration of the entries therein.

The view of the lower Courts is, therefore, correct. The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

ANTS—RESPONDENTS.Hindu Law—Widow, alienations by—Reversioner, whether bound to challenge all alienations in one suit.

There is no law which compels a reversioner of a deceased Hindu to bring one common suit to challenge all alienations made by the widow of the deceased, where such alienations are in respect of different rights and in favour of different parties. He can, if he so chooses, get one of several transfers made by the widow set aside, leaving the others unchallenged.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Ghazipur, dated the 17th February 1922.

Mr. Ambika Prasad, for the Appellant.Messrs. Haribans Sahai and S. N. Verma, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for declaration and recovery of possession of certain plots of land.

Musammam Soukali, a Hindu widow in possession, executed a permanent lease on the 28th of April 1902 of four sir plots in favour of Musammam Bhola Kunwar. There was another person who also joined in the deed, but as he did not actually become the heir of the estate it is immaterial to consider this circumstance. In 1913 Musammam Soukali executed a sale-deed of her rights in the same plots in favour of Bhawani Din. In 1916 Bhawani Din transferred his rights to Ram Naresh and others. On the 23rd May 1920 the widow died.

The present plaintiffs, who are the reversioners to the estate, instituted this suit alleging that the lease in question was a fictitious document and, in the alternative, that it was not binding on them as subsequent heirs after the death of the widow. They also sought a decree for possession in case they were found to be out of possession.

There was some question raised in the Court below as to whether the whole estate had been transferred by Musammam Soukali in 1913 or not. It was suggested on behalf of the plaintiffs that a small fractional share was left out. This point has been decided against the plaintiff by the learned District Judge, and they have not sought to challenge it before me. It may, therefore, be taken for granted that in 1902 Musammam Soukali executed a permanent lease of the four plots in question and then, some eleven years afterwards, she purported to transfer whatever she had left in those plots, along with other properties, to Bhawani Din.

The learned District Judge had dismissed the suit on the technical ground that, so long as the plaintiff had not got the subsequent sale-deed of 1913 set aside they had no locus standi to bring this suit in respect of the previous lease. This was the view which also had found favour with the Court of first instance.

I am quite unable to agree in this view. There are two points which have been entirely overlooked by both the Courts below. The first is, that the plaintiff had a separate cause of action with respect to these two separate deeds which were in favour of different sets of persons. There is no law which compels a reversioner to bring one common suit to challenge all alienations made by a Hindu widow even though such alienations are in respect of different rights and in favour of different parties. Twelve years have not yet expired since the death of the widow and it cannot even be suggested that the reversioner's right to have the subsequent sale-deed set aside has in any way been extinguished. As a matter of fact, on behalf of the appellant a certified copy of the judgment was tendered before me as showing that, on a subsequent date, a suit for cancellation of the subsequent sale-deed was actually decreed. I have not admitted this copy because, for the purposes of this appeal, the point is immaterial.

The second ground is, that it is open to the reversioners to get only one of several transfers made by a Hindu widow set aside leaving aside the several transfers if they so choose to act. So far as the defendants, who are the representatives of the permanent lessee, are concerned, if it is established that the transfer in their favour was without legal necessity and was not binding on the reversioners they would have to give up possession of the lands. The position of the reversioners would then be that they would obtain possession of these lands and hold them at least as against the defendants. If they succeed to get the subsequent sale-deed set aside they would then become absolute owners. If, however, they fail to do that or omit to institute a suit, then at best their liability would only be to pay the rent reserved in the permanent lease to Bhawani Din or his representatives.

I cannot see how the suit can be thrown out on the technical ground that the plaintiffs did not, before instituting the present suit, institute another suit for setting aside a transfer which had taken place eleven years afterwards and which was in favour of persons who are no parties to the suit. In my opinion the ground on which the suit has been dismissed was wholly unjustified. No other question has been decided by the learned District Judge. The finding of the Court of first instance as regards the rights of defendant No. 8 have in no way been challenged.

I accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case for disposal according to law.

It has been brought to my notice that Raja Ram, respondent No. 5, was not properly served and no further steps were taken as against him. It has also been pointed out that Tilakdhar, respondent No. 6, is dead and no attempt has been made to bring his legal representatives on the record. If any of these persons did not form members of a Hindu joint family of which the surviving members are already on the record, it is quite clear that, so far as the interest of that person in the lease is concerned, it will remain absolutely unaffected by the present decree. The decree of the Court below shall stand as regards their interests.

Costs of the appeal will be costs in the cause and will abide the result.

Calcutta Rent Act (III of 1920) s. 15—Standardisation of rent, application for—Applicant ceasing to be tenant, effect of—Abatement—New tenant, whether necessary party—Procedure

BELLOW v. ELKE

There is nothing in the Calcutta Rent Act which indicates that a proceeding regularly started under the Act comes to a determination as soon as the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties has ceased.

The Calcutta Rent Act does not make it obligatory upon an applicant for standardisation of rent to make all persons interested in the litigation parties to the proceeding, except the landlord.

Where an applicant for standardisation of rent ceases to be the tenant before the proceeding is terminated and the premises are let to a new tenant the latter, if he so chooses, may make an application to the Rent Collector to be heard at the time of the hearing of the case.

Babu Bepin Chandra Mallik, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—In this Rule we are asked to revise the order of the Rent Controller dated the 6th July 1923 in Standard Rent Case No. 673 of 1922 dismissing the application of the petitioner under section 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act, III of 1920. The facts are that the petitioner was a tenant under the opposite party in respect of premises No. 24, Royd Street, for 6 months from the 6th August 1922. On the 31st October 1922 the petitioner applied to the Rent Controller to have the standard rent fixed. The case was adjourned from time to time and it took eight months to come to a hearing. On the 30th June 1923 the petitioner was evicted under a decree of the Calcutta Small Cause Court. That decree was passed on the 14th May 1923 on the ground that the tenant had not paid rent and was an insolvent. On the 6th July 1923 the petitioner's application under the Rent Act was dismissed. The ground upon which the application has been dismissed is that the petitioner having ceased to be a tenant in respect of the premises for which he had applied for standardisation of the rent, the case could not go on. No authority has been cited for this view, but the learned Rent Controller has felt himself bound by a certain ruling of the President of the Improvement Trust Tribunal who under the Act has been vested with revisional authority over the Rent Controller.

Under the Act a tenant is empowered to apply to the Rent Controller to have the standard rent of a premises fixed. It is conceded by the learned Vakil for the opposite party that there is nothing in the Act which indicates that the proceedings under it come to a determination as soon as the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties has ceased. But it is argued that, in consideration of the general scheme of the Act, it must be so. I am unable to accede to this proposition. I find on a close scrutiny of the Act nothing in it to justify the dropping of a proceeding which has been started regularly under the Act because one of the parties was not at the date of the hearing occupying the position which he did at the commencement of the case. In my opinion, when a case has been regularly started, there must be some direct provision in law to disqualify it from being carried to the end. Reference has been made to certain provisions of the Act. Section 8 has been referred to as indicating that when there is an enhancement of rent on the application of the landlord he cannot recover it until after the expiration of one month after the landlord served on the tenant a notice in writing of his intention to increase the rent. I do not think that this provision lends support to the contention of the landlord. Then reliance has been placed upon section 14 which provides that when a tenant has over-paid the landlord and the rent is subsequently reduced he may recover the amount from the landlord and may deduct it from any rent payable within six months. It is contended that this indicates that the relationship of landlord and tenant must continue even after the Rent Controller has fixed the rent. It may be so, but that section provides that this is one of the modes of recovering monies paid to the landlord more than what was due to him, as it is especially mentioned that this remedy is without prejudice to any other method of recovery. A person who has ceased to be a tenant has under the general law a right to recover any over-payment made to the landlord.

In support of my view reference may be made to section 15, clause (4), which says that before exercising any of the powers conferred upon him by this Act the Controller shall give notice of his intention to the landlord and tenant if any." The words "if any" indicate that it is possible that when the time comes for the Rent Controller to give notice of his intention under the Act one of the parties may have ceased to be either a landlord or a tenant.

It is also argued on behalf of the opposite party that the application before the Rent Controller was not maintainable inasmuch as the new tenant who was brought on the premises after the petitioner had left it ought to have been made a party because any decision in this case will be binding upon him. I do not see much force in this contention. The Act does not make it obligatory upon the applicant for standardisation of rent to make all persons interested in the litigation parties to the proceeding except the landlord; and this view finds support from section 15, clause (4), of the Act which provides that the Rent Controller shall duly consider any application received by him from any person interested. The new tenant, if he so chooses, may make an application to the Rent Controller to be heard at the time of the hearing of this case. I may also refer, in this connection, to the provisions of O. I, r. 9, Civil Procedure Code which provides against this dismissal of a case for want of proper parties.

I may add that a copy of this Rule was also served on the Rent Controller and he has submitted his observations. He seems to be now of opinion that he was not right in dismissing the case. He has, however, followed a decision of the President of the Tribunal which he considers to be binding upon him. He has asked us to express an opinion as to how far he is bound by the ruling of the President. In this case it is not necessary for us to decide that question.

In the result this Rule should, in my opinion, be made absolute, the order of the Rent Controller dated the 6th July 1923, set aside and the case sent back to him for a re-hearing according to law. Costs will abide the result. I assess the hearing fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

Page, J.—I am of the same opinion. On the 30th October 1922, the petitioner applied to the Rent Controller that the rent of the premises of which he was then a tenant might be standardised under section 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act. On the 19th June 1923 the hearing of the application was adjourned until the 6th July 1923. Meanwhile, on the 14th May, a decree was passed by the Court of Small Causes ejecting the petitioner from the premises and on the 30th June he vacated the premises. When the case was called for hearing on the 6th July 1923 the Rent Controller dismissed the application on the ground that the applicant was no longer tenant of the premises. The question which we have to determine is, whether or not he had jurisdiction to make that order. The determination of this issue does not appear to me to present any real difficulty. It is true that an application for standardisation of rent under section 15, must needs be made by a landlord or by a tenant of the premises in question. In this case the application was made by the tenant. There is nothing in the Act which provides that the application shall become inoperative, although properly made in the first instance, because subsequent to the making of the application but before the rent was standardised, a change of tenant has taken place. In this case it would not appear upon the evidence as placed before us, that the petitioner had any right to recover the difference between the rent which he had paid and the standard rent which under the application might be assessed because the last payment of rent which was made by the petitioner was in February 1923, in respect of the period ending with the 31st January 1923, and under section 14, sub-section (1), of the Act it is provided that "where any sum has after the commencement of the Act been paid on account of rent being a sum which is by reason of the provisions of this Act irrecoverable, such sum shall at any time within a period of six months from the date of payment be recovered by the tenant by whom it was paid from the landlord receiving the payment." But we are invited to decide this issue irrespective of the rights which accrued or may accrue under the Rent Act to the petitioner. In my opinion, under circumstances, such as those in this case, the Controller is under an obligation to grant a certificate certifying the standard rent; and for this reason that, if in such circumstances the Rent Controller does not proceed to certify the rent and neither the landlord nor the subsequent tenant applies for standardisation under section 15, no standard rent will be fixed, and a tenant who might have applied, while still a tenant, for a certificate of standardisation because he was desirous of recovering rent over-paid which was irrecoverable under the Act, would be deprived of an opportunity of making a claim to recover that rent over-paid because no standard rent in fact was fixed. On the other hand, it is urged on behalf of the opposite party that, if a person who at the time when he made the application for standardisation was a tenant, but who before the certificate was issued by the Controller had ceased to be a tenant, was entitled after he had ceased to be a tenant to call upon the Rent Controller to fix the rent, the result might be that the tenant of the premises at the time when the rent was standardised would have no voice or opportunity of placing before the tribunal facts he thought material for the purpose of standardisation of the rent. In my opinion, there is no substance in this contention because, under section 15, sub-section (4), of the Act, the Rent Controller "before exercising any of the powers conferred on him by this Act shall give notice of his intention to the landlord and tenant, if any, and shall duly consider any application received by him from any person interested within such period as shall be specified in the notice." It would be open on this application from the present tenant, if he elected so to do to apply to the Rent Controller to be heard on the question as to what was the right sum to be fixed for the standard rent. In those circumstances, it seems to me that if the contention of the opposite party was held to be valid, injustice might result to persons who were tenants at the time when they made the application for standardisation of rent, whereas, if the Rent Controller, in such circumstances as those prevailing in this case, were to continue the proceedings and to certify standard rent no hardship, so far as I can see, would result to any body. In these circumstances, in my opinion, this Rule should be made absolute in the sense in which my learned brother has stated.

KANHAIYA LAL v. AZMATUNNISA

Messrs. Iqbal Ahmad and Mamjal Prasad Bhargava, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Raza Ali, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT. — The question for consideration in this appeal is, whether a party who has filed an appeal from one part of the decree can file a cross-objection in regard to another part of the decree in connection with the cross-appeal filed by the other party. The lower Appellate Court has found that he cannot do so. It has relied in support of that view on the decision in Ramji Das v. Ajudha Prasad (1). In that case the cross-objection was filed after the appeal was dismissed and the subject-matter of the appeal and the cross-objection was the same. That was clearly a case in which the decision of the appeal operated as a bar to the entertainment of the cross-objection. The same matter can not obviously be agitated both in an appeal and in a cross-objection. O. XLII, r. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that any respondent can not only support the decree on any of the grounds decided against him in the Court below but can take any cross-objection to the decree, which he could have taken by way of appeal, provided he has filed such objection within a certain period therein mentioned, although he may not have appealed from that part of the decree, which the cross objection is intended to cover. There is nothing in that provision to prevent a party from filing an appeal from one part of the decree and contenting himself with filing a cross-objection about another part of the decree in a cross-appeal filed by the other side before the former appeal has been decided. The appeal and the cross-appeal in the present case came up for hearing along with the cross-objection on the same date. In fact, they were heard together and disposed of by the same judgment. The lower Appellate Court was not justified in refusing to entertain the cross-objection because the appeal had not till then been heard and the appeal and the cross-objection related to different matters.
